corporation, n. (15c) An entity (usu. a business) having authority under law to act as a single person distinct from the shareholders who own it and having rights to issue stock and exist indefinitely; a group or succession of persons established in accordance with legal rules into a legal or juristic person that has a legal personality distinct from the natural persons who make it up, exists indefinitely apart from them, and has the legal powers that its constitution gives it. — Also termed corporation aggregate; aggregate corporation; body corporate; corporate body. See COMPANY. [Cases: Corporations C-1.] — incorporate, v. — corporate, adj.

"A corporation is an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law. ... It possesses only those properties which the charter of its creation confers upon it." Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U.S. (4 Wheat.) 518, 636 (1819) (Marshall, J.). acquired corporation. The corporation that no longer exists after a merger or acquisition. [Cases: Corporations C-586.]

admitted corporation. A corporation licensed or authorized to do business within a particular state. — Also termed qualified corporation; corporation qualified to do business.

aggressor corporation. A corporation that attempts to obtain control of a publicly held corporation by (1) a direct cash tender, (2) a public exchange offer to shareholders, or (3) a merger, which requires the agreement of the target's management.

alien corporation. See foreign corporation.

brother-sister corporation. See sister corporation.

C corporation. A corporation whose income is taxed through it rather than through its shareholders. • Any corporation not electing S-corporation tax status under the Internal Revenue Code is a C corporation by default. — Also termed subchapter-C corporation. Cf. S corporation.

charitable corporation. (17c) A nonprofit corporation that is dedicated to benevolent purposes and thus entitled to special tax status under the Internal Revenue Code. — Also termed eleemosynary corporation. See CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION. [Cases: Internal Revenue C-4045–4069.]

clearing corporation. A corporation whose capital stock is held by or for a national security exchange or association registered under federal law such as the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

close corporation. (1840) A corporation whose stock is not freely traded and is held by only a few shareholders (often within the same family). • The requirements and privileges of close corporations vary by jurisdiction. — Also termed closely held corporation; closed corporation; (when family owned) family corporation. [Cases: Corporations C-3.]

collapsible corporation. (1955) A corporation formed to give a short-term venture the appearance of a long-term investment in order to portray income as capital gain, rather than profit. • The corporation is typically formed for the sole purpose of purchasing property. The corporation is usu. dissolved before the property has generated substantial income. The Internal Revenue Service treats the income earned through a collapsible corporation as ordinary income rather than as capital gain. IRC (26 USCA) § 341(a). Cf. collapsible partnership under PARTNERSHIP. [Cases: Internal Revenue C-3728.] common-law corporation. See corporation by prescription.

conglomerate corporation. See conglomerate.

controlled corporation. 1. A corporation in which the majority of the stock is held by one individual or firm. [Cases: Internal Revenue C-3643.] 2. A corporation in which a substantial amount (but less than a majority) of the stock is held by one individual or firm. • Some states presume control with as little as 10%. [Cases: Corporations C-1.4, 1.5.]

controlled foreign corporation. Tax. A foreign corporation in which more than 50% of the stock is owned by U.S. citizens who each own 10% or more of the voting stock. • These shareholders (known as U.S. shareholders) are required to report their pro rata share of certain passive income of the corporation. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 951–964. — Abbr. CFC. [Cases: Internal Revenue C-4119.]

cooperative corporation. An entity that has a corporate existence, but is primarily organized for the purpose of providing services and profits to its members and not for corporate profit. • The most common kind of cooperative corporation is formed to purchase real property, such as an apartment building, so that its shareholders may lease the apartments. See COOPERATIVE (1). [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C-350, 352.]

corporation aggregate. 1. See CORPORATION. 2. Hist. A corporation made up of a number of individuals. Cf. corporation sole.

"The first division of corporations is into aggregate and sole. Corporations aggregate consist of many persons united together into one society, and are kept up by a perpetual succession of members, so as to continue forever of which kind are the mayor and commonalty of a city, the head and fellows of a college, the dean and chapter of a cathedral church." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 457 (1765).

"The corporation aggregate is the typical corporation, which, at any given time, normally contains a number of individuals as members. This number may be great or small, varying from the hundreds of thousands of corporation by estoppel. A business that is deemed, by operation of law, to be a corporation because a third party dealt with the business as if it were a corporation, thus preventing the third party from holding a shareholder or officer of the corporation individually liable. See ESTOPPEL. [Cases: Corporations C−34.]

corporation by prescription. A corporation that, though lacking a charter, has acquired its corporate status through a long period of operating as a corporation. • Such an entity may engage in any enterprises that are not manifestly inconsistent with the purposes for which it is assumed to have been created. — Also termed common-law corporation. [Cases: Corporations C−27.]
corporation de facto. See de facto corporation. corporation de jure. See de jure corporation. corporation for profit. See for-profit corporation. corporation qualified to do business. See admitted corporation.
corporation sole. A series of successive persons holding an office: a continuous legal personality that is attributed to successive holders of certain monopolical or ecclesiastical positions, such as kings, bishops, rectors, vicars, and the like. • This continuous personality is viewed, by legal fiction, as having the qualities of a corporation. Cf. corporation aggregate (2).

"It would have been quite possible to explain in the same way the devolution of the lands of the Crown, or of a bishopric, or of a rectory, from the sovereign, bishop, or rector, to his successor; but English law has preferred to introduce for this purpose the fiction, peculiar to itself, of a 'corporation sole.'" Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 350-51 (13th ed. 1924).

'But English Law knows another kind of corporation, the 'corporation sole,' in which the group consists, not of a number of contemporary members, but of a succession of single members, of whom only one exists at any given time. This kind of corporation has been described by eminent legal writers as a 'freak'; but it is a freak which undoubtedly has a legal existence. It has been said that the Crown is the only common law corporation sole: though the Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, has been claimed as another example, and statutory examples, such as the Public Trustee and the Treasury Solicitor, are conspicuous. But the examples of ecclesiastical corporations sole are numerous. Every diocesan bishop, every rector of a parish, is a corporation sole, and can acquire and hold land (and now also personal property) even during the vacancy of the see or living, for the benefit of his successors, and can bind his successors by his lawful conveyances and contracts. But, obviously, the distinction between the bishop or rector, in his personal and in his corporate character, is even harder to grasp than that between the members of a corporation aggregate and the corporation itself . . . ." Edward Jenks, The Book of English Law 118-19 (P.B. Faires' ed., 6th ed. 1967).

dead corporation. See dissolved corporation.

de facto corporation (di fak-toh). An incompletely formed corporation whose existence operates as a defense to personal liability of the directors, officers, and shareholders who in good faith thought they were operating the business as a duly formed corporation. — Also termed corporation de facto. [Cases: Corporations C−28.]
de jure corporation (di juur-ee). A corporation formed in accordance with all applicable laws and recognized as a corporation for liability purposes. — Also termed corporation de jure. [Cases: Corporations C−3.] dissolved corporation. A corporation whose charter has expired or been revoked, relinquished, or voluntarily terminated. — Also termed dead corporation. [Cases: Corporations C−617−619.]
domestic corporation. (1819) 1. A corporation that is organized and chartered under the laws of a state. • The corporation is considered domestic by the chartering state. Cf. foreign corporation. 2. Tax. A corporation created or organized in the United States or under federal or state law. IRC (26 USC A § 7701(a) (4). [Cases: Internal Revenue C−3623; Taxation C−3485.]
dormant corporation. 1. An inactive corporation; a legal corporation that is presently not operating. 2. A corporation whose authority to do business has been revoked or suspended either by operation of law (as by failure to pay franchise taxes) or by an act of the government official responsible for the corporation's authority.
dummy corporation. (1899) A corporation whose only function is to hide the principal's identity and to protect the principal from liability.
ecclesiastical corporation (i-klee-see-as-to-kal). English law. A corporation that is organized for spiritual purposes or for the administration of property held for religious uses. — Also termed religious corporation. Cf. lay corporation.

'Ecclesiastical corporations. Corporations created for the furtherance of religion . . . . They are of two kinds: (1) corporations sole, i.e., bishops, certain deans, parsons and vicars; and (2) corporations aggregate, i.e., deans and chapters, and formerly prior and convent, abbots and monks, and the like. Such corporations are called religious corporations; or 'religious societies,' in the United States." 1 Stewart Rapalje & Robert L. Lawrence, A Dictionary of American and English Law 432 (1883).
eleemosynary corporation. See charitable corporation.

foreign corporation. (18c) A corporation that was organized and chartered under the laws of another state, government, or country <in Arizona, a California corporation is said to be a foreign corporation>. — Also termed alien corporation. Cf. domestic corporation. [Cases: Corporations C−632.]

"Foreign' is defined as 'not native or domestic.' This is the meaning given to the word in the various judicial definitions of foreign corporations. With respect to a particular state or country, a corporation created by or under the laws of that state or country is a 'domestic corporation,' and any corporation that owes its existence to the laws of another state, government or country is a 'foreign corporation.' The difference between a domestic and a foreign corporation of the same kind is one of status, determined by considerations that are external to the corporation and not internal or organic. Moreover, foreign corporations of all classes fall equally within the definition. In many jurisdictions foreign corporations are defined by statute, and the statutory definitions do not differ in substance from that stated above." 17 Fletcher Cyclopedia on the Law of Private Corporations § 8250, at 6–7 (1998).

for-profit corporation. A corporation organized for the purpose of making a profit; a business corporation. — Also termed corporation for profit; moneyped corporation.

nonstock corporation. A corporation that does not issue shares of stock as evidence of ownership but instead is owned by its members in accordance with a charter or agreement. • Examples are mutual insurance companies, charitable organizations, and private clubs. [Cases: Corporations ⊃ 64.]

not-for-profit corporation. See nonprofit corporation.

parent corporation. (1893) A corporation that has a controlling interest in another corporation (called a subsidiary corporation), usu. through ownership of more than one-half the voting stock. — Often shortened to parent. — Also termed parent company.

political corporation. See public corporation (2).

private corporation. (17c) A corporation founded by and composed of private individuals principally for a nonprofit purpose, such as manufacturing, banking, and railroad corporations (including charitable and religious corporations). — Also termed quasi-individual. [Cases: Corporations ⊃ 3.]

professional corporation. (1958) A corporation providing services of a type requiring a professional license. • A professional corporation may be made up of architects, accountants, lawyers, physicians, veterinarians, or the like. — Abbr. P.C.

public corporation. (17c) 1. A corporation whose shares are traded to and among the general public. — Also termed publicly held corporation. [Cases: Corporations ⊃ 3. 2. A corporation that is created by the state as an agency in the administration of civil government. — Also termed political corporation. 3. A government-owned corporation that engages in activities that benefit the general public, usu. while remaining financially independent. • Such a corporation is managed by a publicly appointed board. — Also termed (in sense 3) government corporation; public-benefit corporation. [Cases: States ⊃ 84.]

public-service corporation. (1894) A corporation whose operations serve a need of the general public, such as public transportation, communications, gas, water, or electricity. • This type of corporation is usu. subject to extensive governmental regulation. [Cases: Public Utilities ⊃ 103.]

qualified corporation. See admitted corporation.

quasi-corporation. An entity that exercises some of the functions of a corporation but that has not been granted corporate status by statute; esp., a public corporation with limited authority and powers (such as a county or school district). — Also sometimes termed quasi-municipal corporation. Cf. municipal corporation. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ⊃ 2.]

quasi-public corporation. A for-profit corporation providing an essential public service. • An example is an electric company or other utility.

railroad corporation. A corporation organized to construct, maintain, and operate railroads. — Also termed railroad company. [Cases: Railroads ⊃ 13.]

“A railroad company or corporation is usually regarded as a private corporation, and justly so, as contrasted with a strictly public corporation, such as a city, county, township, or the like governmental subdivision, but it is not a private corporation in the strict sense that an ordinary business corporation is, for it is charged with duties of a public nature that distinguish it from a purely and strictly private
on the Law of Railroads § 3, at 7 (3d ed. 1921).

registered corporation. (1928) A publicly held corporation, a security of which is registered under § 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. • The corporation is subject to the Act’s periodic disclosure requirements and proxy regulations. 15 USCA § 78l.

religious corporation. A corporation created to carry out some ecclesiastical or religious purpose. See ecclesiastical corporation. [Cases: Religious Societies 4.]

S corporation. (1961) A corporation whose income is taxed through its shareholders rather than through the corporation itself. • Only corporations with a limited number of shareholders can elect S-corporation tax status under Subchapter S of the Internal Revenue Code. — Also termed subchapter-S corporation; tax-option corporation. Cf. C corporation. [Cases: Internal Revenue 3885-3903.]

shelf corporation. See shelf company under company.

shell corporation. (1969) A corporation that has no active business and usu. exists only in name as a vehicle for another company’s business operations.

in 1993.42 USCA § 12651.

corporator (kor-po-ray-tor). (18c) 1. A member of a corporation. 2. INCORPORATOR.

“Usually, a member of a corporation, in which sense it includes a stockholder, also, one of the persons who are the original organizers or promoters of a new corporation.
The corporators are not the corporation, for either may sue the other.” William C. Anderson, A Dictionary of Law

corporeal (kor-por-ee-al), adj. (15c) Having a physical, material existence; TANGIBLE <land and fixtures are corporeal property>. Cf. INCORPORAL. • corporecorps diplomatique (kor-dee-pla-ma-tek). DIPLOMATIC CORPS.

corpus (kor-pas), n. [Latin "body"] 1. The property for which a trustee is responsible; the trust principal. — Also termed res; trust estate; trust fund; trust property; trust res; trust. [Cases: Trusts ☞ 1.] 2. PRINCIPAL (4). PL. CORPORA (kor-pa-ra), CORPUSSES (kor-pa-saz).
corpus comitatus (kor-pas kom-a-tay-tos). [Latin "the body of a county"] Hist. The area within a territorial jurisdiction rather than on the "high seas" and hence where admiralty jurisdiction did not originally extend. See infra CORPUS COMITATUS.
corpus cum causa (kor-pas kam kaw-za). [Law Latin "the body with the cause"] Hist. A writ issuing out of Chancery to remove both a person and a record from an inferior court in order to review a judgment issued by the inferior court.
   "The first use of the writ to challenge imprisonment was in cases of privilege; an officer of a central court, or a litigant there, could be released from imprisonment in another court by writ of privilege in habeas corpus form. The Court of Chancery at the same time developed a similar procedure for reviewing the cause of imprisonment in an inferior tribunal; this species of writ was called corpus cum causa, and it became a common remedy against the misuse of borough jurisdiction in the fifteenth century." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 168 (3d ed. 1990).
corpus delicti (kor-pas da-lik-tee-or-tee). [Latin "body of the crime"] (1818) 1. The fact of a transgression; ACTUS REUS. [Cases: Criminal Law ☞ 412(6), 517.3.
   (a) The prosecution must establish the corpus delicti. It concerns the usability of the common misunderstanding, a victim's body could be evidence of a homicide but the prosecutor does not have to locate or present the body to meet the corpus delicti requirement.
   (b) The doctrine that prohibits a prosecutor from proving the corpus delicti based solely on a defendant's extrajudicial statements. • The prosecution must establish the corpus delicti with corroborating evidence to secure a conviction. [Cases: Criminal Law ☞ 412(6), 517.3.]
corpus juris (kor-pas joor-is). [Latin "body of law"] (1832) The law as the sum or collection of laws <Corpus Juris Secundum>. — Abb. C.J. corpus juris Angliae (kor-pas joor-is ang-gl-ee-ee). The entire body of English law, comprising the common law, statutory law, equity, and special law in its various forms.
   • The Corpus Juris Canonici emerged during the 12th century, beginning with the publication of Gratian's Decretum (c. 1140). In addition to the Decretum, it includes Raymond of Peñafort's Liber Extra (1234), the Liber Sextus of Pope Boniface VIII (1298), the Clementines of Pope Clement V (1313), the Extravagantes Joannis of Pope John XXII (1325), and Extravagantes Communes published by Pope John's successors (1499-1502). In 1582, the entire collection was edited by a commission of church dignitaries and officially named the Corpus Juris Canonici. It remained the Catholic Church's primary body of law until the promulgation of the Code of Canon Law in 1917, now replaced by that of 1983.
   "After Gratian, later papal enactments, called 'decreets,' were collected and issued by the authority of various popes . . . A revised edition of such 'decreets' . . . was presented to Pope Gregory IX in 1224 — only a short while, therefore, after the final form of Magna Carta in 1225 — and issued by him with statutory force. The revision freely made changes in the text of the enactments and the resulting compilation in four 'books' was regarded as a 'Code,' corresponding to the 'Code' of Justinian, just as the Decretum of Gratian corresponded to the Digest . . . All these compilations and collections were, from the sixteenth century on, known as the Corpus Juris Canonici, the 'Body of Canon Law,' and formed the basis of the law administered in the Church courts." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 33-34 (1936).
Corpus Juris Civilis (kor-pas joor-is sa-vil-ee-or-sa-vi-lee). The body of the civil law, compiled and codified under the direction of the Roman emperor Justinian in A.D. 528-556. • The collection includes four works — the Institutes, the Digest (or Pandects), the Code, and the Novels. The title Corpus Juris Civilis was not original, or even early, but was modeled on the Corpus Juris Canonici and given in the 16th century and later to editions of the texts of the four component parts of the Roman law. See ROMAN LAW. Cf. JUSTINIAN CODE.
corpus possessionis (kor-pas pa-zes[h]-ee-oh-nis). [Latin] Roman law. The physical aspect of possession. See animus possidenti under ANIMUS.
corpus pro corpore (kor-pas proh kor-pa-ree). [Latin] Hist. Body for body. • This phrase commonly expressed the liability of a surety in a solidary action (mainpemor). See MAINPRISE.
correal (kor-ee-al or ko-ree-al), adj. [fr. Latin correus "codebtor"] Roman law. Of or relating to liability that is joint and several. • A correal debtor who paid an entire obligation had no right of action against a codebtor. See CORREUS; SOLIDARY.

"If Aulus, having first obtained from Titius the promise of a hundred aurei, turned to Seius and said, Spondesne mihi, Sei, cosdem centum aureos dare? (Do you engage, Seius, to give me the same one hundred aurei?) then if Seius answered, Spondeo, there was one single obligation for a hundred aurei, binding in full on each of the two debtors. Aulus could demand a hundred from Titius or a hundred from Seius, and in case of non-payment could sue either one, making his choice between them, for the full amount. If either paid the hundred, whether willingly or by compulsion, the other was released: for there was but one debt, and that was now discharged. This kind of obligation is called correal obligation (correal, from cor, and reus or rei, connected parties, parties associated in a common debt or credit.) James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 258 (1881).
correality (kor-ee-al-ah-tee). n. The quality or state of being correal; the relationship between parties to an obligation that terminates when an entire payment is made by one of two or more debtors to a creditor, or a payment is made by a debtor to one of two or more creditors.

"But there were circumstances, apart from indivisibility, in which each of the parties might be liable in full ... Several were liable or entitled, each in solidum, under an obligation, but the thing was due only once. Satisfaction by, or to, one of those liable, or entitled, ended the whole obligation, and action by one of the joint creditors, or against one of the debtors, not only 'novated' the obligation between the actual parties, but destroyed it altogether as against the others. This relation is commonly called correality (correi debendi vel credendi.)" W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 349-50 (2d ed. 1939).

corrector of the staple. Hist. A clerk who records merchants' transactions at a staple. See STAPLE (2).

"The mode for stipulatio is stated in the Institutes. Of several stipulators (correi credendi, active correality) each asks the debtor and he answers once for all. Of several promisors (correi debendi, passive correality) the creditor asks each and they answer together." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 350 (2d ed. 1939).

"Correi Debendi — The name given by the Roman law to persons jointly bound ... In the Scotch law, if bound severally, and not jointly and severally, each is bound only for his share, whatever be the responsibility of the others." Hugh Barclay, A Digest of the Law of Scotland 196 (3d ed. 1865).
correi stipulandi. See CORREI CREDENDI.
correlative (kor-rel-ah-tiv), adj. (16c) 1. Related or corresponding; analogous. 2. Having or involving a reciprocal or mutually interdependent relationship <the term right is correlative with duty>.
correlative-rights doctrine. (1938) 1. Water law. The principle that adjoining landowners must limit their use of a common water source to a reasonable amount. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses C-=41, 101.]

"Under the correlative rights doctrine ... rights to groundwater are determined by land ownership. However, owners of land overlying a single aquifer are each limited to a reasonable share of the total supply of groundwater. The share is usually based on the acreage owned." David H. Getches, Water Law in a Nutshell 249 (3d ed. 1997).

corr(loss)ing. Oil & gas. The rule that a lessee's or landowner's right to capture oil and gas from the property is restricted by the duty to exercise that right without waste or negligence. • This is a corollary to the rule of capture. Cf. RULE OF CAPTURE (4). [Cases: Mines and Minerals C=47.]

corrupt, adj. 1. Having an unlawful or depraved motive; esp., influenced by bribery. 2. Archaic. Of a person subject to corruption of blood. “There are divers offences made Treason by Act of Parliament, whereof, though a Man be Attaint, yet his Blood by Provisoes therein, is not corrupt, nor shall he forfeit any thing . . . .” Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law Dictionary (1670).
corrupt, vb. 1. To change (a person’s morals or principles) from good to bad. 2. To destroy or diminish the quality and usefulness of an electronic or mechanical device or its components. 3. Archaic. To impose corruption of blood on (a person).
corrupting, n. See impairing the morals of a minor. corruption. (13c) 1. Depravity, perversion, or taint; an impairment of integrity, virtue, or moral principle; esp., the impairment of a public official’s duties by bribery. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ▷ 121.] “The word ‘corruption’ indicates impurity or debasement and when found in the criminal law it means depravity or gross impropriety.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 855 (3d ed. 1982).

2. The act of doing something with an intent to give some advantage inconsistent with official duty and the rights of others; a fiduciary’s or official’s use of a station or office to procure some benefit either personally or for someone else, contrary to the rights of others.
corruption in office. See official misconduct under misconduct. corruption of a minor. See impairing the morals of a minor.
corruption of blood. A defunct doctrine, now considered unconstitutional, under which a person loses the ability to inherit or pass property as a result of an attainted or of being declared civilly dead. — Also termed corruption of the blood. See attainted; civil death (1) under death.

“Corruption of blood is, when any one is attainted of felony or treason, then his blood is said to be corrupt, by means whereof neither his children, nor any of his blood, can be heirs to him, or to any other ancestor, for that they ought to claim by him. And if he were a noble or gentleman before, he and all his children are made thereby ignoble and ungentle . . . .” Terms de la Ley 125 (1st Am. ed. 1812).
corruptly, adv. (16c) In a corrupt or depraved manner; by means of corruption or bribery. • As used in criminal-law statutes, corruptly usu. indicates a wrongful desire for pecuniary gain or other advantage.
corrupt-motive doctrine. (1962) Criminal law. The rule that conspiracy is punishable only if the agreement was entered into with an evil purpose, not merely with an intent to do the illegal act. • This doctrine — which originated in People v. Powell, 63 N.Y. 88 (1875) — has been rejected by the Model Penal Code. — Also termed Powell doctrine. [Cases: Conspiracy ▷ 24.5.]
corrupt-practices act. (1897) A federal or state statute that regulates campaign contributions and expenditures as well as their disclosure. [Cases: Elections ▷ 317.1.]

cosigner. See co-maker.
cosinage (kaz-on-ij). Hist. A writ used by an heir to secure the right to land held by a great-great-grandfather or certain collateral relatives. — Also spelled coseinage; cunisnage. — Also termed consanguineo; de consanguineo; de consanguinitate. Cf. aiel; besayel.

“[T]here is the closest possible affinity between the Mort d’Ancestre and the action of Cosinage. If I claim the seisin of my uncle, I use the one; if I claim the seisin of a first cousin, I use the other. But procedurally, the two stand far apart.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 569 (2d ed. 1899).
cosmetic damages. See damages.
cost, n. (13c) 1. The amount paid or charged for something; price or expenditure. Cf. expense.
aboriginal cost. The cost of an asset incurred by the first company to use it for public utilities.
acquisition cost. (1926) 1. An asset’s net price; the original cost of an asset. — Also termed historical cost; original cost. 2. See load.
after cost. A delayed expense; an expense, such as one for repair under a warranty, incurred after the principal transaction.

applied cost. A cost appropriated to a project before it has been incurred.

average cost. The sum of the costs of beginning inventory and the costs of later additions divided by the total number of available units.

average variable cost. The average cost per unit of output, arrived at by dividing the total variable expenses of production by the total units of output. Cf. long-run incremental cost.

avoidable cost. A cost that can be averted if production is held below a certain level so that additional expenses will not be incurred.

carrying cost. 1. Accounting. The variable cost of stocking one unit of inventory for one year. • Carrying cost includes the opportunity cost of the capital invested in the inventory. — Also termed cost of carrying. 2. A current charge or noncapital expenditure made to prevent the causing or accelerating of the termination of a defeasible estate, as well as the sums spent on repairs required by the duty to avoid permissive waste.

common cost. See indirect cost.

cost of completion. (1852) Contracts. An element of damages based on the expense that would be incurred by the nonbreaching party to finish the promised performance. [Cases: Damages $120, 121.]

direct cost. (1818) The amount of money for material, labor, and overhead to produce a product.

distribution cost. Any cost incurred in marketing a product or service, such as advertising, storage, and shipping.

fixed cost. (1894) A cost whose value does not fluctuate with changes in output or business activity; esp., overhead expenses such as rent, salaries, and depreciation. — Also termed fixed charge; fixed expense.

flotation cost. (usu. pl.) A cost incurred in issuing additional stock.

historical cost. See acquisition cost.

implicit cost. See opportunity cost.

indirect cost. (1884) A cost that is not specific to the production of a particular good or service but that arises from production activity in general, such as overhead allocations for general and administrative activities. — Also termed common cost.

manufacturing cost. The cost incurred in the production of goods, including direct and indirect costs.

marginal cost. (1891) The additional cost incurred in producing one more unit of output.

mitigation cost. A party's expenditures to reduce an existing harm so that further damage might be halted, slowed, or diminished. [Cases: Damages $42, 45.]

mixed cost. A cost that includes fixed and variable costs.

net book cost. The cost of property when it was first acquired or devoted to public use, minus accumulated depreciation. — Also termed rate-base value.

net cost. The cost of an item, arrived at by subtracting any financial gain from the total cost.

opportunity cost. (1894) The cost of acquiring an asset measured by the value of an alternative investment that is forgone <her opportunity cost of $1,000 in equipment was her consequent inability to invest that money in bonds>. — Also termed implicit cost.

prime cost. The true price paid for goods on a bona fide purchase.

prophylactic cost. A party's expenditures to prepare property to withstand or prevent potential future harm. • These costs are not related to any existing property damage and are usu. not recoverable under insurance contracts. [Cases: Insurance $2277.]

social cost. The cost to society of any particular practice or rule <although automobiles are undeniably beneficial to society, they carry a certain social cost in the lives that are lost every year on the road>.

sunk cost. (1916) A cost that has already been incurred and that cannot be recovered.

tangible cost. Oil & gas. A particular expense associated with drilling, such as the costs incurred for materials and land. • Drilling and testing costs are considered intangible.

transaction cost. (usu. pl.) A cost connected with a process transaction, such as a broker's commission, the time and effort expended to arrange a deal, or the cost involved in litigating a dispute.

unit cost. The cost of a single unit of a product or service; the total manufacturing cost divided by the number of units.

variable cost. (1953) The cost that varies in the short run in close relationship with changes in output.

2. (pl.) The charges or fees taxed by the court, such as filing fees, jury fees, courthouse fees, and reporter fees. — Also termed court costs. 3. (pl.) The expenses of litigation, prosecution, or other legal transaction, esp., those allowed in favor of one party against the other. • Some but not all states allow parties to claim attorney's fees as a litigation cost. — Also termed (in sense 3) litigation costs. [Cases: Costs $2, 146-194, 194.16; Federal Civil Procedure $2721-2748.]

costs of increase. See costs of increase. costs of the day. Costs incurred in preparing for trial.

costs to abide event. Costs incurred by a successful party who is entitled to an award of those costs incurred at the conclusion of the matter, esp., appellate court's order for payment of costs to the party who finally prevails in a proceeding that has been returned to a lower court. [Cases: Costs  69.]

interlocutory costs. Costs incurred during the pendency of an appeal.

taxable cost. A litigation-related expense that the prevailing party is entitled to as part of the court's award. [Cases: Costs  2; Federal Civil Procedure 2735.]

cost accounting method. See accounting method.

cost and freight. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must (1) clear the goods for export, (2) arrange for transportation by water, and (3) pay the costs of shipping to the port of destination.

• When the goods are safely stowed on the receiving ship while docked, the seller's delivery is complete; the risk of loss then passes to the buyer. This term is used only when goods are transported by sea or inland waterway. — Abbr. CF; CFR; C&F; CandF. Cf. cost, insurance, and freight; free on board. [Cases: Sales 77(2).]

cost approach. (1949) A method of appraising real property, based on the cost of building a new structure with the same utility, assuming that an informed buyer would pay no more for the property than it would cost to build a new structure having the same usefulness. Cf. market approach; income approach. [Cases: Taxation 348(4).]

cost-benefit analysis. (1963) An analytical technique that weights the costs of a proposed decision, holding, or project against the expected advantages, economic or otherwise.

cost bill. See bill of costs under bill (2).

cost-book mining company. An association of persons organized for the purpose of working mines or lodes, whose capital stock is divided into shares that are transferable without the consent of other members. • The management of the mine is entrusted to an agent called a purser. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 101.]

cost depletion. Oil & gas. The recovery of an oil-and-gas producer's basis (i.e., investment) in a producing well by deducting the basis proportionately over the producing life of the well. Treas. Reg. § 1.611-2. Cf. percentage depletion.

"Under cost depletion, the taxpayer in an oil and gas property deducts the basis in the property from the income as oil and gas are produced and sold. Cost depletion is calculated by a formula . . . that relates the recovery of the taxpayer's investment to the proportion that the current unit sales of oil and gas bear to the total anticipated sales of oil and gas from the property. The investment is recovered ratably over the life of the reserves." John S. Lowe, Oil and Gas Law in a Nutshell 353 (3d ed. 1995).

cost, insurance, and freight. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must (1) clear the goods for export, (2) arrange for transportation by water, (3) procure insurance against the buyer's risk of damage during carriage, and (4) pay the costs of shipping to the port of destination.

• The seller's delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the goods are loaded on the receiving ship while docked in the port of shipment. This term is used only when goods are transported by sea or inland waterway. — Abbr. C.I.F. Cf. cost and freight; free on board. [Cases: Sales 77(2).]

"C.I.F." is a mercantile symbol that is commonly used in international sales contracts. It is defined by section 2-320 of the UCC and by the Incoterms — 1953 and the Revised American Foreign Trade Definitions — 1941. Under all of these definitions the letters "C.I.F." mean that the price covers the cost of the goods, the cost of insuring them for the benefit of the order of the buyer, and the cost of carrying them to the named point, almost always the destination. Like the other mercantile symbols, the meaning of "C.I.F." may be varied by agreement. William D. Hawkland, Uniform Commercial Code Series § 2-320.01 (1984).

C.I.F. destination. A contractual term denoting that the price includes in a lump sum the cost of the goods and the insurance and freight to the named destination. — Also termed C.I.F. place of destination. [Cases: Sales 77(2).]

cost justification. (1938) Under the Robinson-Patman Act, an affirmative defense against a charge of price discrimination dependent on the seller's showing that it incurs lower costs in serving those customers who are paying less. 15 USCA § 13(a). cost-of-capital method. A means of measuring a utility's cost of acquiring debt and equity capital. • Regulatory commissions often use this method to determine a fair rate of return for the utility's investors. [Cases: Gas 14.4(10); Public Utilities 129.]

cost of completion. See cost (1).

appellate counsel. (1921) A lawyer who represents a party on appeal. • The term is often used in contrast with trial counsel.

appointed counsel. See assigned counsel.

assigned counsel. (17c) An attorney appointed by the court to represent a person, usu. an indigent person. — Also termed court-appointed attorney; court-appointed counsel; appointed counsel; appointed attorney. [Cases: Criminal Law C=1773; Federal Civil Procedure C=1951; Trial C=21.]

corporation counsel. A city attorney in an incorporated municipality. See city attorney. [Cases: Municipal Corporations C=214(3).]

counsel of record. See attorney of record under attorney.

court-appointed counsel. See assigned counsel.

cumis counsel. An independent attorney hired by a defendant in a lawsuit in which the damages may be covered by the defendant's insurer but a conflict of interest between the defendant and the insurer makes it unreasonable for an attorney selected by the insurer to represent the defendant. • The term derives from San Diego Federal Credit Union v. Cumis Ins. Society, Inc., 162 Cal. App. 3d 358 (1984), in which the concept was first clearly articulated. [Cases: Attorney and Client C=215(5); Insurance C=2929.]

general counsel. (1848) 1. A lawyer or law firm that represents a client in all or most of the client's legal matters, but that sometimes refers extraordinary matters — such as litigation and intellectual-property cases — to other lawyers. 2. The most senior lawyer in a corporation's legal department, usu. also a corporate officer.

house counsel. See in-house counsel.

independent counsel. (1920) An attorney hired to provide an unbiased opinion about a case or to conduct an impartial investigation; esp., an attorney appointed by a governmental branch or agency to investigate alleged misconduct within that branch or agency. See special prosecutor under prosecutor. Cf. special counsel. [Cases: United States C=40.]

counselor-at-law. See counsel (2). count. n. (14c) Procedure. 1. The part of an indictment charging the suspect with a distinct offense. 2. In a complaint or similar pleading, the statement of a distinct claim. Cf. declaration (7). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=627; Pleading C=53.]

This word ... is in our old law-books used synonymously with declaration .... But when the suit embraces two or more causes of action (each of which of course requires a different statement), or when the plaintiff makes two or more different statements of one and the same cause of action, each several statement is called a count, and all of them, collectively, constitute the declaration." 1 John Bouvier, A Law Dictionary 245 (1839).

count, vb. (17c) 1. In pleading, to declare or state; to narrate the facts that state a claim. 2. Hist. To plead orally; to plead or argue a case in court.

counternote. See NOTE (4).

counter. Hist. An advocate or professional pleader; one who counts (i.e., orally recites) for a client. ● Counters had coalesced into an identifiable group practicing before the Common Bench by the beginning of the 13th century. They were the leaders of the medieval legal profession, and over time came to be known as serjeants at law. — Also spelled countor, contor, counteur. See SERJEANT-AT-LAW.

counteraction. See COUNTERCLAIM.

counteraffidavit. See AFFIDAVIT.

counterclaim. n. (18c) A claim for relief asserted against an opposing party after an original claim has been made; esp., a defendant's claim in opposition to or as a setoff against the plaintiff's claim. — Also termed counteraction; countersuit; cross-demand. Cf. CROSS-CLAIM. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C—775—784; Pleading C—138; Set-off and Counterclaim C—9.] — counterclaimant, n.

"Under [Fed. R. Civ. P.] Rule 13 the court has broad discretion to allow claims to be joined in order to expedite the resolution of all controversies between the parties in one suit. Rule 13(c) specifically provides that the counterclaimant is not limited by recovery sought by the opposing party but may claim relief in excess of that amount. Further, the general legal rule is that it is immaterial whether a counterclaim is legal or equitable for purposes of determining whether it properly is brought under Rule 13. . . . The expectation is that this liberal joinder policy will further the elimination of circuity of action and multiple litigation." 6 Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 1403, at 15—16 (2d ed. 1990).

compulsory counterclaim. (1938) A counterclaim that must be asserted to be cognizable, usu. because it relates to the opposing party's claim and arises out of the same subject matter. ● If a defendant fails to assert a compulsory counterclaim in the original action, that claim may not be brought in a later, separate action (with some exceptions). See Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(a). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C—775; Judgment C—585(4); Set-off and Counterclaim C—60.]

permissive counterclaim. (1924) A counterclaim that need not be asserted to be cognizable, usu. because it does not arise out of the same subject matter as the opposing party's claim or involves third parties over which the court does not have jurisdiction. ● Permissive counterclaims may be brought in a later, separate action. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(b).

counter-complaint. See COMPLAINT.

counterfeit, vb. (14c) To unlawfully forge, copy, or imitate an item, esp. money or a negotiable instrument (such as a security or promissory note) or other officially issued item of value (such as a postage stamp or a food stamp), or to possess such an item without authorization and with the intent to deceive or defraud by presenting the item as genuine. ● Counterfeiting includes producing or selling an item that displays a reproduction of a genuine trademark, usu. to deceive buyers into thinking they are purchasing genuine merchandise. See 18 USCA §§ 470 et seq. [Cases: Counterfeiting ☞ 1; Trademarks ☞ 1432.] — counterfeit, n. — counterfeit, adj.

"Literally a counterfeit is an imitation intended to pass for an original. Hence it is spurious or false, and to counterfeit is to make false. For this reason the verbs counterfeit and forge are often employed as synonyms and the same is true to some extent of the corresponding nouns. No error is involved in this usage but it is important to distinguish between the words as far as possible when used as the labels of criminal offenses. In the most restricted sense, (counterfeiting is the unlawful making of false money in the similitude of the genuine. At one time under English statutes it was made treason. Under modern statutes it is a felony." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 431-32 (3d ed. 1982).

Counterfeit Access Device and Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1984. A federal statute that criminalizes various computer-related activities such as accessing without permission a computer system belonging to a bank or the federal government, or using that access to improperly obtain anything of value. 18 USCA § 1030. [Cases: Telecommunications ☞ 1342, 1348.]

counterfeiter, A person who forges or otherwise makes a copy or an unauthorized imitation of something (esp. a document, currency, or another's signature) with the intent to deceive or defraud.

counterfeiting, n. The unlawful forgery, copying, or imitation of an item, esp. money or a negotiable instrument (such as a security or promissory note) or other officially issued item of value (such as a postage stamp), or the unauthorized possession of such an item, with the intent to deceive or defraud by claiming or passing the item as genuine. See 18 USCA §§ 470 et seq. [Cases: Counterfeiting ☞ 1.] — counterfeit, vb. — counterfeit, n. — counterfeit, adj.

counterfeit recording. Copyright. An unauthorized copy of a copyright-protected recording's sounds, artwork, label, trademark, or packaging. — Also termed bootleg recording. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ☞ 70.]

counterfeit trademark. See trademark.

counterfoil (kown-tar-foyil), n. A detachable part of a writing on which the particulars of the main part are summarized. • The most common example is a check stub, on which the date, the payee, and the amount are typically noted.

counterletter. Civil law. A document in which the parties to a simulated contract record their true intentions. Ia. Civ. Code art. 2025. • For example, the record owner of real property may acknowledge in a counterletter that another person actually owns the property; the counterletter may then be used when the property is to be reconveyed after a period. A counterletter can have no effect against a third party acting in good faith. See simulated contract under CONTRACT.

countermand (kown-tar-mand), n. (16c) 1. A contradictory command that overrides or annuls a previous one. 2. An action that has the effect of voiding something previously ordered; a revocation. — countermand (kown-tar-mand or kown-), vb.

counteroffer, n. (18c) Contracts. An offeree's new offer that varies the terms of the original offer and that ordinarily rejects and terminates the original offer. • A late or defective acceptance is considered a counteroffer. See MIRROR-IMAGE RULE. [Cases: Contracts ☞ 24.] — counteroffer, vb. — counterofferer, n.

counterpart. (15c) 1. In conveyancing, a corresponding part of an instrument (the other half of the indenture — the counterpart — could not be found). 2. One of two or more copies or duplicates of a legal instrument <this lease may be executed in any number of counterparts, each of which is considered an original>.

"Formerly 'part' was used as the opposite of 'counterpart,' in respect to covenants executed in duplicate, but now each copy is called a 'counterpart.'" 2 Stewart Rapalje & Robert L. Lawrence, A Dictionary of American and English Law 927 (1883).

"Counterparts are not nowadays written on the same parchment, but that which is executed by the grantor of an interest is called the 'original,' while that which is executed by the party to whom the interest passes — for example, a lessee — is called the 'counterpart.'" G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 674 (3d ed. 1933).

counterpromise, n. (18c) A promise made in exchange for another party's promise . See bilateral contract under CONTRACT. [Cases: Contracts ☞ 55.] — counterpromise, vb.

counter-roll. Hist. A record kept by an officer as a check on another officer's record, esp. the rolls maintained by a sheriff and a coroner.

countersuit. See COUNTERCLAIM.

countertrade. A type of international trade in which purchases made by an importing nation are linked to offsetting purchases made by the exporting nation.

"Countertrade is barter in modern clothes. It developed rapidly as a form of doing business with the USSR and Eastern European nations in the 1970s and 1980s, before the major economic and political reforms tended to diminish its emphasis as a means of doing business." Ralph H. Folsom & Michael W. Gordon, International Business Transactions § 2.1, at 46 (1995).

country. 1. A nation or political state; state (1). 2. The territory of such a nation or state.

county. (14c) The largest territorial division for local government within a state, generally considered to be a political subdivision and a quasi-corporation. • Every county exists as a result of a sovereign act of legislation, either constitutional or statutory, separating it from the rest of the state as an integral part of its territory and establishing it as one of the primary divisions of the state for purposes of civil administration. — Abbr. co.

"A county is a part of the realm, entirely governed by one sheriff under the king, but all subject to the general government of the realm; and therefore every county is as it were an entire body of itself, so that upon a feoffment of lands in many towns in one county, livery of seisin made in one parcel in any one of the towns in the name of all, sufficeth for all the lands in all the other towns within the same county: but upon a feoffment of lands in divers counties, there must be livery of seisin in every county." Sir Henry Finch, Law, or a Discourse Thereof 79 (1759).

foreign county. Any county separate from that of a county where matters arising in the former county are called into question, though both may lie within the same state or country.

county commissioner. See COMMISSIONER.

county court. See COURT.

county judge. See JUDGE.

county officer. See OFFICER (1).

county palatine (pal-a-tin or -tin). Hist. A county in which the lord held certain royal privileges, such as the right to pardon a felon or to have indictments recite that offenses were committed against the lord’s — rather than the king’s — peace. • In England, there were three such counties: Chester, Durham, and Lancaster. The separate legal systems in these counties were slowly eliminated; the last vestiges of a separate system were abolished by the Courts Act (1971). Cf. proprietary government under GOVERNMENT.

"The counties palatine were Chester, Durham, and Lancaster. Whatever may be the precise date at which these counties became ‘Palatine,’ it seems likely that there was in Saxon times a jurisdiction equivalent to that of the Palatine earl, and originating in usurpation and necessity. The Central Government was too far away both before and after the Conquest to control effectually the administration of the Marches, which were always turbulent and lawless districts." A.T. Carter, A History of English Legal Institutions 192 (4th ed. 1910).

county property. Property that a county is authorized to acquire, hold, or sell. [Cases: Counties <= 103.]

county purpose. An objective pursued by a county; esp., one that a county levies taxes for. [Cases: Counties <= 190.1.]

courier. A messenger, esp. one who delivers parcels, packages, and the like. • In international law, the term denotes a messenger duly authorized by a sending state to deliver a diplomatic pouch.

course of business. (17c) The normal routine in managing a trade or business. — Also termed ordinary course of business; regular course of business; ordinary course; regular course. [Cases: Customs and Usages <= 9.]

course of dealing. (16c) An established pattern of conduct between parties in a series of transactions (e.g., multiple sales of goods over a period of years). • If a dispute arises, the parties’ course of dealing can be used as evidence of how they intended to carry out the transaction. Cf. COURSE OF PERFORMANCE; trade usage under USAGE. [Cases: Contracts <= 170.]

"A course of dealing is distinguishable from a course of performance. As defined by the [UCC], 'course of dealing' relates to conduct under other transactions which occurred with regularity prior to the formation of the present contract, while 'course of performance' relates to the conduct of the parties under the contract in question subsequent to its formation. However, in meaning the course of employment. (17c) Events that occur or circumstances that exist as a part of one's employment; esp., the time during which an employee furthers an employer's goals through employer-mandated directives. Cf. SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT; ZONE OF EMPLOYMENT.

course of performance. (18c) A sequence of previous performance by either party after an agreement has been entered into, when a contract involves repeated occasions for performance and both parties know the nature of the performance and have an opportunity to object to it. • A course of performance accepted or acquiesced in without objection is relevant to determining the meaning of the agreement. Cf. COURSE OF DEALING; trade usage under USAGE. [Cases: Contracts C-170.]

"[C]ommon law courts have recognized the necessity of learning how people usually talk and what they usually mean by their language before one interprets their contracts . . . . ‘[C]ourse of performance’ refers to a pattern of performance of the contract that is the subject of the dispute, as contrasted to ‘course of dealing’ which refers to the pattern of performance in prior contracts between the same parties.” Claude Rohwer & Gordon D. Schaber, Contracts in a Nutshell 171-73 (4th ed. 1997).

"The phrase ‘course of performance’ relates to the way the parties have acted in performance of the particular contract in question. The judicial inquiry on this point is limited to the way the parties have acted in carrying out the particular contract that is in controversy, as distinguished from a general pattern of dealing that may embrace many other contracts or transactions between the parties.” Ronald A. Anderson, Uniform Commercial Code § 1-205:74 (1997).

court. n. (12c) 1. A governmental body consisting of one or more judges who sit to adjudicate disputes and administer justice

“A court . . . is a permanently organized body, with independent judicial powers defined by law, meeting at a time and place fixed by law for the judicial public administration of justice.” 1 William J. Hughes, Federal Practice, Jurisdiction & Procedure § 7, at 8 (1931).

2. The judge or judges who sit on such a governmental body <the court asked the parties to approach the bench>. 3. A legislative assembly <in Massachusetts, the General Court is the legislature>. 4. The locale for a legal proceeding <an out-of-court statement>. 5. The building where the judge or judges convene to adjudicate disputes and administer justice <the lawyers agreed to meet at the court at 8:00 a.m.>. — Also termed (in sense 5) courthouse.

appeal. n. (18c) A court with jurisdiction to review decisions of lower courts or administrative agencies. — Also termed appeals court; appeal court; court of appeals; court of appeal; court of review. [Cases: Courts C-203–254.]

"Appellate courts are among the most important institutions of governance in the United States. Through their review of trial court and administrative agency decisions they ensure that those bodies function lawfully and that litigants receive justice under law. Moreover, they provide authoritative interpretations of statutory and constitutional provisions and control the shaping of the common law in response to ever-changing circumstances; they are thus major sources of law.” Daniel John Meador & Jordana Simone Bernstein, Appellate Courts in the United States v (1994).

court of record. (18c) 1. A court that is required to keep a record of its proceedings. • The court's records are presumed accurate and cannot be collaterally impeached. See of record (2). [Cases: Courts $48.]

"The distinction that we still draw between 'courts of record' and courts that are 'not of record' takes us back to early times when the king asserts that his own word as all that has taken place in his presence is incontestable. This privilege he communicates to his own special court; its testimony as to all that is done before it is conclusive. If any question arises as to what happened on a previous occasion, the justices decide this by recording or bearing record (recordamus, portant recordum). Other courts ... may and, upon occasion, must bear record; but their records are not irrefragable.... We easily slip into saying 'The court of record' and courts that are 'not of record' takes us back to early times when the king asserts that his own word as all that has taken place in his presence is incontestable.

2. A court that may fine and imprison people for contempt.

"A court of record is, strictly speaking, a court which has power to fine and imprison." Lancelot Feilding Everest, Everest and Strode's Law of Estoppel (1923).
court of review. See appellate court.

diocesan court (di-ahs-i sin). Eccles. law. A court exercising general or limited jurisdiction (as determined by patent, local custom, or legislation) of matters arising within a bishop's diocese. • Diocesan courts include the consistory court, the courts of the commissaries, and the courts of archdeacons.
divided court. See DIVIDED COURT.
divisical court. An English court made up of two or more judges from the High Court of Justice sitting in special cases that cannot be disposed of by one judge. • Each division of the High Court has a divisional court, e.g., the Divisional Court of the Family Division. With the exception of the Divisional Court of the Chancery Division, which has jurisdiction to review land-registration appeals from the county court, almost all judicial appeals are from decisions of a magistrates' court. The Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division hears appeals from the Crown Court or the magistrates' court by way of case stated in criminal prosecutions, which is the most frequent use of a divisional court. domestic court. (1801) 1. A court having jurisdiction at the place of a party's residence or domicile. 2. See family court. domestic-relations court. See family court. drug court. A court that hears cases against nonviolent adults and juveniles, who are often first-time offenders and who are usu. charged with possession of a controlled substance or with committing a minor drug-related crime. • Drug courts focus on treatment rather than on incarceration. Cf. problem-solving court. [Cases: Chemical Dependents $12; Sentencing and Punishment $2051.]
eddicastral court (i-klee-zee-as ti-kal). 1. A religious court that hears matters concerning a particular religion. 2. In England, a court having jurisdiction over matters concerning the Church of England (the established church) as well as the duties and rights of the people serving it, but whose modern jurisdiction is limited to matters of ecclesiastical discipline and church property. — Also termed church court; court christian; spiritual court; (in Latin) christianitatis curia; curia christianitatis. [Cases: Religious Societies $12, 14.]

The ecclesiastical courts exercised a jurisdiction which played a part of the development of the English legal system, and their work was not confined to controlling the clergy and doctrines of the Church. The jurisdiction of these courts was of particular significance before the Reformation, but, in certain matters and especially in matrimonial causes and the law of succession to property on death (testate and intestate succession), it remained of importance till the middle of the nineteenth century." 1 A.K.R. Kiralfy, Potter's Historical Introduction to English Law and Its Institutions 211 (4th ed. 1958).

impeachment court. See COURT FOR THE TRIAL OF IMPEACHMENTS.

inferior court. (17c) 1. Any court that is subordinate to the chief appellate tribunal within a judicial system. 2. A court of special, limited, or statutory jurisdiction, whose record must show the existence of jurisdiction in any given case to give its ruling presumptive validity. - Also termed lower court.

inquisitorial court. A court in which the inquisitorial system prevails.

"We should remember that in the 'inquisitorial court' the roles of prosecutor, defender, and judge are combined in one person or group of persons. It is no accident that such a court commonly holds its sessions in secret. The usual explanation for this is that the methods by which it extracts confessions cannot stand public scrutiny. But the reason runs deeper. The methods employed by an inquisitorial court, even if open to the public, could scarcely be a secret of meaningful observation by an outsider. It is only when the roles of prosecutor, defender, and judge are separated that a process of decision can take on an order and coherence that will make it understandable to an outside audience and convince that audience that all sides of the controversy have been considered." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 35-36 (1968).

juvenile court. (1903) 1. A court having jurisdiction over cases involving children under a specified age, usu. 18. - Illinois enacted the first statewide juvenile-court act in 1899. Today every state has a specialized juvenile or family court with exclusive original delinquency jurisdiction. - Also termed children's court. [Cases: Justices of the Peace C=31.] 2. A court having special jurisdiction over orphaned, delinquent, dependent, and neglected children. - This type of juvenile court is created by statute and derives its power from the specific wording of the statute, usu. having exclusive original jurisdiction over matters involving abuse and neglect, adoption, status offenses, and delinquency. Generally, juvenile courts are special courts of a paternal nature that have jurisdiction over the care, custody, and control of children (as defined by the statute). The jurisdiction of the juvenile court is exercised as between the state (for the child) and the parents of the child and is not concerned with a custody controversy that does not affect the morale, health, or welfare of the child. A juvenile court is not a criminal court. The primary concern of a juvenile court is the child's immediate welfare. See uniform juvenile court act. [Cases: Infants C=31.] kangaroo court. (1849) 1. A self-appointed tribunal or mock court in which the principles of law and justice are disregarded, perverted, or parodied. - Kangaroo courts may be assembled by various groups, such as prisoners in jail (to settle disputes between inmates) and players on a baseball team (to "punish" teammates who commit fielding errors). 2. A court or tribunal characterized by unauthorized or irregular procedures, esp. so as to render a fair proceeding impossible. 3. A sham legal proceeding. - The term's origin is uncertain, but it appears to be an Americanism. It has been traced to 1853 in the American West. "Kangaroo" might refer to the illogical leaps between "facts" and conclusions, or to the hapless defendant's quick bounce from court to gallows.

land court. A court having jurisdiction over land-related matters including: (1) exclusive original jurisdiction of applications for registration of land titles and related questions, writs of entry and petitions to clear title to real estate, petitions to determine the validity and extent of municipal zoning ordinances, bylaws, and regulations, and proceedings for foreclosure and redemption from tax titles; (2) original concurrent jurisdiction of declaratory judgment proceedings, shared with the supreme judicial court, superior court, and probate courts; and (3) original concurrent equity jurisdiction in land-related matters, except for cases of specific performance of land contracts. - Land courts today exist in the United States only in Massachusetts and Hawaii. [Cases: Courts C=174, 472.1.]

landed-estates court. Hist. English law. A statutorily established tribunal to dispose of encumbered real estate more promptly and easily than could be accomplished through the ordinary judicial machinery. - This type of court was first established in Ireland by an Act of 12 & 13 Vict., ch. 77. The purpose of the court was to enable the owner, or any lessee of an unexpired term of 63 years or less, of encumbered land to apply to commissioners to direct a sale. The court served as a court of record and was called the Incumbered Estates Court. A later act abolished that court and created a new permanent tribunal called the Landed Estates Court. 21 Vict., ch. 72.

legatine court. A court held by a papal legate and having ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

pretorial court. Hist. A 17th-century Maryland court that had jurisdiction over capital and other serious crimes. • It consisted of three judges: the colony’s lord proprietor or his lieutenant-general, the Secretary or Register of the Council of State, and one other member of the Council.

prize court. A court having jurisdiction to adjudicate the captures made at sea in time of war. See Prize (2). Cf. Court of Appeals in Cases of Capture. [Cases: War and National Emergency ☞ 28(1).]

probate court. (18c) A court with the power to declare wills valid or invalid, to oversee the administration of estates and (in some states) to appoint guardians and approve the adoption of minors. — Also termed surrogate’s court; surrogate court; court of ordinary; ordinary’s court; county court; orphan’s court (abbr. O.C.). See Probate. [Cases: Courts ☞ 198.]

problem-solving court. A specialized court that matches community resources to litigants whose problems or cases may benefit from those resources. • In criminal cases, a problem-solving court endeavors to promote solutions to underlying behavior problems that may lead to misconduct by providing treatment rather than imprisonment. For example, it may match offenders with resources for drug-abuse or mental-health treatment, often with close court supervision. In civil cases, a problem-solving court may help the parties try to resolve disputes through counseling or mediation rather than litigation. Cf. Drug Court.

provisional court. A federal court with jurisdiction and powers governed by the order granting its authority, such as a temporary court established in a conquered or occupied territory.

Quarter Sessions Court. See Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace.

recorder’s court. A court having jurisdiction over felony cases. • This court exists in only a few jurisdictions, such as Michigan, where the recorder’s court hears felony cases arising within the Detroit city limits. [Cases: Criminal Law ☞ 90.]

surrogate’s court. See Probate Court.

tax court. See Tax Court.

teen court. A group of teenagers who (1) hear cases involving juveniles, usu. first-time offenders, who have acknowledged their guilt or responsibility, and
Some local jurisdictions in more than half the states have provided for this type of tribunal. The juvenile offender consents to the assessment of punishment by this jury of peers. The American Bar Association encourages the formation of these kinds of courts. — Also termed youth court.

Tribal Court. See Teind Court.

territorial court. A U.S. court established in a U.S. territory (such as the Virgin Islands) and serving as both a federal and state court. • The Constitution authorizes Congress to create such courts. U.S. Const. art. IV, § 3, cl. 2. [Cases: Federal Courts C=:=' 1021–1024.]

three-judge court. A court made up of three judges; esp., a panel of three federal judges convened to hear a trial in which a statute is challenged on constitutional grounds. • Three-judge courts were virtually abolished in 1976 when Congress restricted their jurisdiction to constitutional challenges to congressional reapportionments. Occasionally, Congress creates three-judge courts in special legislation, as with the 2002 campaign-finance law. Appeals from a three-judge court go directly to the Supreme Court. See 28 USCA § 2284. [Cases: Federal Courts C=:=' 991–1013.]

traffic court. A court with jurisdiction over prosecutions for parking violations and infractions of road law.

trial court. (18c) A court of original jurisdiction where the evidence is first received and considered. — Also termed court of first instance; instance court; court of instance.

Tribal Court. See tribal court.

unified family court. In some jurisdictions, a court that hears all family matters, including matters of divorce, juvenile delinquency, adoption, abuse and neglect, and criminal abuse. • A unified family court also hears matters typically heard in family court (in jurisdictions that have statutory family courts) or in courts of general jurisdiction, such as divorce, paternity, and emancipation proceedings. Proponents of unified family courts cite the benefits of having all family-related matters heard by one court — for instance, the benefit of having a child testify only once rather than forcing the child to testify in one court in a divorce proceeding, in a different court in criminal proceedings against an abuser, and in yet another in a civil proceeding initiated by Child Protective Services. [Cases: Courts C=:=' 174.]

Court Appointed Special Advocates. A federally funded program in which trained laypersons act on behalf of children in abuse and neglect cases. • The CASA program began in 1977 in Seattle, Washington. In 1989, the American Bar Association endorsed using a combination of CASA volunteers and attorneys in abuse and neglect cases. CASA volunteers are sanctioned by the ABA as permissible guardians ad litem. — Abbr. CASA. [Cases: Infants C=:=' 205.]

court baron. Hist. A manorial court that had jurisdiction over amounts in controversy of 40 shillings or less. • According to some authorities, the court baron developed into two courts: the customary court baron, for disputes involving copyholders, and the court baron proper (also known as the freeholders' court baron), in which freeholders were allowed to hold court concerning minor disputes. — Also termed freeholder's court baron.

"In Coke's day it was said that the lord of a manor had one court, 'a court baron,' for his freeholders and another court, 'a customary court,' for his copyholders, and that in the latter the lord or his steward was the judge. Now over his unfree men the lord had, according to the law of the king's court, almost unlimited power; short of maiming them he might do what he liked with them, and every tenant of an unfree tenement was a tenant at will. Nevertheless in the court rolls and the manuals for stewards which come to us from the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries we cannot discover two courts or two methods of constituting the court. Freeholders and serfs are said to owe suit to the same hairook, and so far as we can see, the curia which pronounces judgment is always the same body." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 593 (2d ed. 1898).
Court Calendar. (1852) A list of matters scheduled for trial or hearing; docket (2).

Court Christian. See ecclesiastical court under court.

Court Clinic. A medical clinic, established for the benefit of the courts, to which a judge may send a defendant for psychiatric evaluation or, esp. in the case of a juvenile, to explore why the defendant committed the offense and what treatment is appropriate.

"Court Clinics have developed in two ways: one, in which the clinic has its own social workers to take case histories and to investigate the past of the offenders, and the second is when the clinic utilizes the probation department as historians and as therapists. In both types of clinics, a history is taken, appropriate psychological tests are given to the offender, with particular reference to his intelligence, and a physical examination and a psychiatric examination are made. Usually these clinics have a meeting in which the whole staff discuss the cases when a diagnosis is made and, finally, a report is sent to the referring judge, informing him as to the probable reason why the offender has committed the offense, the appropriate treatment if any is necessary, and the probably outcome of the case if the treatment procedures recommended are carried out." Encyclopedia of Criminology 79-80 (Vernon C. Branham & Samuel B. Kutash eds., 1949).

Court Supervision. (1970) Oversight of a parolee by a correctional agency located in a jurisdiction other than where the parolee was sentenced. • Courtly supervision is usu. arranged informally between correctional authorities in cases in which the offense is not serious and the parolee's rehabilitative needs are better served in another jurisdiction.

Court for Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved. Hist. A court established in 1848 to review questions of law arising in criminal cases. • Trial judges posed the postverdict questions of law to the Court, which decided whether error had been committed. The Court was abolished in 1907, and its jurisdiction was transferred to the Court of Criminal Appeal. — Also termed Court for Crown Cases Reserved.

"It was an old practice for the judge, in case of a conviction, if he felt a doubt as to the law, to respite judgment or sentence, and discuss the matter informally with the other judges. If they thought that the prisoner had been improperly convicted, he was pardoned. Statutory authority was given to this practice in 1848 by the establishment of the court for Crown Cases Reserved. All the judges were members of this court; and five, of whom the Lord Chief Justice must be one, formed a quorum." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 322-23 (1768).

Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. Hist. A court that exercised jurisdiction over family issues, such as legitimacy and divorce. • The Court, which was established in 1857, acquired the matrimonial jurisdiction previously exercised by the ecclesiastical courts. It consisted of the Lord Chancellor, the Chief Justices of the Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, the Chief Baron of Exchequer, the senior puisne judges of the last three courts, and the Judge Ordinary. In most instances, the Judge Ordinary heard the cases. The Judicature Act of 1873 abolished the Court and transferred its jurisdiction to the Probate Divorce and Admiralty Division (now Family Division) of the High Court of Justice.

Court for the Correction of Errors. A court having jurisdiction to review a lower court. • The name was formerly used in New York and South Carolina.

Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors. Hist. A court located in London that had jurisdiction over bankruptcy matters. • The Bankruptcy Act of 1861 abolished the Court.

Court for the Trial of Impeachments. (18c) A tribunal empowered to try a government officer or other person brought before it by the process of impeachment. • The U.S. Senate and the British House of Lords have this authority, as do the upper houses of most state legislatures. — Also termed impeachment court; court of impeachment.

Court Hand. Hist. A script style used by English court clerks, the words being abbreviated and contracted according to a set of common principles for maintaining brevity and uniformity. • This type of writing, along with the use of Latin (except for technical or untranslatable phrases), was banned early in the 18th century in an effort to make court records more accessible to nonlawyers.

"[T]echnical Latin continued in use from the time of its first introduction, till the subversion of our ancient constitution under Cromwell: when, among many other innovations in the law, some for the better and some for the worse, the language of our records was altered and turned into English. But, at the restoration of King Charles, this novelty was no longer countenanced; the practitioners finding it very difficult to express themselves so concisely or significantly in any other language but the Latin. And thus it continued without any sensible inconvenience till about the year 1730, when it was again thought proper that the proceedings at law should be done into English, and it was accordingly so ordered by statute 4 Geo. II. c. 26... What is said of the alteration of language by the statute 4 Geo. II. c. 76 will hold equally strong with respect to the prohibition of using the ancient immutable court hand in writing the records of other legal proceedings; whereby the reading of any record that is forty years old is now become the object of science, and calls for the help of an antiquarian." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 322-23 (1768).

courthouse. See court (5).

courthouse steps. The figurative location of settlement negotiations that occur shortly before trial commences, regardless of the literal location of the negotiations (the parties settled the lawsuit on the courthouse steps).

court lands. Hist. The part of a manor used for the lord's household. — Also termed (in Latin) curtiles terrae.

court leet (kort leet). Hist. A feudal court responsible for receiving frankpledges and notices of criminal accusations. Courts let exercised both governmental and judicial powers, but they declined in the 14th century after the justices in eyre began to take over serious criminal cases. The court met once or twice a year, and was presided over by the lord's steward, a lawyer who acted as judge.

court-martial, n. (18c) An ad hoc military court convened under military authority to try someone, particularly a member of the armed forces, accused of violating the Uniform Code of Military Justice. [Cases: Military Justice <<870-898.] Pl. courts-martial.

"[Court-martial are not a part of the federal judicial system, and the procedure in such courts is regulated by the Articles of War, Army Regulations, orders of the President, and military custom." Altmayer v. Sanford, 148 F.2d 161, 162 (5th Cir. 1945).

BCD special court-martial. A special court-martial in which a possible punishment is a bad-conduct discharge (a "BCD").

general court-martial. A proceeding that is presided over by a military judge, and no fewer than five members (who serve as jurors), and that has jurisdiction over all the members of the armed forces. It is the highest military trial court.

special court-martial. A proceeding that is presided over by a military judge and no fewer than three members (who serve as jurors) to hear noncapital offenses and prescribe a sanction of hard labor, dismissal, or extended confinement (up to one year). It is the intermediate level of courts-martial.

summary court-martial. A proceeding presided over by a single commissioned officer who is jurisdictionally limited in what sanctions can be imposed. It is the lowest level of courts-martial.

court-martial order. A written order containing the result of a court-martial trial.

Court-Martial Reports. A publication containing the opinions of the U.S. Court of Military Appeals and select decisions of the Courts of Military Review. This publication appeared during the years 1951-1975. Abbr. CMR.

court of ancient demesne. Hist. A court made up of freeholders of land held by the Crown (i.e., an ancient demesne). The freeholders acted as judges much the same way that freeholders of an ordinary manor would in a court baron. See ancient demesne under demesne; court baron.

Court of Appeal. An English court of civil and criminal appellate jurisdiction established by the Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875. The court is made up of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Chief Justice, Master of the Rolls, President of the Family Division, Vice-Chancellor of the Chancery Division, former Lord Chancellors, Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, and Lords Justices of Appeal. In practice it is made up of the Master of Rolls and the Lords Justices. It sits in several divisions, each having three members.

Court of Appeal in Chancery. Hist. An English court of intermediate appeal in equity cases, established in 1851 and abolished in 1873-1875, when its jurisdiction was transferred to the Court of Appeal.

Court of Appeals in Cases of Capture. Hist. A court responsible for reviewing state-court decisions concerning British ships captured by American privateers during the Revolution. Congress established the court under the Articles of Confederation. It was the first federal court in the United States and the chief United States court from 1780 to 1787. Cf. prize court under court.

Court of Archdeacon (ahrch-dee-kan). Hist. Eccles. law. An inferior ecclesiastical court that had jurisdiction over cases arising within the archdeaconry and probate matters. Appeal was to the Bishop's Court. The Court of Archdeacon was abolished in 1967. — Also termed Archdeacon's Court; Archdiocesan Court (ahrk-d-tak-an-). A court of Arches. Eccles. law. The ecclesiastical court of the province of Canterbury, responsible for appeals from provincial diocesan courts. The Pope heard appeals from the Court of Arches until the break with Rome prompted a transfer of the appellate jurisdiction to the Court of Delegates. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council now hears certain appeals from the Court of Arches. — Also termed Arches Court of Canterbury; Court of Canterbury; Court of the Official Principal. Cf. CHANCERY COURT OF YORK.

The Court of Arches is the provincial court of the Archbishop of Canterbury, it is held by a judge generally called the Dean of the Arches. Its jurisdiction was important while testamentary cases were dealt with in the Ecclesiastical Courts. The name is derived from the fact that the court was originally held in the Church of St. Mary-le-Bow (Ecclesia Beatae Mariae de Arcibus), the steeple of which is raised on stone pillars formed archwise like bent bows. W.J.V. Windeyer, Lectures on Legal History 184 n.11 (2d ed. 1949).

Court of Assistants. Hist. A colonial body organized in Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1630 to act as a legislature and court for the colony. Cf. GENERAL COURT.

The court of assistants, made up of governor, deputy governor, and magistrates, heard appeals from lower Courts, and took original jurisdiction in certain cases — for example, cases of divorce. Below it were the county courts." Lawrence M. Friedman, A History of American Law 40 (2d ed. 1985).

Court of Attachments. Hist. An inferior forest court with jurisdiction over trespasses of the royal forests. • The judges of this court (the verderers) met every 40 days to hear charges made by the royal foresters. Major trespass cases were heard by the justices in eyre. — Also termed wood-mote; forty-days court. See VERDERER.

Court of Audience. Hist. Eccles. law. A court in which the Archbishop of York or Canterbury exercised personal jurisdiction. • This court was abolished in 1963.

"Just as the bishop did not deprive himself of all jurisdiction by delegation to an official or commissary, so the archbishop did not originally deprive himself of all jurisdiction by delegation to the official principal. He possessed a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the court of the Archs., which was exercised in the court of Audience. In later times this jurisdiction was exercised by the judge of the court of Audience. At one time the archbishop may have exercised a considerable part of this jurisdiction in this court." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 601 (7th ed. 1956).

Court of Augmentations. Hist. A court established in 1536 by Henry VIII to determine controversies arising from the royal policy of taking over property owned by monasteries. • The court was merged into the Court of Exchequer in 1554.

Court of Canterbury. See COURT OF ARCHES.

Court of Cassation (ka-say-shan). The highest court of France. • The court's name derives from its power to quash (casser) the decrees of inferior courts. — Also termed (more formally) Cour de Cassation.

court of chancery. See CHANCERY (i).

court of chivalry. See HIGH COURT OF CHIVALRY.

Court of Civil Appeals. (1892) An intermediate appellate court in some states, such as Alabama and (formerly) Texas. [Cases: Courts C—210, 247.]

court of claims. 1. See COURT. 2. (cap.) See UNITED STATES COURT OF FEDERAL CLAIMS.

Court of Common Pleas. (16c) 1. Hist. A superior court having jurisdiction of all real actions and common pleas (i.e., actions between subjects). • The Court was presided over by a chief justice with four (later five) puisne judges. In 1873 it became the Common Pleas Division of the High Court of Justice. In 1881 it merged into the Queen's Bench Division. 2. An intermediate-level court in some states, such as Arkansas. [Cases: Courts C—211.] 3. A trial court of general jurisdiction in some states, such as Ohio, Pennsylvania, and South Carolina. [Cases: Courts C—150, 151, 153.] — Also termed Court of Common Bench. — Abbr. C.P.

"Common pleas is the kings Court now held in Westminster hall, but in auncient time moveable, as appeareth by the statute called Magna charta ... ." [U]ntil the time that Henry the third granted the great charter, there were but two courts in all, called the Kings courts: whereof one was the Exchequer, and the other, the kings bench, which was then called (cura Domini regis) and (cura regis) because it followed the court or king; and that upon the grant of that charter, the court of common pleas was erected and setied in one place certain: viz. at Westminster. ... . All civil causes both real and personall are, or were in former times, tried in this court, according to the strict lawe of the realme. and by Fortescue, cap. 50 it seemeth to have bene the onely court for real causes." John Cowell, The interpreter (1607).

court of conscience. Hist. A local English court that had jurisdiction over small-debt cases. • The court was so called because its judgments were supposed to reflect equity and good conscience. County courts assumed the jurisdiction of the courts of conscience in 1846.

Court of Convocation. Eccles. law. An assembly of high-ranking provincial officials and representatives of the lower clergy having jurisdiction over cases of heresy, schism, and other ecclesiastical matters.

Court of Criminal Appeals. (1856) 1. For each armed service, an intermediate appellate court that reviews court-martial decisions. • The court was established by the Military Justice Act of 1968. 10 USCA §§ 859—876. — Formerly termed Court of Military Review (abbr. CMR). [Cases: Military Justice C—1141.] 2. In some jurisdictions, such as Texas and Oklahoma, the highest appellate court that hears criminal cases.

Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. Hist. An Article III court created in 1929 to hear appeals in customs and patent cases. • This court was abolished in 1982 and was superseded by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit. — Abbr. CCPA. See UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FEDERAL CIRCUIT. [Cases: Patents C—113.]

Court of Delegates. Hist. Eccles. law. A court serving as the final court of appeal for admiralty and ecclesiastical matters. • The Court was established in 1534 to serve in the stead of the Papal Curia when the English Church severed its ties with the Papacy. Six delegates, appointed to hear only one case, made up the Court, usu. three persons trained in common law and three in civil law. This mixture led to confused rulings and unreliable precedents that hindered the Court's credibility and ultimately led to its dissolution. The Court was abolished in 1833 and its jurisdiction transferred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. — Also termed High Court of Delegates.

"The crown had an absolute discretion as to the person to be appointed. But, as the lawyers of Doctors' Commons were the only lawyers acquainted with canon or civil law, certain of them were usually included in the commission. ... . It is not surprising to find that the [Court of Delegates] was unsatisfactory. It was a shifting body, so that no general rules of procedure could be established. It did not as a rule give reasons for its decisions. Its members were only paid a guinea a day: and consequently it was usually composed of the junior civilians. On them, the judges of the common law courts, appointed as delegates, were obliged to rely for their law. In consequence of the dissatisfaction felt at its working the Ecclesiastical Commission of 1832, in a special report, recommended the transfer of its jurisdiction to the Privy Council. ... ." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 605 (7th ed. 1956).

court of equity. See court.

court of error. 1. Hist. Formerly, the Court of Exchequer Chamber and the House of Lords. • Appeals from common-law courts lay to the Court of Exchequer Chamber, and then to the House of Lords until 1873, when the Judicature Act gave jurisdiction of superior-court appeals to the Court of Appeal. Cf. COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER. 2. Generally, a court having jurisdiction to review a lower court’s rulings.

Court of Errors and Appeals. Hist. Formerly, the court of last resort in New Jersey and New York. — Also termed High Court of Errors and Appeals.

Court of Exchequer (eks-chek ar or eks-chek-ar). Hist. A former English superior court responsible primarily for adjudicating disputes about the collection of public revenue. • In 1873 it became the Exchequer Division of the High Court of Justice. In 1881 that Division was merged into the Queen’s Bench Division. See QUEEN’S BENCH DIVISION. Cf. CHAMBER OF ACCOUNTS.

Court of Exchequer Chamber. Hist. 1. An informal assembly of common-law judges who (sometimes with the Lord Chancellor) gathered to discuss important cases that had adjourned pending an opinion from the Court. • This body never became a court of law in a technical sense, but judges gave great weight to its decisions. The last reported decision of this body is from 1738.

"Earlier than these two statutory courts was the practice, which apparently originated about the time of Edward I, of informal meetings of the judges in the Exchequer Chamber to decide matters connected with litigation. . . . The purpose of the meeting was to bring before the judges a point of law which caused difficulty and which had arisen in a case being heard before one or other of the courts. Any resolution passed did not constitute a judgment; it was left to the court concerned to make the appropriate decree, and the official record made no reference to the informal decision. . . . Civil cases were debated in the Exchequer Chamber as late as the seventeenth century, and criminal cases continued to be 'reserved' for full discussion by all the common law judges until the nineteenth century." A.K.R. Kiralfy, Potter’s Outlines of English Legal History 202-04 (5th ed. 1958).

2. A court created by statute in 1357 to hear appeals from the Court of Exchequer. 3. A court created by statute in 1585 to hear appeals from the King’s Bench. • This court consisted of all the justices of the Common Pleas and the Barons of Exchequer who were serjeants. At least six judges were necessary to render a judgment.

"Parliament was only occasionally summoned in the sixteenth century: and as Parliament was the only court which could amend errors of the King’s Bench, the want of a court which could hold regular sessions was much felt. To supply this want a new court of Exchequer Chamber was created in 1585 for the purpose of amending the errors of the King’s Bench." 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 244 (7th ed. 1956).

4. A court charged with hearing appeals from the common-law courts of record. • This court was created in 1830 by combining the courts created by the statutes of 1357 and 1585. Appeals from one common-law court were heard by judges from the other two courts.

This complicated system of appellate courts was abolished in 1830, when a new Court of Exchequer Chamber was set up as the court of error from each of the three common law courts. It was composed of the judges of the two common law courts other than those of the court appealed from. At the same time the right of the King’s Bench to hear error from the Common Pleas was abolished. From the judgment of this new court a further appeal still lay to the House of Lords. This court was thus, until the Judicature Act, 1873, a court of intermediate appeals. Its jurisdiction after the Judicature Act passed to the Court of Appeal which was then created." W.J.V. Windeyer, Lectures on Legal History 144 (2d ed. 1949).

Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace. Hist. 1. English law. A court of criminal jurisdiction held in each county (or borough) once in every quarter of a year. • The court was made up of a county’s justices of the peace. It committed certain cases to the Assizes. Quarter Sessions were abolished in 1971, with most jurisdiction transferred to the Crown Court. — Often shortened to Quarter Sessions; Sessions.

"The court of general quarter sessions of the peace is a court that must be held in every county, once in every quarter of a year . . . . It is held before two or more justices of the peace, one of which must be of the quorum. The jurisdiction of this court, by statute 34 Edw. III. c. 1, extends to the trying and determining all felonies and trespasses whatsoever, though they seldom, if ever, try any greater offence than small felonies within the benefit of clergy. . . ." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 268 (1769).

2. A court held in some states four times a year with jurisdiction over misdemeanors and occasionally tasks of an administrative nature, such as the care of public roads and bridges. — Often shortened to Quarter Sessions Court. — Also termed Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace.

Court of Great Sessions in Wales. Hist. A common-law court established in 1543 in Wales with jurisdiction equivalent to that of the English assizes. • The Court of Great Sessions was bound to follow English law, but not necessarily English case precedent. — Also termed King’s Great Sessions in Wales.
"There was no outcry when, in 1536, 'the sinister usages and customs' of the Welsh were abrogated and Welsh subjects were granted the same laws and liberties as the English. . . . A new system of courts, called the Great Sessions in Wales, was set up. The courts were to sit twice a year in four circuits, each comprising three counties, and, to each circuit were appointed justices 'learned in the laws of this realm'. These courts operated alongside the English courts, and they had the same jurisdiction in Wales as the King's Bench and Common Pleas had in England. . . . In 1830 the Great Sessions were abolished, and by complete procedural assimilation England and Wales became at last one unified jurisdiction, two extra circuits being added to the English assize system." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 37-38 (3d ed. 1990).

Court of High Commission. Hist. Eccles. law. A tribunal responsible for inquiring into religious offenses such as the holding of heretical opinions, and absence from church. • Functioning as a court, the High Commission also prosecuted violations of the Acts of Supremacy and Uniformity (1559), the statutes that gave the Crown supreme power over the Church of England. The Commission's broad powers and use of civil-law procedures in ways counter to the common law (such as compelling suspects to testify against themselves) sparked opposition to its existence. Its close relationship with the Court of Star Chamber hastened its demise (along with the Star Chamber) in 1641. — Also termed High Commission Court.

"[T]he court of the king's high commission in causes ecclesiastical . . . was intended to vindicate the dignity and peace of the church, by reforming, ordering, and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offences, contempts, and enormities. Under the shelter of which very general words, means were found in that and the two succeeding reigns, to vest in the high commissioners extraordinary and almost despotic powers, of fining and imprisoning; which they exerted much beyond the degree of the offence itself, and frequently over offences by no means of spiritual cognizance. For these reasons this court was justly abolished by Statute 16 Car. I, c. 11. And the weak and illegal attempt that was made to revive it, during the reign of King James the second, served only to hasten that infatuated prince's ruin." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 67-68 (1768).

Court of Honor. Hist. English law. A feudal court of the manor. 2. English law. A court with jurisdiction to hear complaints concerning either affronts to honor or encroachments in precedence rights, heraldry, or coat-armor. 3. A tribunal of army officers convened to review and punish any dereliction from a code of honor.

Court of Hustings (has-tingz). Hist. 1. English law. A local court with jurisdiction over real and mixed actions, held in the Guildhall of London before the Recorder, the Lord Mayor, and Sheriff (the latter two officials serving as honorary judges). • This court dates from before the Conquest. 2. Formerly, a local court in Virginia. — Also termed curia burgi. See Hustings.

court of original jurisdiction. See court.

Court of Oyer and Terminer (oY-ar an[d] ter-ma-nar). (17c) 1. Hist. An assize court commissioned by the Crown to pass through the counties two or more times a year and hear felonies and treason cases. • The judges sat by virtue of several commissions, each of which, strictly speaking, created a separate and distinct court. A judge with an oyer and terminer commission, for example, was allowed to hear only cases of felony and treason; he could not try persons charged with other criminal offenses. But if the judge also carried a commission of gaol delivery (as most did), he could try all prisoners held in gaol for any offense; in this way most Courts of Oyer and Terminer gathered full criminal jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of the assize courts was taken over by the Crown Court in 1971. See ASSIZE (1); COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER; COMMISSION OF GAOL DELIVERY. 2. In some states, a court of higher criminal jurisdiction.

Court of Peculiars. Hist. Eccles. law. A branch of the Court of Arches that had jurisdiction over the provincial parishes of Canterbury that were exempt from the jurisdiction of the diocesan bishop and responsible to the metropolitan only. • The Court of Peculiars was abolished in the 19th century. See COURT OF ARCHES; PECULIAR.
court of petty sessions. See magistrate's court under court.

court of piepowder. See piepowder court.

Court of Pleas. Hist. A court of the county palatine of Durham, England having a local common-law jurisdiction. It was abolished in 1873, and its jurisdiction was transferred to the High Court. — Also termed Court of Pleas of Durham.

Court of Policies of Insurance. Hist. A court that determines in a summary way insurance-policy issues arising between merchants. The Court’s jurisdiction extended only to London, and appeal was taken to the Court of Chancery. The Court was abolished in 1863. — Also termed Court of Policies of Assurance.

Court of Private Land Claims. Hist. A federal court — in existence from 1891 to 1895 — with jurisdiction to hear private parties’ claims to public-domain land located in the southwestern part of the United States and deriving from Spanish or Mexican grants.

Court of Probate. 1. Hist. A court established in 1857 to receive the testamentary jurisdiction formerly held by the ecclesiastical courts. In 1873 the Court was merged into the High Court of Justice, where its jurisdiction was exercised by the Probate Divorce and Admiralty (now Family) Division. 2. See probate court under court.

Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace. See court of general quarter sessions of the peace.

Court of Queen’s Bench. See queen’s bench.

court of record. See court.

Court of Regard. Hist. A forest court responsible for looking into matters of waste and encroachment onto forest land (i.e., purpresture). The Court also ensured that the feet of all mastiffs — a breed allowed in royal forests as guard dogs — within the forest were declawed and cut so as to prevent them from chasing deer.

Court of Requests. Hist. A royal court whose jurisdiction was mainly civil, though it exercised quasi-criminal jurisdiction in offenses such as riot and forgery. Dating from 1483, the Court of Requests was a part of the Privy Council. It was disbanded in 1641 when Parliament limited the Privy Council’s judicial functions.

“The establishment of the court of Requests was due to the large increase in the judicial business of the Council and the Chancery under the Tudors. . . . It was related both to the judicial side of the Council, which, as we shall see, came, in the course of the Tudor period, to be known as the court of Star Chamber, and to the court of Chancery. . . . [F]rom the end of Henry VIII’s reign onwards, the legal assessors of the court assumed entire control, with the result that it became a court which was quite separate from the court of Star Chamber. These legal assessors were styled Masters of Requests, and from their title the court got its name.” — William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 412-13 (7th ed. 1956).

court of review. See appellate court under court.

Court of Session. 1. Scots law. The supreme Scottish civil court. Its jurisdiction corresponds generally to the English High Court of Justice. The Court of Session is divided into Outer House and Inner House. In Outer House, one judge hears cases of first instance. The Outer House’s jurisdiction corresponds generally to the English High Court of Justice. The Outer House has two appellate chambers, the First and Second Division, in which three-judge panels sit. The Inner House’s jurisdiction corresponds generally to the English Court of Appeal. The Court of Session also has several Lords Ordinary, who sit individually as trial judges. — Also termed Supreme Civil Court in Scotland. 2. In a few states, a court with jurisdiction over criminal cases.

Court of Shepway. Hist. The Court of the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, exercising civil jurisdiction. The civil jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports was abolished in 1855. See cinque ports.

court of special jurisdiction. See limited court under court.

court of special session. See court.

Court of Star Chamber. See star chamber (1).

court of summary jurisdiction. See magistrate’s court under court.

Court of Swainmote. See court of sweinmote.

Court of Sweinmote (swayn-moht). Hist. A medieval forest court with jurisdiction over a variety of matters, esp. the right to graze animals during the summer when deer were fawning. The forest freeholders (the sweins) made up the jury of the Court. By the 14th century, the Court’s jurisdiction had expanded, and it acquired a form similar to the eyre courts. — Also spelled Court of Sweinmote.

Court of Teinds. See teind court.

Court of the Chief Justice in Eyre (air). Hist. An eyre court responsible for trying offenses against the forest laws. The jurisdiction of this Court was similar to that of the Court of Sweinmote. — Also termed Court of Justice Seat.

Court of the Earl Marshal. 1. COURT OF THE LORD HIGH CONSTABLE AND EARL MARSHAL. 2. HIGH COURT OF CHIVALRY.

Court of the Lord High Admiral. See high court of admiralty.

Court of the Lord High Constable and Earl Marshal. Hist. A court having jurisdiction over diverse military matters, such as treason, prisoners of war, and disputed coats of arms. The Lord High Constable and the Earl Marshal were the top military officials of the Norman kings. After the office of Lord High Constable was forfeited in 1521, the court continued on as the Court of the Earl Marshal, but its jurisdiction was reduced to questions of chivalry only. Cf. HIGH COURT OF CHIVALRY.

Court of the Lord High Steward. Hist. A court commissioned to try a peer indicted for treason or a felony. The Court met only if the House of Lords was not in session. The Lord High Steward sat as a judge and decided questions of law, and the peers decided facts only. The Court last sat in 1688.
Court of the Lord High Steward of the Universities. Hist. A court convened to try scholars, esp. Oxford or Cambridge students, who have been indicted for treason, felony, or mayhem.

Court of the Marshalsea (mahr-shal-see). Hist. A court that moved about with the king, and had jurisdiction over certain cases arising within 12 miles of the king’s residence (an area known as the verge). • The Court’s steward and marshal acted as judges of the Court, and heard criminal cases and the common pleas of debt, covenant, and certain trespasses. The court’s migratory nature made it inconvenient for litigants, and prompted its abolition in 1849. — Also termed Court of the Steward and Marshal. Cf. Palace Court.

“Coke points out that all the Acts passed concerning this court restrained, or explained, but never added to its jurisdiction. He decided, in the Case of the Marshalsea, that it could not try the newer forms of action such as assumpsit and trover. Its once general jurisdiction had passed to the court of King’s Bench, and the attitude of that court to the more limited court of the Marshalsea made the court of the Marshalsea almost useless. There were complaints in the seventeenth century of the conduct of its officials, and, as it was obliged to follow the king in his progresses, it was a court extremely inconvenient to use.” 1 William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 208 (7th ed. 1956).

Court of the Official Principal. See court of arches.

Court of the Steward and Marshal. See court of the marshalsea.

Court of the Steward of the King’s Household. Hist. A court having jurisdiction over criminal cases involving a member of the royal household. • This court’s jurisdiction was at first limited to acts of violence by the king’s servants toward a member of the king’s council, but it was later given broader criminal authority. The Court was abolished in 1828.

Court of Verge. 1. See verge (1). 2. See verge (2).

Court of Veterans Appeals, U.S. See United States Court of Veterans Appeals.

Court of Wards and Liveries. Hist. A court created in 1540 to assert the Crown’s right to income from a variety of feudal tenures. • The Court’s unpopularity led to its abolition in 1660.

“[I]nquests of office were more frequently in practice than at present, during the continuance of the military tenures among us: when, upon the death of every one of the king’s tenants, an inquest of office was held, called an inquisitio post mortem, to enquire of what lands he died seised, who was his heir, and of what age, in order to entitle the king to his marriage, wardship, relief, primogeniture, or other advantages, as the circumstances of the case might turn out. To superintend and regulate these enquiries, the court of wards and liveries was instituted by statute 32 Hen. VIII c. 46 which was abolished at the restoration of king Charles the second, together with the oppressive tenures upon which it was founded.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 258 (1768).

court-ordered arbitration. See judicial arbitration under arbitration.

court packing. A unsuccessful proposal — made in 1937 by President Franklin D. Roosevelt — to increase the number of U.S. Supreme Court justices from nine to fifteen. • The ostensible purpose of the proposal was to increase the court’s efficiency, but President Roosevelt wanted to appoint justices who would not block his administration’s New Deal programs.
court papers. (17c) All documents that a party files with the court, including pleadings, motions, notices, and the like. — Often shortened to papers. — Also termed suit papers.
court probation. See bench probation under probation.
court recorder. See recorder.
court reporter. (1894) 1. A person who records testimony, stenographically or by electronic or other means, and when requested, prepares a transcript (the deposition could not start until the court reporter arrived). — Also termed (in Brit) official shorthand writer. Cf. court recorder under recorder. [Cases: Courts C=57; Trial C=23] 2. REPORTER OF DECISIONS.
court roll. Hist. A record of a manor’s tenures; esp., a record of the terms by which the various tenants held their estates. • Copyhold tenure, for example, developed from the practice of maintaining court rolls. See copyhold.
courtroom. The part of a courthouse where trials and hearings take place. Cf. judge’s chamber under chamber. [Cases: Courts C=72] courtroom deputy. See deputy.
courtroom privilege. See judicial privilege under privilege (1). court rules. (17c) Regulations having the force of law and governing practice and procedure in the various courts, such as the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the U.S. Supreme Court Rules, and the Federal Rules of Evidence, as well as any local rules that a court promulgates. — Also termed rules of court. [Cases: Courts C=78–85; Federal Civil Procedure C=21] courts of the franchise. See franchise court. court system. The network of courts in a jurisdiction.
court trial. See bench trial under trial. court witness. See witness.
cousin. 1. A child of one’s aunt or uncle. — Also termed first cousin; full cousin; cousin-german. 2. A relative descended from one’s ancestor (such as a grandparent) by two or more steps in a diverging line. 3. Any distant relative by blood or marriage; a kinsman or kinswoman. cousin-german. A first cousin; a child of a full sibling of one’s mother or father. See german. cousin-in-law. 1. The husband or wife of one’s cousin. 2. A cousin of one’s husband or one’s wife. cousin once removed. 1. A child of one's cousin. 2. A cousin of one's parent.
cousin twice removed. 1. A grandchild of one's cousin. 2. A cousin of one's grandparent.

first cousin. See cousin (1). second cousin. A person related to another by descending from the same great-grandfather or great-grandmother.
third cousin. A person related to another by descending from the same great-great-grandfather or great-great-grandmother.

covenant (kə-və-nant), n. (14c) 1. A formal agreement or promise, usu. in a contract or deed, to do or not do a particular act.

absolute covenant. (17c) A covenant that is not qualified or limited by any condition. Cf. conditional covenant.

affirmative covenant. A covenant that obligates a party to do some act; esp., an agreement that real property will be used in a certain way. • An affirmative covenant is more than a restriction on the use of property. For the real-property sense, see affirmative covenant under COVENANT (4). Cf. negative covenant. [Cases: Covenants § 49, 69.]

assertory covenant (ə-sər-ə-ree). One that affirmatively states certain facts; an affirming promise under seal.

auxiliary covenant (awg-zil-ə-ree). A covenant that does not relate directly to the primary subject of the agreement, but to something connected to it. Cf. principal covenant.
collateral covenant (kə-la-tər-əl). A covenant entered into in connection with the grant of something, but that does not relate immediately to the thing granted; esp., a covenant in a deed or other sealed instrument not pertaining to the conveyed property. Cf. inherent covenant.

concurrent covenant. (1819) A covenant that requires performance by one party at the same time as another's performance.

conditional covenant. (17c) A covenant that is qualified by a condition. Cf. absolute covenant.

continuing covenant. A covenant that requires the successive performance of acts, such as an agreement to pay rent in installments.
covenant in deed. See express covenant.
covenant in law. See implied covenant. covenant not to compete. See noncompetition covenant. covenant not to execute. A covenant in which a party who has won a judgment agrees not to enforce it. • This covenant is most common in insurance law. [Cases: Insurance § 3367; Release § 37.]
covenant not to sue. (18c) A covenant in which a party having a right of action agrees not to assert that right in litigation. — Also termed contract not to sue. [Cases: Release § 37, 37.]

“A covenant not to sue is a promise by the creditor not to sue either permanently or for a limited period. If the promise is one never to sue it operates as a discharge just as does a release. The theory is that should the creditor sue despite his promise not to, the debtor has a counterclaim for damages for breach of the creditor's covenant not to sue which is equal to and cancels the original claim. ... If the covenant is not to sue for a limited time, the modern view is that the covenant may be raised as an affirmative defense to any action brought in violation of the covenant.” John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 211-11, 878-79 (3d ed. 1987).

dependent covenant. A covenant that imposes a duty that depends on the other party's prior performance.

executory covenant. A covenant that has been fully performed.

express covenant. (17c) A covenant created by the words of the parties. — Also termed covenant in deed. Cf. implied covenant.

implied covenant. (17c) A covenant that can be inferred from the whole agreement and the conduct of the parties. — Also termed covenant in law. See implied term under TERM (3). Cf. express covenant.

implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. (1924) An implied covenant to cooperate with the other party to an agreement so that both parties may obtain the full benefits of the agreement; an implied covenant to refrain from any act that would injure a contracting party's right to receive the benefit of the contract. • Breach of this covenant is often termed bad faith. See BAD FAITH (2). [Cases: Contracts § 168.]

implied negative covenant. (1890) A covenant binding a grantor not to permit use of any reserved right in a manner that might destroy the benefits that would otherwise inure to the grantee.

independent covenant. A covenant that imposes a duty that does not depend on the other party's prior performance. Cf. dependent covenant.

inherent covenant. A covenant that relates directly to land, such as a covenant of quiet enjoyment. Cf. collateral covenant.

intransitive covenant. A covenant whose performance does not pass from the original covenantor to the covenantor's representatives. Cf. transitive covenant.

joint covenant. A covenant that binds two or more covenantors together. Cf. several covenant.

negative covenant. (18c) A covenant that requires a party to refrain from doing something; esp., in a real-estate financing transaction, the borrower's promise to the lender not to encumber or transfer the real estate as long as the loan remains unpaid. Cf. affirmative covenant.
noncompetition covenant. A promise, usu. in a sale-of-business, partnership, or employment contract, not to engage in the same type of business for a stated time in the same market as the buyer, partner, or employer. ● Noncompetition covenants are valid to protect business goodwill in the sale of a company. In other contexts, they are generally disfavored as restraints of trade; courts generally enforce them for the duration of the business relationship, but provisions that extend beyond the termination of that relationship must be reasonable in scope, time, and territory. — Also termed noncompetition agreement; noncompete covenant; covenant not to compete; restrictive covenant; promise not to compete; contract not to compete. [Cases: Contracts 42-64.]

A covenant is properly defined as a promise made in deed, although in practice the term is used rather more loosely to mean simply an obligation affecting a landowner whether created by deed or not. Peter Butt, Land Law 334–35 (2d ed. 1988).

In their nature, covenants are first cousins to easements appurtenant. The burdened land corresponds to the servient tenement, the benefitted land, to a dominant tenement. In concept, the main difference between easements and covenants is that, whereas an easement allows its holder to go upon and to do something upon the servient tenement, the beneficiary of a covenant may not enter the burdened land, but may require the owner of that land to do, or more likely not to do, something on that land. Roger A. Cunningham et al., The Law of Property § 6.13, at 467 (2d ed. 1993).

affirmative covenant. An agreement that real property will be used in a certain way. ● An affirmative covenant is more than a restriction on the use of property. It requires the owner to undertake certain acts on the property. For a more general definition of this term, see affirmative covenant under COVENANT (1).

covenant against encumbrances. (1807) A grantor's promise that the property has no visible or invisible encumbrances. ● In a special warranty deed, the covenant is limited to encumbrances made by the grantor. — Also termed general covenant against encumbrances. Cf. special covenant against encumbrances. [Cases: Covenants 42-64.]

covenant appurtenant (a-par-to-nant). (1899) A covenant that is connected with the grantor's land; a covenant running with the land. Cf. covenant in gross. [Cases: Covenants 53-70.]

covenant for quiet enjoyment. (17c) 1. A covenant insuring against the consequences of a defective title or any other disturbance of the title. [Cases: Covenants 43, 65. 2. A covenant ensuring that the tenant will not be evicted or disturbed by the grantor or a person having a lien or superior title. ● This covenant is sometimes treated as being synonymous with covenant of warranty. — Also termed covenant of quiet enjoyment.

covenant for title. (18c) A covenant that binds the grantor to ensure the completeness, security, and continuance of the title transferred. ● This covenant usu. includes the covenants for seisin, against encumbrances, for the right to convey, for quiet enjoyment, and of warranty. [Cases: Covenants 38-48, 62–67.]

covenant of good right to convey. See covenant of seisin.

covenant of nonclaim. (1848) A covenant barring a grantor or the grantor's heirs from claiming title in the conveyed land.

covenant of quiet enjoyment. See covenant for quiet enjoyment.

covenant of seisin (see-zin). (18c) A covenant, usu. appearing in a warranty deed, stating that the grantor has an estate, or the right to convey an estate, of the quality and size that the grantor purports to convey. ● For the covenant to be valid, the grantor must have both title and possession at the time of the grant. — Also termed covenant of good right to convey; right-to-convey covenant. [Cases: Covenants 40-62.]

covenant of warranty. (18c) A covenant by which the grantor agrees to defend the grantee against any lawful or reasonable claim of superior title by a third party and to indemnify the grantee for any loss sustained by the claim. • This covenant is sometimes treated as being synonymous with covenant for quiet enjoyment. The covenant is not breached if the grantor fails to defend the grantee against an invalid claim. See warranty (1). [Cases: Covenants ⊗=46-48, 67.]

covenant running with the land. (18c) A covenant intimately and inherently involved with the land and therefore binding subsequent owners and successor grantees indefinitely. — Also termed real covenant. [Cases: Covenants ⊗=53-70.]

The important consequence of a covenant running with the land is that its burden or benefit will thereby be imposed or conferred upon a subsequent owner of the property who never actually agreed to it. Running covenants thereby achieve the transfer of duties and rights in a way not permitted by traditional contract law. Roger Bernhardt, Real Property in a Nutshell 212 (3d ed. 1993).

covenant running with the title. 1. A covenant that relates to the land but has a specific or reasonably determinable expiration time. 2. See covenant running with the land.

covenant to convey. A covenant in which the covenantor agrees to transfer an estate's title to the covenantee.

covenant to renew. An executory contract that gives a lessee the right to renew the lease.

covenant to stand seised (seezd). Archaic. A covenant to convey land to a relative. • This covenant could not be used to convey land to a stranger; the only consideration that supports the covenant is the relationship by blood or marriage. [Cases: Deeds ⊗=24.]

future covenant. A covenant that can be breached only upon interference with the possession of the grantee or the grantee's successors. • The covenants in this class are the covenant for further assurances, the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and the covenant of warranty. The distinction between future and present covenants becomes important in determining when the statute of limitations begins to run. Cf. present covenant.

general covenant against encumbrances. See covenant against encumbrances.

implied reciprocal covenant. A presumption that a promisee has, in return for a promise made respecting land, impliedly made a promise to the promisor respecting other land. — Also termed implied reciprocal servitude.

personal covenant. A covenant that creates a personal right or obligation enforceable only between the covenanting parties and that is not binding on the heirs or assigns of the parties. Cf. covenant running with the land. [Cases: Covenants ⊗=1.]

present covenant. A covenant that can be breached only at the time of conveyance. • The three covenants in this class are the covenant against encumbrances, the covenant of right to convey, and the covenant of seisin. Cf. future covenant.

protection covenant. See protection covenant.

real covenant. See covenant running with the land.

restrictive covenant. (1811) 1. A private agreement, usu. in a deed or lease, that restricts the use or occupancy of real property, esp. by specifying lot sizes, building lines, architectural styles, and the uses to which the property may be put. • Some restrictive covenants, such as race-based restrictions on transfers, are unenforceable but do not necessarily void the deed. — Also termed restrictive covenant in equity; equitable easement; equitable servitude. [Cases: Covenants ⊗=49-52, 69.] 2. See noncompetition covenant under covenant (1).

special covenant against encumbrances. (1860) A grantor's promise that the property is free of encumbrances created by the grantor only, not the grantor's predecessors. See special warranty deed under deed. Cf. covenant against encumbrances. [Cases: Covenants ⊗=42, 64.]

covenant, vb. (14c) To promise or undertake in a covenant; to agree formally.

covenantee (kav-ə-nən-tē). (17c) The person to whom a promise by covenant is made; one entitled to the benefit of a covenant.

covenant of good right to convey. See covenant of seisin under covenant (4).

covenant running with the land. See covenant (4).

Coventry Act (kav-an-tree or kov-). Hist. An 1803 English statute establishing the death penalty for anyone who, with malice aforethought, did "cut out or disable the tongue, put out an eye, slit the nose, cut off a nose or lip, or cut off or disable any limb or member of any subject; with the intention in so doing to maim or disfigure him."

Cf. joint venture. [Cases: Joint Adventures ⊗=1.1.]

covenantor (koh-ven-chər). (1913) A person who undertakes a joint venture with one or more persons. — Also termed co-adventurer. Cf. joint venture. [Cases: Joint Adventures ⊗=1.1.]

cover, n. The purchase on the open market, by the buyer in a breach-of-contract dispute, of goods to substitute for those promised but never delivered by the seller. • Under UCC § 2-712, the buyer can recover from the seller the difference between the cost of the substituted goods and the original contract price. [Cases: Sales ☞ 418(7).]

coverage, n. (1912) 1. Inclusion of a risk under an insurance policy; the risks within the scope of an insurance policy. [Cases: Insurance ☞ 2091.] — cover, vb.

dependent coverage. An insurance provision for protection of an insured’s dependents.

full coverage. Insurance protection that pays for the full amount of a loss with no deduction.

2. The ratio between corporate pretax income and corporate liability for bond interest payments.

cover baron (kav-art bar-on). [Law French] Hist. The condition or status of a married woman at common law. — Also written covert baron.

"Coverture, is a french word signifying any thing that covereth, as apparel, a coverlet . . . . It is particularly applied in our common law, to the estate and condition of a married man, who by the laws of our realm, is in potestate viri and therefore disabled to contract with any, to the prejudice of her selfe or his husband, without his consent and privity; or at the least, without his allowance and confirmation." [John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).]

"Covereture is a secret conspiracy or agreement between two or more persons to injure or defraud another. — Also spelled covine."

"Covine is a secret assent determined in the hearts of two or more, to the prejudice of another: As if a tenant for term of life, or tenant in tail, will secretly conspire with another, that the other shall recover against the tenant for life the land which he holds, &c. in prejudice of him in the reversion." [Terres de la Ley 129 (1st Am. ed. 1812).]

covinous (kav-a-nas), adj. Hist. Of a deceitful or fraudulent nature.

cosen (kaz-an), vb. Hist. To cheat or defraud. — Also spelled cosen.

cozening (kaz-on-ing), Hist. A deceitful practice; the offense of cheating, or fraudulent dealing. — Also spelled cosening. Cf. stellionatus.

"Cosening is an offence unnamed, whereby any thing is done guilefully in or out of contracts, which cannot be fitly termed by any specialised name. It is called stellionatus in the civil law." [John Cowell, The Interpreter (1607).]

crack. vb. Slang. 1. To open (a lock). 2. To decode (security information); esp., to decipher or discover (a code, a password, etc. needed to break into a computer, network, server, or database). Cf. hack. 3. To bypass (an encryption or a security device, esp. one designed to prevent unauthorized access, as in a cable television box, or copying, as in a DVD player). 4. To hack (a computer, network, server, or database) with the intention of causing damage or disruption.

cracking. n. A gerrymandering technique in which a geographically concentrated political or racial group that is large enough to constitute a district’s dominant force

craft union. See union.

cramdown, n. (1954) Court confirmation of a Chapter 11 bankruptcy plan despite the opposition of certain creditors. • Under the Bankruptcy Code, a court may confirm a plan — even if it has not been accepted by all classes of creditors — if the plan (1) has been accepted by at least one impaired class, (2) does not discriminate unfairly, and (3) is fair and equitable. 11 USCA § 1129(b). [Cases: Bankruptcy C=3563.] — cram down, vb:

crash-and-dash. See ram raid.

crashworthiness doctrine. (1969) Products liability. The principle that the manufacturer of a product will be held strictly liable for injuries occurring in a collision, even if the collision results from an independent cause, to the extent that a defect in the product causes injuries above and beyond those that would have occurred in the collision itself. — Also termed second-collision doctrine; second-impact doctrine. [Cases: Products Liability C=20.8.]

crassa ignorantia (kras-a ig-na-ran-shee-a). Hist. Gross ignorance, esp. in circumstances where a person was able to acquire knowledge and should have done so.

"In the Civil Law: Crassa negligentia is termed magna culpa or lata culpa, and it is in some cases deemed equivalent to fraud or deceit. . . . in the Common Law: it is defined to be the want of that care which every man of common sense, under the circumstances, takes of his own property." Henry C. Adams, A Juridical Glossary 510 (1886).

crastino (kras-ta-noh). [Law Latin] Hist. Tomorrow; on the morrow. • The return day of writs, so-called because the court terms always began on a saint's day; writs were therefore returnable the day after.

create a blank. Parliamentary law. To amend a motion by striking out one or more terms and replacing them with blanks rather than different terms. See amendment by striking out and inserting under amendment (3). • This form allows a vote on several competing proposals at one time, rather than the usual process of voting separately upon each proposal. See blank (2).

creationism. The teaching of the biblical version of the creation of the universe. • The United States Supreme Court held unconstitutional a Louisiana law that forbade the teaching of the theory of evolution unless biblical creation was also taught. The Court found the law violated the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment because it lacked a "clear secular purpose." Edwards v. Aguillard, 482 U.S. 578, 107 S.Ct. 2573 (1987).

See anti-evolution statute. [Cases: Constitutional Law C= 1354(2); Schools C= 165.]

scientific creationism. A doctrine holding that the biblical account of creation is supported by scientific evidence.

creation science. The interpretation of scientific evidence, arguments, and knowledge to support creationism. See creationism.

creative sentence. See alternative sentence under sentence.

creative work. See work of authorship under work (2).

creativity. Copyright. The degree to which a work displays imaginativeness beyond what a person of very ordinary talents might create. • Labor and expense are not elements of creativity; for that reason, they are not protected by copyright. Feist Pubs. Inc. v. Rural Tel. Serv. Co., 499 U.S. 340, 111 S.Ct. 1282 (1991). Cf. originality, sweat-of-the-brow doctrine. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C=12.]

"Where creativity refers to the nature of the work itself, originality refers to the nature of the author's contribution to the work. Thus, a public domain painting may evince great creativity, but if a copyright claimant adds nothing of his own to it, by way of reproduction or otherwise, then copyright will be denied on the basis of lack of originality. Conversely, a work may be entirely the product of the claimant's independent efforts, and hence original, but may nevertheless be denied protection as a work of art if it is completely lacking in any modicum of creativity." 1 Melville B. Nimmer & David Nimmer, Nimmer on Copyright § 2.08[B][2], at 2-88 (Supp. 1995).

creature of statute. (1854) A doctrine, governmental agency, etc. that would not exist but for a legislative act that brought it into being.

credential. (usu. pl.) 1. A document or other evidence that proves one's authority or expertise. 2. A testimonial that a person is entitled to credit or to the right to exercise official power. 3. The letter of credence given to an ambassador or other representative of a foreign country. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls C=4.] 4. Parliamentary law. Evidence of a delegate's entitlement to be seated and vote in a convention or other deliberative assembly. • Before the meeting begins, the evidence usu. takes the form of a certificate or proof of election or appointment, which the delegate presents to a credentials committee so that the committee can list the delegate on its roster. During the meeting, the evidence usu. takes the form of a badge or card that the credentials committee issues to each delegate on its roster. See credentials committee under committee. — credential, vb.

credentials committee. See committee.

credibility, n. (16c) The quality that makes something (as a witness or some evidence) worthy of belief. [Cases: Criminal Law C= 553; Evidence C= 588.] — credible, adj.

credible evidence. See evidence.
creditable witness. See witness.

credit, n. (16c) 1. Belief; trust (<the jury gave credit to Benson's version>). 2. One's ability to borrow money; the faith in one's ability to pay debts (). 3. The time that a seller gives the buyer to make the payment that is due (<30 days' credit>). 4. The availability of funds either from a financial institution or under a letter of credit (<the bank extended a line of credit to the customer>.

bank credit. Credit that a bank makes available to a borrower.

consumer credit. Credit extended to an individual to facilitate the purchase of consumer goods and services. [Cases: Consumer Credit <1>] installment credit. Consumer credit scheduled to be repaid in two or more payments, usu. at regular intervals. • The seller ordinarily exacts finance charges.

noninstallment credit. Consumer credit arranged to be repaid in a single payment. • Examples include doctors' and plumbers' bills.

revolving credit. A consumer-credit arrangement that allows the borrower to buy goods or secure loans on a continuing basis as long as the outstanding balance does not exceed a specified limit. • Also termed open credit; revolving charge account. Cf. revolver loan under loan. [Cases: Consumer Credit <34>.]

5. LETTER OF CREDIT (<the bank issued a credit in favor of the exporter>). 6. A deduction from an amount due; an accounting entry reflecting an addition to revenue or net worth (<confirm that the credit was properly applied to my account>). Cf. debit. 7. TAX CREDIT (<the $500 credit reduced their income tax liability by $500>.

accumulated-earnings credit. Tax. A deduction allowed in arriving at a corporation's accumulated taxable income. • It offsets the base on which the tax is assessed by reducing the taxable base by the greater of $250,000 or the accumulated earnings retained for the reasonable needs of the corporation, reduced by the net capital gain. IRC (26 USCA) § 535. See accumulated-earnings tax under tax.

credit, vb. (17c) 1. To believe (<the jury did not credit this testimony>). 2. To enter (as an amount) on the credit side of an account (<the account was credited with $500>. creditable. 1. Worthy of being believed; credible (<creditable evidence>). 2. Capable of being ascribed or credited (<creditable service time>). 3. Reputable; respectable (<creditable witness>.

credit balance. Accounting. The status of an account when the sum of the credit entries exceeds the sum of the debit entries.

credit bureau. (1874) An organization that compiles information on people's creditworthiness and publishes it in the form of reports that are used chiefly by merchants and service-providers who deal directly with customers. • The practices of credit bureaus are regulated by federal (and often state) law. Most bureaus are members of the Associated Credit Bureaus of America. Cf. credit-reporting bureau. [Cases: Credit Reporting Agencies <1–4>] credit card. An identification card used to obtain items on credit, usu. on a revolving basis. See revolving credit under credit. Cf. debit card. [Cases: Consumer Credit <8>] credit-card cramming. 1. A credit-card issuer's practice of charging consumers for optional goods or services that the consumers have not agreed to pay or do not understand. • For example, the credit-card crammer may offer the consumer a free service for a limited period without making it clear that if the service is not canceled when the period ends, it will be automatically renewed for a fee. [Cases: Consumer Credit <8>]. 2. A single act of charging a consumer's credit card without authorization, particularly for goods or services that the consumer did not agree to or receive. [Cases: Consumer Credit <8>] credit-card crime. (1970) The offense of using a credit card to purchase something with knowledge that (1) the card is stolen or forged, (2) the card has been revoked or canceled, or (3) the card's use is unauthorized. [Cases: Consumer Credit <20>]

credit insurance. See insurance.

credit life insurance. See life insurance.

credit line. See line of credit.

credit memorandum. A document issued by a seller to a buyer confirming that the seller has credited (i.e., reduced) the buyer's account because of an error, return, or allowance.

credit mobilier. A company or association that carries on a banking business by making loans on the security of personal property.

creditor. (15c) 1. One to whom a debt is owed; one who gives credit for money or goods. • Also termed debtee. 2. A person or entity with a definite claim against another, esp. a claim that is capable of adjustment and liquidation. 3. Bankruptcy. A person or entity having a claim against the debtor predating the order for relief concerning the debtor. [Cases: Bankruptcy <2822>]. 4. Roman law. One to whom any obligation is owed, whether contractual or otherwise. Cf. debtor.

attaching creditor. A creditor who has caused an attachment to be issued and levied on the debtor's property. [Cases: Attachment <16>]

catholic creditor. Scots law. A person who has a security interest in more than one piece of the debtor's property.

certificate creditor. A creditor of a municipal corporation who receives a certificate of indebtedness rather than payment because the municipality cannot pay the debt. Cf. warrant creditor.
conditional creditor. Civil law. A creditor who has either a future right of action or a right of action in expectancy.

creditor at large. A creditor who has not established the debt by reducing it to judgment, or who has not otherwise secured a lien on any of the debtor's property. See unsecured creditor.

domestic creditor. A creditor who resides in the same state or country as the debtor or the debtor's property.

double creditor. A creditor who has a lien on two funds. Cf. single creditor.

execution creditor. A judgment creditor who has caused an execution to issue on the judgment. [Cases: Execution C≈17.]

foreign creditor. A creditor who resides in a different state or country from that of the debtor or the debtor's property.

gap creditor. Bankruptcy. A creditor who extends credit to, lends money to, or has a claim arise against the debtor in the period between the filing of an involuntary bankruptcy petition and the entry of the order for relief. • Under the Bankruptcy Code, a gap creditor's claim receives second priority, immediately below administrative claims. 11 USCA §§ 502(f), 507(a)(2). [Cases: Bankruptcy C≈2833.]

hypothetical creditor. Bankruptcy. An actual or code-created judicial-lien creditor or bona fide purchaser who establishes a bankruptcy trustee's status under the Bankruptcy Code's priority scheme, claiming property through the debtor at the time of the bankruptcy filing. 11 USCA § 544. — Also termed hypothetical lien creditor. [Cases: Bankruptcy C≈2704, 2705.]

joint creditor. A creditor who is entitled, along with another creditor, to demand payment from a debtor.

judgment creditor. See judgment creditor.

junior creditor. A creditor whose claim accrued after that of another creditor; a creditor who holds a debt that is subordinate to another's.

known creditor. A creditor whose identity or claim is either known or reasonably ascertainable by the debtor. • Known creditors are entitled to notice of the debtor's bankruptcy or corporate dissolution, as well as notice of any deadline for filing proofs of claim.

lien creditor. A creditor whose claim is secured by a lien on the debtor's property. UCC § 9-102(a)(52). [Cases: Secured Transactions C≈140.]

preferred creditor. A creditor with a superior right to payment, such as a holder of a perfected security interest as compared to a holder of an unsecured claim. [Cases: Secured Transactions C≈138-140, 168.]

principal creditor. A creditor whose claim or demand greatly exceeds the claims of other creditors.

prior creditor. A creditor who is given priority in payment from the debtor's assets.

secondary creditor. A creditor whose claim is subordinate to a preferred creditor.

secured creditor. A creditor who has the right, on the debtor's default, to proceed against collateral and apply it to the payment of the debt. UCC § 9-102(a)(72). — Also termed secured party.

"Secured party" means (A) a person in whose favor a security interest is created or provided for under a security agreement, whether or not any obligation to be secured is outstanding; (B) a person that holds an agricultural lien; (C) a consignor; (D) a person to which accounts, chattel paper, payment intangibles, or promissory notes have been sold; or (E) if a security interest or agricultural lien is created or provided for in favor of a trustee, agent, collateral agent, or other representative, that representative. UCC § 9-102(a)(50).

single creditor. In the marshaling of assets, a creditor with a lien on one fund. See rule of marshaling assets. Cf. double creditor.

specialty creditor. A creditor to whom an heir is liable for a decedent's debts to the extent of the land inherited. • Historically, unless the creditor obtained a judgment against the debtor before the debtor's death, the creditor's right of action on the debt was limited to the decedent's lawful heir. If the debtor devised the land to a stranger, the creditor's claim was defeated. See heir (1). [Cases: Descent and Distribution C≈126; Executors and Administrators C≈263.]

"There were three exceptions to this rule that a fee simple estate was not liable to the creditors of the deceased. Debts due to the Crown and debts due to judgment creditors were enforceable against the land notwithstanding the death of the owner, and thirdly, if the fee simple tenant had in his lifetime executed a deed whereby he covenanted for himself and his heirs to pay a sum of money, the creditor (called a specialty creditor) could make the heir liable for the debt to the extent of the land which had descended to him. But this privilege of the specialty creditor was not at first enforceable against an equitable fee simple, and it was strictly limited to a right of action against the heir of the deceased, so that the creditor was defrauded of his money if the deceased devised his land to a stranger." C.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 738 (3d ed. 1933).

subsequent creditor. A creditor whose claim comes into existence after a given fact or transaction, such as the recording of a deed or the execution of a voluntary conveyance.

unsecured creditor. A creditor who, upon giving credit, takes no rights against specific property of the debtor. — Also termed general creditor. See creditor at large.

warrant creditor. A creditor of a municipal corporation who is given a municipal warrant for the amount of the claim because the municipality lacks the funds to pay the debt. Cf. certificate creditor. [Cases: Municipal Corporations C≈896.]

creditor beneficiary. See beneficiary.

"Creditor dominii . . . . In commodate the lender is creditor of the subject, and on the bankruptcy of the borrower may vindicate his right of property and recover the subject itself . . . ." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 114 (4th ed. 1894).

creditor's bill. (1826) An equitable suit in which a judgment creditor seeks to reach property that cannot be reached by the process available to enforce a judgment. - Also termed creditor's suit. [Cases: Debtor and Creditor <− 11.]

creditor's claim. See claim (5).

creditors' committee. (1874) Bankruptcy. A committee comprising representatives of the creditors in a Chapter 11 proceeding, formed to negotiate the debtor's plan of reorganization. • Generally, a committee has no fewer than 3 and no more than 11 members and serves as an advisory body. 11 USCA § 1102. [Cases: Bankruptcy <− 3024.] creditors' composition. See composition (1).

creditors' meeting. See meeting.

creditors' scheme of arrangement. See scheme of arrangement.

creditor's suit. See creditor's bill.

credit plan. A financing arrangement under which a borrower and a lender agree to terms for a loan's repayment with interest, usu. in installments.

open-end credit plan. A plan under which a creditor reasonably expects repeated transactions, prescribes terms for those transactions, and includes a finance charge that may be periodically computed on the outstanding balance. 15 USCA § 1602(i).

credit rating. An evaluation of a potential borrower's ability to repay debt, prepared by a credit bureau at the request of a lender. [Cases: Credit Reporting Agencies <− 1−4.]

credit report. 1. A credit bureau's report on a person's financial status, usu. including the approximate amounts and locations of a person's bank accounts, charge accounts, loans, and other debts, bill-paying habits, defaults, bankruptcies, foreclosures, marital status, occupation, income, and lawsuits. See credit bureau. 2. The report of a credit-reporting bureau, usu. including highly personal information gathered through interviews with a person's friends, neighbors, and coworkers. See credit-reporting bureau. [Cases: Credit Reporting Agencies <− 1−4.]

credit-reporting bureau. (1904) An organization that, on request, prepares investigative reports not just on people's creditworthiness but also on personal information gathered from various sources, including interviews with neighbors, friends, and coworkers. • These reports are used chiefly by employers (for prospective employees), insurance companies (for applicants), and landlords (for prospective tenants). - Also termed investigating bureau. Cf. credit bureau. [Cases: Credit Reporting Agencies <− 1−4.]

credit slip. A document that allows a store customer to either purchase another item or receive cash or credit for merchandise the customer has returned to the store.

credit union. A cooperative association that offers low-interest loans and other consumer banking services to persons sharing a common bond — often fellow employees and their family members. • Most credit unions are regulated by the National Credit Union Administration. State-chartered credit unions are also subject to regulation by the chartering state, and they may be regulated by state banking boards. [Cases: Building and Loan Associations <− 1−6, 24−40.]

"Credit unions were the last major thrift institutions developed in the United States . . . . What distinguished credit unions from mutual savings banks and savings and loan associations was their emphasis on a common bond of workers, church members, or people in a local area, wanting to borrow relatively small amounts at reasonable interest rates from each other, and help each other save to meet these short-term needs. Their goal was to provide a low interest rate alternative . . . to loan sharks and pawnbrokers." William A. Lovett, Banking and Financial Institutions Law in a Nutshell 284 (1997).

creditworthy, adj. (1924) (Of a borrower) financially sound enough that a lender will extend credit in the belief default is unlikely; fiscally healthy. - creditworthiness, n.

cretion (kree-shən), n. [fr. Latin cernere "to decide"] Roman law. 1. A method or form of accepting an inheritance by an heir who is appointed in a testament. • Cretion usu. had to be declared within 100 days from the date an heir received notice of the appointment. "In the old law it was the practice to fix a time limit, usually of one hundred days, within which the heir was to make a formal acceptance, with the addition that if he failed to do so, he was to be disinherited and a substitute was to take the inheritance in his place. This formal acceptance was known as cretio from the Latin verb cernere — to decide. The practice had fallen into disuse before Justinian, who formally abolished it." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 199 (4th ed. 1956).

2. The period within which an heir might decide whether to accept an inheritance. - Also termed (in Latin) cretion (kree-shə-ee). - creationary (kree-shə-er-ee), adj.

crime of omission. (18c) An offense that carries as its material component the failure to act.

crime of passion. (18c) A crime committed in the heat of an emotionally charged moment, with no opportunity to reflect on what is happening. See HEAT OF PASSION.

crime of violence. See violent crime.

crime without victims. See victimless crime.

cybercrime. See computer crime.

economic crime. A nonphysical crime committed to obtain a financial gain or a professional advantage.

There are two major styles of economic crime. The first consists of crimes committed by businessmen as an adjunct to their regular business activities. Businessmen's responsibilities give them the opportunity, for example, to commit embezzlement, to violate regulations directed at their areas of business activity, or to evade the payment of taxes. This style of economic crime is often called white-collar crime. The second style of economic crime is the provision of illegal goods and services or the provision of goods and services in an illegal manner. Illegal provision of goods and services requires coordinated economic activity similar to that of normal business, but all of those engaged in it are involved in crime. The madam operating a brothel has many concerns identical to the manager of a resort hotel, and the distributor of marijuana must worry about the efficacy of his distribution system just as does a distributor of any other product. This type of economic crime is often called organized crime because the necessity of economic coordination outside the law leads to the formation of criminal groups with elaborate organizational customs and practices." Edmund W. Kitch, "Economic Crime," in 2 Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice 670, 671 (Sanford H. Kadish ed., 1983).

environmental crime. See ENVIRONMENTAL CRIME.
expressive crime. A crime committed for the sake of the crime itself, esp. out of frustration, rage, or other emotion rather than for financial gain. Cf. instrumental crime.

federal crime. See federal crime.

general-intent crime. A crime that involves performing a particular act without intending a further act or a further result. [Cases: Criminal Law C=20.]

hate crime. (1984) A crime motivated by the victim’s race, color, ethnicity, religion, or national origin. • Certain groups have lobbied to expand the definition by statute to include a crime motivated by the victim’s disability, gender, or sexual orientation. Cf. hate speech under speech. [Cases: Civil Rights C=1808; Sentencing and Punishment C=70, 753.]

high crime. (17c) A crime that is very serious, though not necessarily a felony. • Under the U.S. Constitution, a government officer’s commission of a “high crime” is, along with treason and bribery, grounds for removal from office. U.S. Const. art. II, § 4. See impeachable offense.

honor crime. A crime motivated by a desire to punish a person who the perpetrator believes has injured a person’s or group’s sense of honor. • The term is most often applied to crimes committed against Muslim women by members of their own families for behavior that leads to perceived social harm, esp. loss of family honor. The term also extends to non-Muslims and covers many acts of violence, including assault, rape, infanticide, and murder. When the crime involves a death, it is also termed honor killing.

implied crime. See constructive crime.

inchoate crime. See inchoate offense under offense (1).

index crime. See index offense under offense (1).

infamous crime (in-f”-m,,s). (16c) 1. At common law, a crime for which part of the punishment was infamy, so that one who committed it would be declared ineligible to serve on a jury, hold public office, or testify. • Examples are perjury, treason, and fraud. [Cases: Jury C=45; Officers and Public Employees C=31.] 2. A crime punishable by imprisonment in a penitentiary. • The Fifth Amendment requires a grand jury indictment for the prosecution of infamous (or capital) crimes, which include all federal felony offenses. See indictable offense under offense (1). Cf. noninfamous crime.

“At common law an infamous crime was one . . . inconsistent with the common principles of honesty and humanity. Infamous crimes were treason, felony, all offenses found in fraud and which came within the general notion of the crimes falsi of the civil law, piracy, swindling, cheating, barratry, and the bribing of a witness to absent himself from a trial, in order to get rid of his evidence.” Justin Miller, Handbook of Criminal Law § 5, at 25 (1934).

instantaneous crime. (1987) A crime that is fully completed by a single act, as arson or murder, rather than a series of acts. • The statute of limitations for an instantaneous crime begins to run with its completion. Cf. continuous crime.

instrumental crime. A crime committed to further another end or result; esp., a crime committed to obtain money to purchase a good or service. Cf. expressive crime.

international crime. See international crime.

major crime. See felony (1).

noninfamous crime. A crime that does not qualify as an infamous crime. Cf. infamous crime.

preliminary crime. See inchoate offense under offense (1).

presumed crime. See constructive crime.

quasi-crime. (18c) Hist. 1. An offense not subject to criminal prosecution (such as contempt or violation of a municipal ordinance) but for which penalties or forfeitures can be imposed. • The term includes offenses that give rise to qui tam actions and forfeitures for the violation of a public duty. 2. An offense for which someone other than the actual perpetrator is held liable, the perpetrator being presumed to act on the command of the responsible party. See quasi-defect (1) under delict.

signature crime. (1974) A distinctive crime so similar in pattern, scheme, or modus operandi to previous crimes that it identifies a particular defendant as the perpetrator. [Cases: Criminal Law C=369.15.]

spontaneous crime. A criminal act that occurs suddenly and without premeditation in response to an unforeseen stimulus. • For example, a husband who discovers his wife in bed with another man and shoots him could be said to have committed an effectively spontaneous crime.

status crime. (1961) A crime of which a person is guilty by being in a certain condition or of a specific character. • An example of a status crime is vagrancy. — Also termed status offense; personal-condition crime. [Cases: Criminal Law C=26.]

statutory crime. (1940) A crime punishable by statute. Cf. common-law crime. [Cases: Criminal Law C=21.]
street crime. (1966) A crime generally directed against a person in public, such as mugging, theft, or robbery. — Also termed visible crime.

strict-liability crime. A crime that does not require a mens rea element, such as traffic offenses and illegal sales of intoxicating liquor. [Cases: Criminal Law p. 21.]

substantive crime. See substantive offense under offense (1).

vice crime. A crime of immoral conduct, such as gambling or prostitution.

victimless crime. (1964) A crime that is considered to have no direct victim, usu. because only consenting adults are involved. • Examples are possession of illicit drugs and deviant sexual intercourse between consenting adults. — Also termed consensual crime; crime without victims; complainantless crime.

"When a man's house has been robbed or his brother murdered, he is likely to take this complaint vigorously to the police and demand action. His presence on the scene dramatizes the need for law enforcement and gives sense and purpose to the work of the police and district attorney. In contrast, the absence of a prosecuting witness surrounds 'crimes without victims' with an entirely different atmosphere. Here it is the police who must assume the initiative. If they attempt to work without the aid of informers, they must resort to spying, and this spying is rendered all the more distasteful because what is spied upon is sordid and pitiable." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 44 (1968).

war crime. See WAR CRIME.

white-collar crime. See WHITE-COLLAR CRIME.

crime against humanity. Int'l law. A brutal crime that is not an isolated incident but that involves large and systematic actions, often cloaked with official authority, and that shocks the conscience of humankind. • Among the specific crimes that fall within this category are mass murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation, and other inhumane acts perpetrated against a population, whether in wartime or not. See Statute of the International Criminal Court, art. 3 (37 ILM 999).

crime against peace. Int'l law. An international crime in which the offenders plan, prepare, initiate, or wage a war of aggression or a war in violation of international peace treaties, agreements, or assurances.

crime against the law of nations. Int'l law. 1. A crime punishable under internationally prescribed criminal law or defined by an international convention and required to be made punishable under the criminal law of the member states. 2. A crime punishable under international law; an act that is internationally agreed to be of a criminal nature, such as genocide, piracy, or engaging in the slave trade. — Also termed crime against international law.

crimen falsi (kri-man far-sI or fa-wl-sI). [Latin "the crime of falsifying"] 1. A crime in the nature of perjury. — Also termed falsum. 2. Any other offense that involves some element of dishonesty or false statement. See Fed. R. Evid. 609(a)(2). [Cases: Witnesses p. 337(12).]

"The starting point [for perjury] seems to have been the so-called crimen falsi, — crime of falsifying. In the beginning, perhaps, one convicted of perjury was deemed too untrustworthy to be permitted to testify in any other case, and the idea grew until the term 'crimen falsi' included any crime involving an element of deceit, fraud or corruption." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 26 (3d ed. 1982).

crimen feloniae imposuit (kri-man foh-loh-neec-ee im-poz-yaa-wit). To accuse or charge with a felony.

crime of passion. See CRIME.
crime of violence. See violent crime under CRIME.
crimes against persons. (1827) A category of criminal offenses in which the perpetrator uses or threatens to use force. • Examples include murder, rape, aggravated assault, and robbery. — Also termed crimes against the person. Cf. offense against the person under OFFENSE (1). crimes against property. (1827) A category of criminal offenses in which the perpetrator seeks to derive an unlawful benefit from or do damage to another’s property without the use or threat of force. • Examples include burglary, theft, and arson (even though arson may result in injury or death). — Also termed property crimes. Cf. offense against property under OFFENSE (1). crimes against the person. See CRIMES AGAINST PERSONS.
crime score. (1952) A number assigned from an established scale, indicating the relative seriousness of an offense based on the nature of the injury or the extent of property damage. • Prosecutors use crime scores and defendant scores to promote uniform treatment of similar cases and to assess which cases need extensive pretrial preparation. Cf. DEFENDANT SCORE.
crime statistics. Figures compiled by a governmental agency to show the incidence of various types of crime within a defined geographic area during a specified time.
crime without victims. See victimless crime under CRIME.
crimina extraordinaria (krɪ-mə-na ek-stor-da-nair-e-e-a). [Latin] Roman law. Extraordinary crimes; crimes not brought before a quaestio perpetua. • These crimes carried no fixed penalty and were punished according to the judge’s discretion. criminal, adj. (15c) 1. Having the character of a crime; in the nature of a crime <criminal mischief>. 2. Connected with the administration of penal justice <the criminal courts>.

criminal conversation. Archaic. A tort action for adultery, brought by a husband against a third party who engaged in sexual intercourse with his wife. • Criminal conversation has been abolished in most jurisdictions. — Abbr. crim. con. See HEARTBALM STATUTE. [Cases: Husband and Wife C:= 340–354.] ‘An action (whether of trespass or case is uncertain, but probably trespass) formerly lay against one who had committed adultery with the wife of the plaintiff. It was known as an action for criminal conversation. The wife’s consent was irrelevant. The action was distinct from that of enticement: one may commit adultery without enticing a wife away from her husband. The action was no doubt a necessity when divorce could only be obtained by Act of Parliament: as Parliament was not a tribunal suitable for trying allegations of adultery it was reasonable to require the petitioner to establish the truth of his allegations before a court of law. The action might also have been justified on the ground that the plaintiff is in substance complaining of the invasion of privacy of his marriage, and the insult thereby caused to his honour as a husband.’ R.F.V. Heuston, Saladmon on the Law of Torts 358 (17th ed. 1977).
criminal court. See COURT.
criminal-court judge. See JUDGE. criminal damage to property. (1946) 1. Injury, destruction, or substantial impairment to the use of property (other than by fire or explosion) without the consent of a person having an interest in the property. [Cases: Malicious Mischief C:= 1.] 2. Injury, destruction, or substantial impairment to the use of property (other than by fire or explosion) with the intent to injure or defraud an insurer or lienholder. Cf. ARSON.
criminal defendant. One who is accused in a criminal proceeding.
criminal desertion. See desertion. criminal forfeiture. See forfeiture. criminal fraud. See fraud. criminal homicide. See homicide.
criminal infringement. See infringement.
criminal-instrumentality rule. (1942) The principle that when a criminal act is committed, that act — rather than the victim's negligence that made the crime possible — will be considered to be the crime's proximate cause. criminal intent. 1. See intent (1). 2. mens rea.
criminalism. 1. A pathological tendency toward criminality. 2. Archaic. The branch of psychiatry dealing with habitual criminals.
criminalistics (krim-a-nal-is-tiks), n. (1943) The science of crime detection, usu. involving the subject of physical evidence to laboratory analysis, including ballistic testing, blood-fluid and tissue analysis, and other tests. Cf. criminology. — criminalistic, adj.
criminality (krim-a-nal-a-toc), (17c) 1. The state or quality of being criminal. 2. An act or practice that constitutes a crime. See double criminality.
criminalization (krim-a-nal-a-zay-shan), n. (1945) 1. The act or an instance of making a previously lawful act criminal, usu. by passing a statute. Cf. decriminalization; civilization. [Cases: Criminal Law ☐ 3j] 2. The process by which a person develops into a criminal.
criminalize (krim-a-nal-iz), vb. To make illegal; to outlaw. criminal jurisdiction. See jurisdiction.
criminal justice. (16c) 1. The methods by which a society deals with those who are accused of having committed crimes. See law enforcement (1). Cf. civil justice. 2. The field of study pursued by those seeking to enter law enforcement as a profession. • Many colleges offer degrees in criminal justice, typically after two to four years of study. — Also termed (in sense 2) police science; law enforcement.
criminal-justice system. (1929) The collective institutions through which an accused offender passes until the accusations have been disposed of or the assessed punishment concluded. • The system typically has three components: law enforcement (police, sheriffs, marshals), the judicial process (judges, prosecutors, defense lawyers), and corrections (prison officials, probation officers, and parole officers). — Also termed law-enforcement system.
criminal law. (18c) The body of law defining offenses against the community at large, regulating how suspects are investigated, charged, and tried, and establishing punishments for convicted offenders. — Also termed penal law.
  "Often the term 'criminal law' is used to include all that is involved in 'the administration of criminal justice' in the broadest sense. As so employed it embraces three different fields, known to the lawyer as (1) the substantive criminal law, (2) criminal procedure, and (3) special problems in the administration and enforcement of criminal justice. . . . The phrase 'criminal law' is more commonly used to include only that part of the general field known as the substantive criminal law . . . ." — Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 1, § 5 (3d ed. 1987).

cross-cross agreement. See cross-purchase agreement under agreement.
crit. (1985) An adherent to the critical-legal-studies school of thought. — Also termed CLSer; Critic, critic.
fem-crit. A feminist adherent of critical legal studies.
critical evidence. See evidence.
critical legal studies. (1978) 1. A school of thought advancing the idea that the legal system perpetuates the status quo in terms of economics, race, and gender by using manipulable concepts and by creating an imaginary world of social harmony regulated by law. • The Marxist wing of this school focuses on socioeconomic issues. Fem-crits emphasize gender hierarchy, whereas critical race theorists focus on racial subordination. See fem-crit under crit; critical race theory. 2. The body of work produced by adherents to this school of thought. — Abbr. CLS.
critical limitation. Patents. A limitation essential either to the operativeness of an invention or to the patentability of a patent claim for the invention. [Cases: Patents C=165(2).]
critical race theory. (1989) 1. A reform movement within the legal profession, particularly within academia, whose adherents believe that the legal system has disempowered racial minorities. • The term first appeared in 1989. Critical race theorists observe that even if the law is couched in neutral language, it cannot be neutral because those who fashioned it had their own subjective perspectives that, once enshrined in law, have disadvantaged minorities and even perpetuated racism. 2. The body of work produced by adherents to this theory. — Abbr. CRT.
critical stage. (1962) Criminal procedure. A point in a criminal prosecution when the accused’s rights or defenses might be affected by the absence of legal representation. • Under the Sixth Amendment, a critical stage triggers the accused’s right to appointed counsel. Examples of critical stages include preliminary hearings, jury selection, and (of course) trial. Cf. accusatory stage. [Cases: Criminal Law C=1718.]
crop insurance. See insurance.
crop rent. See rent (1).
crops. Products that are grown, raised, and harvested. • Crops usu. are from the soil, but fruit grown on trees are also considered crops. [Cases: Crops C=1.] annual crops. 1. Crops that must be planted each year, such as cotton, wheat, barley, corn, carrots, potatoes, and melons. 2. Crops for which the produce in any single year is mainly the result of attention and care exerted in the same agricultural year, such as hops and sugar cane. away-going crops. A tenant's crops that were sown and will not be ready to harvest before the tenancy expires. The tenant retains the ownership of the crop after the tenancy expires. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C= 139(2).]

basic crops. Crops (such as wheat and corn) that are usu. subject to government-price supports.

growing crops. Crops that are in the process of growth.

- Growing crops are goods under UCC § 2-105(1).
- Judicial decisions vary on the growth stage at which a crop becomes a growing crop and on whether pasturegrass is a growing crop. Cf. Farm Product. [Cases: Crops C= 1.]

standing crops. Crops that have not been harvested or otherwise severed from the land. [Cases: Crops C= 2.]

cross, n. 1. cross-examination. 2. A sale of a large amount of publicly traded stock between two private parties. Although the transaction does not happen on the exchange floor, it typically requires exchange permission.

cross-action. 1. See action (4). 2. See cross-claim.

cross-bill. See bill (2).

cross-claim, n. (1825) A claim asserted between codefendants or coplaintiffs in a case and that relates to the subject of the original claim or counterclaim. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 13(g). Also termed cross-action; cross-suit. Cf. counterclaim. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C= 786; Pleading C= 147, 148, 149; Set-off and Counterclaim C= 10.] — cross-claimant, n.

The courts have not always distinguished clearly between a cross-claim and a counterclaim, and have used one name where the other is proper under the rules, perhaps because in some states, and in the old equity practice, the term cross-complaint or cross-bill is used for what the rules regard as a counterclaim. Under Rule 13 a counterclaim is a claim against an opposing party, while a cross-claim is against a co-party. Further there is not the same freedom in asserting cross-claims that the rules provide for counterclaims. An unrelated claim against an opposing party may be asserted as a permissive counterclaim, but only claims related to the subject matter of the original action, or property involved therein, are appropriate as cross-claims. cross-collateral. See collateral.

cross-collateral clause. (1965) An installment-contract provision allowing the seller, if the buyer defaults, to repossess not only the particular item sold but also every other item bought from the seller on which a balance remained due when the last purchase was made. — Also termed dragnet clause.

cross-collateralization. See cross-collateral under collateral.

cross-complaint. (1854) 1. A claim asserted by a defendant against another party to the action. — Also termed (in some jurisdictions) cross-petition. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C= 786; Pleading C= 148, 149.] 2. A claim asserted by a defendant against a person not a party to the action for a matter relating to the subject of the action.

cross-default clause. (1979) A contractual provision under which default on one debt obligation triggers default on another obligation.

cross-defendant. The party against whom a cross-claim is asserted. Cf. cross-plaintiff. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C= 786.]

cross-check. See check.

cross-elasticity of demand. Antitrust. A relationship between two products, usu. substitutes for each other, in which a price change for one product affects the price of the other.

cross-examination, n. (18c) The questioning of a witness at a trial or hearing by the party opposed to the party who called the witness to testify. The purpose of cross-examination is to discredit a witness before the fact-finder in any of several ways, as by bringing out contradictions and improbabilities in earlier testimony, by suggesting doubts to the witness, and by trapping the witness into admissions that weaken the testimony. The cross-examiner is typically allowed to ask leading questions but is traditionally limited to matters covered on direct examination and to credibility issues. Also termed cross-interrogation. Cf. direct examination; recross-examination. [Cases: Witnesses C= 266–284, 330.] — cross-examine, vb.

cross-interrogatory. See interrogatory.

cross-license. See license.

cross-marriage. See marriage (1).

cross-motion. See motion (1).

cross-offer, n. (1931) Contracts. An offer made to another in ignorance that the offeree has made the same offer to the offeror. — cross-offer, vb. — cross-offeror, n.

cross-petition. See cross-complaint.

cross-plaintiff. The party asserting a cross-claim. Cf. cross-defendant.

cross-purchase agreement. See agreement.

cross-purchase buy-sell agreement. 1. buy-sell agreement (1). 2. A partnership insurance plan in which each partner individually buys and maintains enough insurance on the life or lives of other partners to purchase a deceased or expelled partner's equity.

cross-question. See question (1).

cross-rate. The exchange rate between two currencies expressed as the ratio of two foreign exchange rates in terms of a common third currency (usu. the U.S. dollar). Foreign-exchange-rate dealers use cross-rate tables to look for arbitrage opportunities. See arbitrage.

cross-remainder. See remainder.
cross-stream guaranty. See guaranty. cross-suit. See cross-claim.

crown. English law. The sovereign in his or her official capacity as a governing power. See king; queen (1).

"In modern times it has become usual to speak of the Crown rather than of the King, when we refer to the King in his public capacity as a body politic. We speak of the property of the Crown, when we mean the property which the King holds in right of his Crown. So we speak of the debts due by the Crown, of legal proceedings by and against the Crown, and so on. The usage is one of great convenience, because it avoids a difficulty which is inherent in all speech and thought concerning corporations, viz. the difficulty, namely, of distinguishing adequately between the body politic and the human being by whom it is "represented and whose name it bears." John Salmond, jurisprudence 341-42 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

crown court. An English court having jurisdiction over major criminal cases. • Crown Courts date from 1971, when they assumed the criminal jurisdiction of the Assize Courts and all the jurisdiction of the Courts of Quarter Sessions.
crown jewel. A company's most valuable asset, esp. as valued when the company is the subject of a hostile takeover. • A common antitakeover device is for the target company to sell its crown jewel to a third party so that the company will be less attractive to an unfriendly suitor.
crown-jewel defense. An antitakeover device in which the target company agrees to sell its most valuable assets to a third party if a hostile bid is tendered, so that the company will be less attractive to an unfriendly suitor.

cruel and abusive treatment. See abuse (2). cruel and inhumane treatment. See extreme cruelty under cruelty.
cruel and unusual punishment. See punishment. cruelty. (13c) The intentional and malicious infliction of mental or physical suffering on a living creature, esp. a human; abusive treatment; outrage. Cf. abuse; inhuman treatment; indignity.

"When William Blake opined that 'Cruelty has a human heart', he posited the physical and emotional forms which cruelty may take. But when is one party so cruel to the other that it goes to the heart of the marriage and justifies dissolution? A New York court defined cruelty as bodily harm, or a reasonable apprehension of bodily harm, which endangers life, limb, or health and renders marital cohabitation unsafe or improper. Some states are reluctant to permit divorce when there has been only emotional suffering without physical harm. And in a marriage of long duration, some courts require that the cruelty be more extreme to justify divorce than if the relationship has been brief. Acts constituting the ground must continue over an extended period of time unless they are so severe as to shock the conscience, or raise the probability that it would be unsafe for the innocent party if the couple remain together." Walter Wadlington & Raymond C. O'Brien, Family Law in Perspective 73 (2001).

cruelty to animals. A malicious or criminally negligent act that causes an animal to suffer pain or death. [Cases: Animals <= 3.5(5).]

extreme cruelty. (17c) As a ground for divorce, one spouse's physical violence toward the other spouse, or conduct that destroys or severely impairs the other spouse's mental health. — Also termed cruel and inhumane treatment. Cf. abuse (2). [Cases: Divorce <= 27.]

gleal cruelty. (18c) Cruelty that will justify granting a divorce to the injured party; specif. conduct by one spouse that endangers the life, person, or health of the other spouse, or creates a reasonable apprehension of bodily or mental harm. [Cases: Divorce <= 27.]

earth cruelty. (1898) As a ground for divorce, actual personal violence committed by one spouse against the other. (Cases: Divorce <= 27(3, 6).]

Crummey power. The right of a beneficiary of a Crummey trust to withdraw gifts made to the trust up to a maximum amount (often the lesser of the annual exclusion or the value of the gift made to the trust) for a certain period after the gift is made. • The precise characteristics of a Crummey power are established by the settlor of a Crummey trust. Typically, the power is exercisable for 30 days after the gift is made and permits withdrawals up to $5,000 or 5% of the value of the trust. A beneficiary may allow the power to lapse without making any demand for distribution. See Crummey trust under trust; annual exclusion under exclusion. [Cases: Trusts <= 270.]

cry de pais (kri da pay). [Law French] Hist. The cry of the country. • The hue and cry after an offender, as raised by the country (i.e., the people). — Also spelled cri de pais. See hue and cry (1). cryer. See crier.
culpability (kal-pa-bil-ee), n. Blameworthiness; the quality of being culpable. • Except in cases of absolute liability, criminal culpability requires a showing that the person acted purposely, knowingly, recklessly, or negligently with respect to each material element of the offense. See Model Penal Code § 2.02. [Cases: Criminal Law C 19.] “The concept of culpability is used as a reference point to assess the defendant’s guilt and punishment even though, in the two contexts, culpability denotes different aspects of the defendant and the murder. At the guilt phase, culpability is most often used to refer to the state of mind that the defendant must possess. Also at the guilt phase, culpability may reflect a broader judgment about the defendant: when he is culpable for his conduct, it means that he is blameworthy and deserves punishment. At the punishment phase, the concept of culpability stands as the benchmark for when the death penalty is an appropriate punishment.” Phyllis L. Crocker, Concepts of Culpability and Deathworthiness, 66 Fordham L. Rev. 21, 35-36 (1997).

culpable (kal-po-bal), adj. (14c) 1. Guilty; blameworthy. 2. Involving the breach of a duty.

culpable accident. See ACCIDENT.

culpable homicide. 1. See HOMICIDE. 2. See MANSLAUGHTER.

culpable intoxication. See voluntary intoxication under INTOXICATION.

culpable neglect. See NEGLECT.

culpable negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

culpa-in-contra-hendo doctrine. [Law Latin “fault in contracting”] The principle that parties must act in good faith during preliminary contract negotiations; esp., the principle that a breach by the offeror after the offeree has begun performance of a unilateral contract and is stopped by the offeror before completion will give rise to liability in tort. [Cases: Torts C 433.]

culpa lata. See lata culpa under CULPA.

culpa levis. See levis culpa under CULPA.

culpa levis in concreto. See levis culpa under CULPA.

Cui bono? [Latin] For whose advantage? Who benefits? • The exclamation may be used to ask who benefited from the results of a crime, usu. to cast suspicion without offering evidence of guilt. Despite the literal meaning, the term is more often used to mean “what’s the good of it?” or “what benefits are there?”

cui ante divortium (ki [or kwi or kwee] an-tee da-vor-shee-am). [Law Latin “to whom before divorce”] Hist. A writ of entry enabling a divorced woman to recover land that she had held in fee but that her husband had sold without her permission during the marriage. • The name of this writ derives from the words within it: cui ipsa ante divortium inter eos celebratum, contradicere non potuit (“whom she, before the divorce between them, could not gainsay”). The writ was abolished in 1833. — Also termed sur cui ante divortium.

Cui bono? [Latin] For whose advantage? Who benefits?

Cui in vita (ki [or kwi or kwee] in-vi-ta). [Law Latin “to whom in the life”] Hist. A writ of entry enabling a woman to recover land that she had held in fee but that her deceased husband had sold without her permission. • It is so called from the words of the writ: cui ipsa in vita sua contradicere non potuit (“whom she, in his lifetime, could not gainsay”). — Also termed sur cui in vita.

“Cui in vita, is a writ of entry, which a widow hath against him, to whom her husband alienated her lands or tenements in his life time, which must specify, that During his life, she could not withstand it.” Thomas Blount, Nomo-Lexicon: A Law-Dictionary (1670).

Cujus contrairem est verum (kyyoo-jas kan-trair ee-am est veer-am). [Latin] Hist. The contrary of which is the truth.

“Cujus haeredibus maxime spicitur . . . This is a rule of construction to be attended to in ascertaining from the terms of a destination, in whom the fee of a property is vested, the ordinary rule being, that he is the færo whose heirs are preferred. Thus, a conveyance to ‘A and B jointly, and the heirs of B,’ gives A merely a joint right of liferent, and gives B the fee. Under such a destination, B is so absolutely the færo that his rights cannot be impaired by any acts, even onerous, of A, who is held, as we have said, to be a liferenter.” John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 121 (4th ed. 1894).

culpa (kal-pa). [Latin] 1. Roman & civil law. Fault, neglect, or negligence; unintentional wrong. See NEGLIGENCE. Cf. DILIGENTIA; CASUS (l); DOLUS (l). 2. Roman law. Conduct that made a party to a contract, or quasi-contract, liable to the other party.

lata culpa (lay-to kal-pa). [Latin “grave fault”] Gross negligence amounting to bad faith (dolus). • This phrase occurs most commonly in bailment law and in the law of the transport of persons. — Also termed culpa lata. See gross negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

levis culpa (lee-vis kal-pa). [Latin “slight fault”] 1. Ordinary negligence. 2. Failure to act as the ideal paterfamilias should. — Also termed culpa levis; culpa levis in concreto. See ordinary negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

levissima culpa (le-vas-a ma kal-pa). [Latin “the slightest fault”] Slight negligence. — Also termed culpa levissima. See slight negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

Negligence. 2. Failure to act as the ideal paterfamilias should. — Also termed culpa levis; culpa levis in concreto. See ordinary negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

levissima culpa (le-vas-a ma kal-pa). [Latin “the slightest fault”] Slight negligence. — Also termed culpa levissima. See slight negligence under NEGLIGENCE.

culpability (kal-po-bil-ee), n. Blameworthiness; the quality of being culpable. • Except in cases of absolute liability, criminal culpability requires a showing that the person acted purposely, knowingly, recklessly, or negligently with respect to each material element of the offense. See Model Penal Code § 2.02. [Cases: Criminal Law C 19.]
culpa levissima. See levissima culpa under culpa.

culprit. (17c) 1. A person accused or charged with the commission of a crime. 2. A person who is guilty of a crime.  • Culprit may be a running together of cul, shortened from the Latin culpabilis ("guilty"), and prit, from Old French pres ("ready"), two words formerly used to orally plead at the outset of a criminal case.

"When the prisoner hath thus pleaded not guilty, non culpabilis . . . the clerk of the assise, or clerk of the arraigns, on behalf of the crown replies, that the prisoner is guilty, and that he is ready to prove him so. This is done by two monosyllables in the same spirit of abbreviation, 'cul. prit.' which signifies first that the prisoner is guilty, (cul. culpable, or culpabilis) and then that the king is ready to prove him so; prit, praesto sum, or paratus verificate . . . . How our courts came to express a matter of this importance in so odd and obscure a manner . . . can hardly be pronounced with certainty. It may perhaps, however, be accounted for by supposing that these were at first short notes, to help the memory of the clerk, and remind him what he was to reply; or else it was the short method of taking down in court, upon the minutes, the replication and averment; 'cul. prit.' which afterwards the ignorance of succeeding clerks adopted for the very words to be by them spoken. But however it may have arisen, the joining of issue . . . seems to be clearly the meaning of this obscure expression; which has puzzled our most ingenious etymologists, and is commonly understood as if the clerk of the arraigns, immediately on plea pleaded, had fixed an opprobrious name on the prisoner, by asking him, 'culprit, how wilt thou be tried?'" [-William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 333-34 (1769).]

cultural property. Int'l law. Movable and immovable property that has cultural significance, whether in the nature of antiquities and monuments of a classical age or important modern items of fine arts, decorative arts, and architecture. • Some writers prefer the term cultural heritage, which more broadly includes intangible cultural things such as folklore, crafts, and skills.

culvert age (kal-var-tij), cum beneficio inventarii. See beneficium inventarii.

cum communi pastura (kam ka-myoo-ni pas-char-a). [Law Latin] Hist. With common pasturage. • This phrase granted a servitude of pasturage, not a right of common, on property.

cum curiis earum exitibus (kam kyoor ee-is ee-ar-am-kwee ek-sit-i-bas). [Law Latin] Hist. With courts, and the results or profits of the same. • The phrase appeared in reference to the right of the Baron courts to any of those courts' profits, as distinguished from the obligation of the King's courts to turn over all profits to the King.

cum curiis et bloodwitis (kam kyoor ee-is et blad-wit-tis). [Law Latin] Scots law. With the power of holding courts and fining for blood. • Property disposed of cum curiis et bloodwitis entitled the purchaser of a barony to cumulative jurisdiction over barony matters.

cum decimis inclusit et nunquam ante separatis (kam des-a-mis in-kloo-sis et nam-kwan an-ti-sep-er-ay-tis). [Law Latin] Scots law. With the tithes included, and never before separated. • This phrase exempted conveyed land from the payment of tithes.

cum dividend. With dividend. • Stocks purchased cum dividend entitle the buyer to any pending declared dividends. Cf. ex dividendo.

cum domibus, aediticis (kam dom-a-bas, ee-di-fish-ee-is). [Law Latin] Scots law. With houses, buildings. • These words in a conveyance included within the conveyance every structure erected on the conveyed land.

"Prescription does not run against any one . . . unless he is able to act in defence of his right cum effectu . . . . Under the old feudal system the casualty of ward was not incurred except where the vassal alienated his lands cum effectu. Thus, if the vassal was interdicted and disposed of his lands, his conveyance being reducible was not effectual, and the casualty was not incurred." [-John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 127-28 (4th ed. 1894).]

cum fabrilibus, brasinis, et brueriis (kam fa-bril-a-bas, bra-st-nas, et broo-er-ee-is). [Law Latin] Scots law. With forges, maltkilns, and breweries. • A tenant was restricted from building these structures on land unless the tenant first obtained the superior's permission.

cum fossa et furca (kam fos-a et far-ka). [Law Latin] Hist. With pit and gallows. • In ancient charters, this phrase granted Baron courts the right to try capital offenses and to inflict capital punishment.

cum grano salis (kam gray-noh say-lis or kuum grah noh sah-lis). [Latin] With a grain of salt; with allowance for exaggeration; with reservations.

cum herezeldis (kam her-a-zel-dis). [Latin] Scots law. With herezelds; with the best things that move. • The phrase appeared in reference to a tenant's best horse, cow, or other animal, when the animal was customarily transferred to the landlord on the death of the tenant.

Cumis counsel. See counsel.

Cum libera et plena administratione (cum lib-ar-a et pl-ea-na ad-min-a-stray-shee-oh-nee). [Law Latin] Scots law. With full and free power of administration. • The phrase appeared in reference to the powers that one could grant to certain agents, such as attorneys.

Cum libero exitu et introitu (cum lib-ar-a ek-si-t(y)oo et in-troh-t(y)oo). [Law Latin] Hist. With free exit and entry.

Cum maritagio (kam mar-a-tay jee-oh). [Law Latin] Scots law. With the marriage portion. • The phrase appeared in reference to the required payment to a superior upon the marriage of the superior's ward.

Cum nota (kam noh-to). [Latin] Scots law. With a distinguishing mark. • The phrase appeared in reference to otherwise inadmissible testimony that a judge could allow after considering the testimony's merit or impartiality.

Cum omni causa (kam ahn-mee kaw-za). [Latin] Roman law. With every advantage derived from a given transaction, such as a sale.

Cum onere (kam on-ar-ree). [Latin] With the burden. • An item acquired cum onere is taken subject to existing burdens and charges.

Cum onere debitorum defuncti (kam on-ar-ee deb-i-tor-om de-funkti). [Latin] Hist. With the burden of the decedent's debts. • The phrase appeared in reference to an heir's position after entering a succession.

Cum pertinentiis (kam par-tee n-cen-shee-is). [Latin] With the appurtenances. • In a conveyance of land, the conveyance included not only everything belonging to the land, but also rights incidental to it.

Cum piscariis (kam pis-kair-ee-is). [Law Latin] Scots law. With fishings. • The phrase was used to convey an express grant of fishing rights without the necessity of also possessing the right for a prescribed period. Cf. CUM PISCATIONIBUS.

Cum piscationibus (kam pis-kay shee-oh-na-bas). [Law Latin] Hist. With fishing or fisheries. • The phrase was used to convey the express grant of fishing rights only if the grant was accompanied by possession of the right for a prescribed period. Cf. CUM PISCARIS.

Cum rights. With rights. • A cum rights purchaser of stock is entitled to rights that have been declared but not distributed, such as the right to purchase additional shares at a stated price. — Also termed rights on.

Cum satiis furore ipso puniatur (kam sat-is fyoo-ree-rec-ay-tar). [Latin] Hist. Since he is sufficiently punished by the insanity itself. • The phrase appeared in reference to the principle that an insane person is not criminally responsible for his or her acts. It was a forerunner to the modern insanity defense.

Cum suo onere (kam sy-yoo-oh on-ar-ree). [Latin] Hist. With its burden. • The phrase appeared in reference to a vassal's land encumbrances that the superior was bound to accept upon the vassal's resignation.

Cum testamento annexo (kam tes-ta-men-toh a-nek-soh). See administration cum testamento annexo under administration.

Cumulatio criminum (kyoo-oh-nya-lay-shee-oh-krih-mo-nee). [Law Latin] Hist. The accumulation of crimes; the charging of more than one crime in an indictment.

Cumulative approach. See unity of art.

Cumulative dividend. See dividend.

Cumulative-effects doctrine. (1987) The rule that a transaction affecting interstate commerce in a trivial way may be taken together with other similar transactions to establish that the combined effect on interstate commerce is not trivial and can therefore be regulated under the Commerce Clause. [Cases: Commerce C = 7(2).]

Cumulative error. See error (2).

Cumulative-error analysis. Appellate scrutiny of whether all of the individual harmless errors made in a trial had the cumulative effect of prejudicing the outcome. • If they did, the harmless errors taken together may amount to reversible error. [Cases: Appeal and Error C = 1026; Federal Courts C = 891.]

cum virginitas vel castitas corrupta restitui non possit (kam var-jin-tas vel kas-ti-tas ka-rap-ta ri-stitch-1yoo-ti). [Latin] Hist. & Scots law. Since virginity or chastity once violated cannot be restored. • The phrase was use to explain the basis for imposing severe punishment for rape.

CUPOS, abbr. A cohabiting unmarried person of the opposite sex. • Although this term is intended to be synonymous with "POSSLQ" (a person of the opposite sex sharing living quarters), it is more literally precise because it excludes married persons. See POSSLQ.

cura (kyoor-a), n. [Latin] Roman law. A guardianship that protects the interests of minors who are between puberty and the age of 25, or incapacitated persons. Cf. TUTELA. Pl. curae.

"Cura was a form of guardianship indicated by the necessities of the case, with respect to persons who, though sui juris, were in need of protection. It was not regarded as a substitute for patria potestas as tutea was... It extended to the person as well as the property, and in the latter respect is much the same as in the case of the tutela of infants." R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 122 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

cura furiosi (kyoor-a fyoor-ee-oh-si). A guardianship for an insane person who was mentally incapacitated.

cura minoris (kyoor-a mi-nor-is). A form of guardianship for a minor under 25 whose capacity of action was complete, but whose judgment might be defective. Pl. cura minorum.

cura prodigi (kyoor-a prah-da-ji). A form of guardianship for a spendthrift, usu. at the request of the person's agnatic family.

"The cura prodigi differed from the cura furiosi in that the prodigious, unlike the furiosus, was himself capable of performing any act by which he acquired a right or benefit. The appointment of a curator, however, precluded the prodigus from performing any act which operated to alienate property or to subject him to a liability, any such act, in order to be effectual, had to be concluded either by the curator on behalf of the prodigus or by the prodigus with the approval of the curator." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 492 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

curate (kyuur-it.). Eccles. law. 1. A person in charge of a parish; a pastor. 2. A member of the clergy who receives a stipend or salary to assist a vicar, rector, or pastor; an assistant to a parish priest. [Cases: Religious Societies ] curfew (kar-fyoo). 1. Hist. A law requiring that all fires be extinguished at a certain time in the evening, usu. announced by the ringing of a bell. 2. A regulation that forbids people (or certain classes of them, such as minors) from being outdoors or in vehicles during specified hours. [Cases: Infants ☐=13.]

curia (kyoor-ee-a), n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. One of 30 divisions (three tribes of ten curiae) into which the Roman people were said to be divided by Romulus. See comitia curiata under COMITIA. 2. Roman law. A legislative gathering, esp. of the Roman Senate; the building used for the gathering. 3. Hist. A judicial tribunal held in the sovereign's palace; a royal court. — Abbr. cur. 4. Hist. A court. 5. The papal court, including its functionaries and officials.

"The word curia in classical Latin is used in a number of ways. Apparently, it meant at first a subdivision of the people. It was also used, by a transfer which is not too clear, for the building in which the Roman Senate met. By an almost inevitable development it became the word for the Senate itself and later the ordinary designation for the Council in municipalities of the later Empire. . . . How much of this was still recalled in Medieval times, we cannot tell, but . . . in the early Middle Ages, curia was a common word to describe both the groups of men who generally were found in attendance on pope, emperor, king or prince, and the groups which were summoned by him to give him counsel. The curia in the latter sense, however, was not really a casual group of persons, summoned spasmodically to advise the king or any other person. It had come to be in feudal Europe the ordinary Latin word for the general meeting of the lord's vassals, which itself grew out of the Germanic mot or thing . . . . The curia of the king was in theory a larger and more important example of the same kind of assemblage." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 46–48 (1936).

curia advisari vult (kyoor-ee-a ad-va-sair-1 vult). [Latin] The court will be advised; the court will consider. • This phrase signaled a court's decision to delay judgment pending further consideration. In England, the phrase is still used in all Court of Appeal decisions when the judgment is reserved; that is, not delivered after the hearing. — Abbr. cur. adv. vult; c.a.v.

curia baronis (kyoor-ee-a ba-roh-nis). [Law Latin] See COURT BARON.

curia burgi (kyoor-ee-a bar-ji). See COURT OF HUSTINGS.

curia cancellaria. See CANCELLARIA.

curia Christianitatis (kyoor-ee-a kris-tee-an-a-tay-tis). [Law Latin "a court Christian"] Hist. An ecclesiastical court. See ECCLESIASTICAL COURT under CURT.

curia claudenda (kyoor-ee-a klaw-den-da). See Cura CLAUDENDA.

curia comitatus (kyoor-ee-a kom-a-tay-tas). [Law Latin] See COUNTY COURT.

curia domini (kyoor-ee-a dom-ee-ni). [Law Latin "lord's court"] Hist. A lord's house or hall, used as a meeting place for tenants during court sessions.

curia palatii (kyoor-ee-a po-lay-shee-i). [Law Latin "court of the palace"] PALACE COURT.

Curia Regis (kyoor-ee-a ree-i-jis). [Latin "king's court"] Hist. (sometimes not cap.) 1. The chief court in early Norman England, established by William the Conqueror. • The curia regis was a body of advisers who traveled with the king, advising him on political matters and acting as an appellate court in important or complicated cases. Over time the functions of the curia regis became exclusively judicial in nature. — Also termed King's Court; aula regis. — Abbr. C.R.

"We are tempted to use terms which are more precise than those that were current in the twelfth century. In particular we are wont to speak of the Curia Regis without remembering that the definite article is not in our documents. Any court held in the king's name by the king's delegates is Curia Regis. Thus the institution of what in course of time will be a new tribunal, a Court of King's Bench or a Court of Common Pleas, may be found in some small rearrangement, some petty technical change, which at the moment passes unnoticed." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 153 (2d ed. 1898).

"[A small] body collects round the king, a body of administrators selected from the ranks of the baronage and of the clergy. At its head stands the chief-justiciar, the king's right-hand man, his viceroy when the king is, as often he is, in his foreign dominions. . . . This body when it sits for financial purposes constitutes the Exchequer (Scaccarium), so called from the chequered cloth which lies on the table, convenient for the counting of money. Also it forms a council and court of law for the king: it is a curia Regis, the king's court, and its members are justitiarii, justices or justices of this court. Under Henry I they are sent into the counties to collect taxes and to hold pleas; they are then justitiarii errores, justitiarii itinerantes. During the whole period the term curia Regis seems loosely used to cover both the sessions of this permanent body and the assembly of the tenants in chief; the former may perhaps be regarded as a standing committee of the latter." F.W. Maitland, The Constitutional History of England 63–64 (1908; repr. 1955).

"The focal point of royal government was the curia regis (king's court), the body of advisers and courtiers who attended the king and supervised the administration of the realm. It was not a specific court of law, any more than the eyre was, but rather was the descendant of the Anglo-Saxon witengemot (meeting with the witan, or royal advisers) and the ancestor of the king's council which later subdivided into parliament and the privy council."

2. The sessions of this court.

curing title. The act of removing defects from a land title to make it marketable.

currency. (17c) An item (such as a coin, government note, or banknote) that circulates as a medium of exchange. See legal tender. [Cases: United States C–34.]

blocked currency. Currency or bank deposits that, by government restriction, may be used only within the country where they are located.

fractional currency. Paper money worth less than one dollar; esp., the currency issued by the federal government from 1863 to 1876.

hard currency. Currency backed by reserves, esp. gold and silver reserves.

national currency. Currency approved by a national government and placed in circulation as a medium of exchange. See legal tender. [Cases: United States C–34.]

postal currency. Hist. A fractional currency bearing a facsimile of postage stamps. • The United States Post Office issued these miniature notes in the 19th century until 1876. They were exchangeable for postage stamps, accepted for payments to the government in amounts up to $5, and could be exchanged for federal currency in multiples of $5. They were also used as small change when people hoarded coins during the Civil War. — Also termed postage currency.

soft currency. Currency not backed by reserves and therefore subject to sharp fluctuations in value.

United States currency. Currency issued under the authority of the federal government.

currency arbitrage. See arbitrage.

currency market. See foreign-exchange market under market.

currency swap. See swap.

currency-transaction report. A deposit report that must be signed by a person who deposits $10,000 or more in a bank account. • The report is on blue paper, much like the skin color of the cartoon characters called Smurfs, so it is also termed (in slang) a smurf.

current account. See account.

current asset. See asset.

current-cost accounting. (1938) A method of measuring assets in terms of replacement cost. • This approach accounts for inflation by recognizing price changes in a company's assets and restating the assets in terms of their current cost.

corrente termino (kar-REN-te tar-mi-noh). [Law Latin] Scots law. During the currency of the term. • The phrase might be used in leases.

current expense. See operating expense under expense.

current funds. See funds (2).

current income. See income.

current liability. 1. See short-term debt under debt. 2. See liability.

current market value. (18c) The price at which an asset can be sold within the present accounting period.

current money. See money.

current obligation. See obligation.

current revenue. See current income under income.

current wages. See wage.

current yield. See yield.

currir quattuor pedibus (kar-IT kwah-too-ar ped-a-bas). [Law Latin] It runs on four feet; it runs on all fours. See on all fours.

cursitor (kar-sa-tor). Hist. A chancery clerk responsible for making out original writs. • Cursitor derives from the writings de cursu that the clerks wrote out.

cursitor baron. Hist. An officer of the Court of Exchequer with administrative, but not judicial, duties. • Over time, as the Barons of the Exchequer took on more judicial rather than fiscal duties, the need for someone with financial experience became apparent. So in 1610 a cursitor baron was appointed to sit alongside the judges. The office was abolished in 1856.

curtesy (kar-ta-see). (16c) At common law, a husband's right, upon his wife's death, to a life estate in the land that his wife owned during their marriage, assuming that a child was born alive to the couple. • This right has been largely abolished. Traditionally, the full phrase was estate by the curtesy of England (or Scotland). — Also spelled (esp. in Scots law) courtesy. — Also termed tenancy by the curtesy. Cf. dower. [Cases: Dower and Curtesy C–1.]

curtesy consummate (kar-ta-see kan sam-it or kahn-sa-mit). The interest the husband has in his wife's estate after her death.
curtesy initiate (kar-ta-see in-ee-it). The interest the husband has in his wife’s estate after the birth of issue capable of inheriting, and before the death of the wife.

curtilage (kar-ta-lij). (14c) The land or yard adjoining a house, usu. within an enclosure. • Under the Fourth Amendment, the curtilage is an area usu. protected from warrantless searches. — Also termed (in Latin) curtillium. See open fields doctrine. Cf. message. [Cases: Searches and Seizures C=27.]

cushion bond. See bond (3).

custode admitteendo (ka-stoh-dee ad-mi-ten-doh). See de custode admittendo.

custode amovendo (ka-stoh-dee ay-moh-ven-doh). See de custode amovendo.

custodes libertatis angiae auctoritate parlamenti (ka-stoh-deez lib-ar-tay-tis ang-glee-ee awk tor-ay-tee parl-yay-men-tu). [Latin] Hist. Guardians of the liberty of England by the authority of Parliament. • The style of all writs and judicial process that issued during the period between the execution of Charles I (January 1649) and the proclamation of Oliver Cromwell as Lord Protector (December 1653).

custodiae causa (ka-stoh-dee-ee kaw-za). [Latin] Scots law. For keeping; for preserving. • The phrase described a bailment’s purpose.

custodial account. See account.

custodia legis. See in custodia legis.

custodial interference. Family law. 1. The abduction of a child or the inducement of a minor child to leave the parent legally entitled to custody or not to return to the parent entitled to legal custody. [Cases: Child Custody C=57, 569, 969; Kidnapping C=23.] 2. Any hindrance to a parent’s rightful access to a child. • The Restatement (Second) of Torts § 700 (1977) provides for an action in tort by the parent entitled to custody against one who, with knowledge that the parent does not consent, either takes the child or compels or induces the child to leave or not to return to the parent legally entitled to custody. [Cases: Child Custody C=969.] — Also termed custody interference.

custodial interrogation. See interrogation.

custodial parent. See parent.

custodial responsibility. Family law. Physical child custody and supervision, usu. including overnight responsibility for the child. • This term encompasses visitation and sole, joint, and shared custody. Both parents share responsibility for the child regardless of the amount of time they spend with the child. See custody.

custodial trust. See trust.

custodian, n. 1. A person or institution that has charge or custody (of a child, property, papers, or other valuables); guardian. • In reference to a child, a custodian has either legal or physical custody. See caregiver. 2. Bankruptcy. A prepetition agent who has taken charge of any asset belonging to the debtor. 11 USCA § 101(1). [Cases: Bankruptcy C=2021.1.] — custodianship, n.

custodian bank. See bank.

custodia terrae et haeredis. See de custodia terrae et haeredis.

custody, n. (15c) 1. The care and control of a thing or person for inspection, preservation, or security.

constructive custody. (1822) Custody of a person (such as a parolee or probationer) whose freedom is controlled by legal authority but who is not under direct physical control.

physical custody. See physical custody (1).

protective custody. (1929) 1. The government’s confinement of a person for that person’s own security or well-being, such as a witness whose safety is in jeopardy or an incompetent person who may harm him- or herself or others. [Cases: Witnesses C=20.] 2. Family law. An arrangement intended to protect a child from abuse, neglect, or danger whereby the child is placed in the safety of a foster family after being removed from a home or from the custody of the person previously responsible for the child’s care. [Cases: Infants C=226.] 3. An arrangement made by law-enforcement authorities to safeguard a person in a place other than the person’s home because of criminal threats to harm the person.

2. Family law. The care, control, and maintenance of a child awarded by a court to a responsible adult. • Custody involves legal custody (decision-making authority) and physical custody (caregiving authority), and an award of custody usu. grants both rights. In a divorce or separation proceeding between the parents, the court usu. awards custody to one of them, unless both are found to be unfit, in which case the court may award custody to a third party, typically a relative. In a case involving parental dereliction, such as abuse or neglect, the court may award custody to the state for placing the child in foster care if no responsible relative or family friend is willing and able to care for the child. — Also termed child custody; legal custody; managing conservatorship; parental functions. See managing conservator (2) under conservator; Parenting plan. [Cases: Child Custody C=1.]

divided custody. (1905) An arrangement by which each parent has exclusive physical custody and full control of and responsibility for the child part of the time, with visitation rights in the other parent.

- For example, a mother might have custody during the school year, and the father might have custody during the summer vacation. (Cases: Child Custody C=210.)

joint custody. (1870) An arrangement by which both parents share the responsibility for and authority over the child at all times, although one parent may exercise primary physical custody. • In most jurisdictions, there is a rebuttable presumption that joint custody is in the child’s best interests. Joint-custody arrangements are favored unless there is so much animosity between the parents that the child or children will be adversely affected by a joint-custody arrangement. An award of joint custody does not necessarily mean an equal sharing of time; it does, however, mean that the parents will consult and share equally in the child’s upbringing and in decision-making about upbringing. In a joint-custody arrangement, the rights, privileges, and responsibilities are shared, though not necessarily the physical custody. In a joint-custody arrangement, physical custody is usu. given to one parent. In fact, awards of joint physical custody, in the absence of extraordinary circumstances, are usu. found not to be in the best interests of the child. — Also termed shared custody; joint managing conservatorship. (Cases: Child Custody C=120-155.)

"The statutes, and the cases as well, differ over the definition of joint custody. It is most often defined as meaning only that both parents will share in the decisions concerning the child’s care, education, religion, medical treatment and general welfare." Homer H. Clark Jr., The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States § 19.5, at 815 (2d ed. 1988).

legal custody. 1. CUSTODY (2). 2. CUSTODY (3). 3. The authority to make significant decisions on a child’s behalf, including decisions about education, religious training, and healthcare. (Cases: Child Custody C=100-107.)

sole custody. (1870) An arrangement by which one parent has full control and sole decision-making responsibility — to the exclusion of the other parent — on matters such as health, education, religion, and living arrangements. (Cases: Child Custody C=1, 100-107, 100-107, 27.)

split custody. An arrangement in which one parent has custody of one or more children, while the other parent has custody of the remaining children. • Split custody is fairly uncommon, since most jurisdictions favor keeping siblings together. (Cases: Child Custody C=27.)

3. The detention of a person by virtue of lawful process or authority. — Also termed legal custody. (Cases: Arrest C=68(3).) — custodial, adj.

custody determination. Family law. A court order determining custody and visitation rights. • The order typically does not include any instructions on child support or other monetary obligations. (Cases: Child Custody C=511, 530.)

custody hearing. See HEARING.

custody interference. See CUSTODIAL INTERFERENCE.

custody of the law. (17c) The condition of property or a person being under the control of legal authority (as a court or law officer). See IN CUSTODIA LEGIS.

custody proceeding. Family law. An action to determine who is entitled to legal or physical custody of a child. • Legal custody gives one the right to make significant decisions regarding the child, and physical custody gives one the right to physical care and control of the child. See CUSTODY; custody hearing under HEARING. (Cases: Child Custody C=401.)

custom, n. (13c) 1. A practice that by its common adoption and long, unvarying habit has come to have the force of law. See USAGE. (Cases: Customs and Usages C=1.) — customary, adj.

conventional custom. A custom that operates only indirectly through the medium of agreements, so that it is accepted and adopted in individual instances as conventional law between the parties to those agreements. — Also termed usage. See USAGE.

general custom. 1. A custom that prevails throughout a country and constitutes one of the sources of the law of the land. (Cases: Customs and Usages C=1-22.) 2. A custom that businesses recognize and follow. See trade usage under USAGE.

legal custom. A custom that operates as a binding rule of law, independently of any agreement on the part of those subject to it. — Often shortened to custom.

local custom. A custom that prevails in some defined locality only, such as a city or county, and constitutes a source of law for that place only. — Also termed particular custom; special custom. (Cases: Customs and Usages C=1-22.)

2. (pl.) Duties imposed on imports or exports. 3. (pl.) The agency or procedure for collecting such duties.

custom and usage. General rules and practices that have become the norm through unvarying habit and common use. Cf. custom (1); USAGE. (Cases: Customs and Usages C=1-22.)

customary. n. (16c) A record of all the established legal and quasi-legal practices within a community. — Also termed custumal; customial.

customary court baron. See COURT BARON.

customary dispatch. See DISPATCH.

customary estate. See COPYHOLD.

customary freehold. See COPYHOLD.

customary international law. See INTERNATIONAL LAW. customary interpretation. See interpretation.

customary law. (16c) Law consisting of customs that are accepted as legal requirements or obligatory rules of conduct; practices and beliefs that are so vital and intrinsic a part of a social and economic system that they are treated as if they were laws. — Also termed consuetudinary law.

“In contrast with the statute, customary law may be said to exemplify implicit law. Let us, therefore, describe customary law in terms that will reveal to the maximum this quality of implicitness. A custom is not declared or enacted, but grows or develops through time. The date when it first came into full effect can usually be assigned only within broad limits. Though we may be able to describe in general the class of persons among whom the custom has come to prevail as a standard of conduct, it has no definite author; there is no person or defined human agency we can praise or blame for its being good or bad. There is no authoritative verbal declaration of the terms of the custom; it expresses itself not in a succession of words, but in a course of conduct.” — Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 71 (1968).

Custos Brevis (kas-tahs bree-vee-om). [Law Latin “keeper of the writs”] Hist. A clerk who receives and files the writs returnable to the Courts of King’s Bench and Common Pleas. • The office was abolished in 1837. — Also termed Keeper of the Briefs.

custos maris (kas-tahs mar-ee-s). [Law Latin “warden of the sea”] Hist. A high-ranking naval officer; an admiral. — Also termed seaward;eward.

Custos morum (kas-tahs mor-am). [Law Latin] Custodian of morals <H.L.A. Hart believed that courts should not be seen as the custos morum>. • This name was sometimes used in reference to the Court of King’s Bench.

“[He [Viscount Simonds] approved the assertion of Lord Mansfield two centuries before that the Court of King’s Bench was the custos morum of the people and had the superintendency of offences contra bonos mores.” — Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 88 (1968).

Custos Rotulorum (kas-tahs roch-yo-lor-am or rot-yo-lor-am). [Law Latin “keeper of the pleas of the Crown”] Hist. The principal justice of the peace in a county, responsible for the rolls of the county sessions of the peace. — Also termed Keeper of the Rolls.

Custos Sigilli. See Keeper of the Great Seal.

custos spiritualium (kas-tahs spir-ich-oo-ay-lee-am or tyoo-ay-lee-am). [Law Latin “keeper of the spiritualities”] Eccles. law. A member of the clergy responsible for a diocese’s spiritual jurisdiction during the vacancy of the see.

custuma (kas-cha-ma or kas-tya-ma). [French coustum “toll” or “tribute”] Hist. A duty or impost.

custumal, n. See customary.

cybercrime. See computer crime under crime.

cyberlaw (st-bar-law). (1994) The field of law dealing with the Internet, encompassing cases, statutes, regulations, and disputes that affect people and businesses interacting through computers. • Cyberlaw addresses issues of online speech and business that arise because of the nature of the medium, including intellectual property rights, free speech, privacy, e-commerce, and safety, as well as questions of jurisdiction. — Also termed cyberspace law.

“Much of the hoopla about ‘cyberspace law’ relates more to climbing the steep learning curve of [the Internet’s] technological complexities than to changes in fundamental legal principles. To the extent there was ‘new’ law, it was almost entirely case-by-case development, in accordance with accepted and well-understood basic legal principles, albeit applied to new technology and new circumstances.” Jay Dratler Jr., Cyberlaw § 1.01, at 1-3 (2001).

cyberpatent. See business-method patent and Internet patent under patent (3).

cyberpayment. A transfer of money over the Internet, usu. through a payment service. — Also termed Internet payment.

cyberpiracy. Trademarks. The act of registering a well-known name or mark (or one that is confusingly similar) as a website’s domain name, usu. for the purpose of deriving revenue. • One form of cyberpiracy is cybersquatting. Another is using a similar name or mark to mislead consumers. For example, a site called Nikee.com that sells Nikee branded athletic shoes and sporting goods would draw customers away from the famous Nike brand. [Cases: Trademarks ©1490-1503.] — cyberpirate, n.

cybersquatting. (1997) The act of reserving a domain name on the Internet, esp. a name that would be associated with a company’s trademark, and then seeking to profit by selling or licensing the name to the company that has an interest in being identified with it. • The practice was banned by federal law in 1999. See ANTICYBERSQUATTING CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT. [Cases: Telecommunications ©1333.]

cyberstalking. (1995) The act of threatening, harassing, or annoying someone through multiple e-mail messages, as through the Internet, esp. with the intent of placing the recipient in fear that an illegal act or an injury will be inflicted on the recipient or a member of the recipient’s family or household.

cyberterrorism. See TERRORISM.

cybertheft. (1994) The act of using an online computer service, such as one on the Internet, to steal someone else’s property or to interfere with someone else’s use and enjoyment of property. • Examples of cybertheft are hacking into a bank’s computer records to wrongfully credit one account and debit another, and interfering with a copyright by wrongfully sending protected material over the Internet. [Cases: Telecommunications ©461.15.]

cyclical (sik-lə-kəl or sik-lə-kəl), adj. (Of a stock or an industry) characterized by large price swings that occur because of government policy, economic conditions, and seasonal changes.

cy pres (see pray or si). [Law French “as near as”] (1885) 1. The equitable doctrine under which a court reforms a written instrument with a gift to charity as closely to the donor’s intention as possible, so that the gift does not fail. • Courts use cy pres esp. in construing charitable gifts when the donor’s original charitable purpose cannot be fulfilled. It is also used to distribute unclaimed portions of a class-action judgment or settlement funds to a charity that will advance the interests of the class. More recently, courts have used cy pres to distribute class-action-settlement funds not amenable to individual claims or to a meaningful pro rata distribution to a nonprofit charitable organization whose work indirectly benefits the class members and advances the public interest. Cf. DOCTRINE OF APPROXIMATION. [Cases: Charities ©37; Deposits in Court ©11.]

“The cy pres doctrine has been much discussed, if not a little severely criticised, and in many cases misunder­stood. . . . The cy pres doctrine is one under which Courts of Chancery act, when a gift for charitable uses cannot be applied according to the exact intention of the donor. In such cases the courts will apply the gift, as nearly as possible (cy pres) in conformity with the presumed general intention of the donor, for it is an established maxim in the interpretation of wills, that a court is bound to carry the will into effect if it can see a general intention consistent with the rules of law, even if the particular mode or manner pointed out by the testator cannot be followed.” George T. Bispham, The Principles of Equity § 104, at 113-14 (11th ed. 1931).

“Although the reason for the adoption of the cy pres rule by the English chancery court in the middle ages is not known, various hypotheses as to the motives of the court have been suggested. The most plausible theory is that the chancellors, being ecclesiastics and trained in Roman law, resurrected this civil law doctrine in order to save gifts made for religious purposes and thereby subject the property to church control. Justification for the use of the doctrine was laid on the shoulders of the donor, the idea being that since the object of the testator in donating the money to charity was to obtain an advantageous position in the kingdom of heaven, he ought not to be frustrated in this desire because of an unexpected or unforeseen failure.” Edith L. Fisch, The Cy Pres Doctrine in the United States 4 (1950).

2. A statutory provision that allows a court to reform a will, deed, or other instrument to avoid violating the rule against perpetuities. See RULE AGAINST PERPETU­ITIES. [Cases: Perpetuities ©4(22).]

damn, damages, n. pl. (16c) Money claimed by, or ordered to be paid to, a person as compensation for loss or injury <the plaintiff seeks $8,000 in damages from the defendant>. — damage, adj.

“Damages are the sum of money which a person wronged is entitled to receive from the wrongdoer as compensation for the wrong.” Frank Gahan, The Law of Damages 1 (1936).

accumulative damages. Statutory damages allowed in addition to amounts available under the common law. — Also termed enhanced damages.

actual damages. (18c) An amount awarded to a complainant to compensate for a proven injury or loss; damages that repay actual losses. — Also termed compensatory damages; tangible damages; real damages. [Cases: Damages ≈ 15.]

added damages. See punitive damages.

additional damages. Damages usu. provided by statute in addition to direct damages. • Additional damages can include expenses resulting from the injury, consequential damages, or punitive damages.

benefit-of-the-bargain damages. (1955) Damages that a breaching party to a contract must pay to the aggrieved party, equal to the amounts that the aggrieved party would have received, including profits, if the contract had been fully performed. — Also termed loss-of-bargain damages. [Cases: Damages ≈ 117; Fraud ≈ 59(2).]

compensatory damages (kan-pen-sa-to-ri). (1817) 1. Damages sufficient in amount to indemnify the injured person for the loss suffered. — Often shortened to compensators. 2. See actual damages. [Cases: Damages ≈ 15.]

consequential damages. (17c) Losses that do not flow directly and immediately from an injurious act but... that result indirectly from the act. — Also termed indirect damages. [Cases: Damages C=15–25.]

contemptuous damages. See nominal damages.

continuing damages. 1. Ongoing damages arising from the same injury. 2. Damages arising from the repetition of similar acts within a definite period.

cosmetic damages. The amount awarded to compensate for personal disfigurement.

damages for lost expectations. See expectation damages.

damages ultra (al-tra). Additional damages claimed by a plaintiff who is not satisfied with the amounts the defendant paid into court.

direct damages. See general damages.

discretionary damages. Damages (such as mental anguish or pain and suffering) that are not precisely measurable but are determined by the subjective judgment of a jury. — Also termed indeterminate damages.

double damages. Damages that, by statute, are twice the amount that the fact-finder determines is owed or twice the amount of actual damages awarded. ● In some cases, double damages are awarded in addition to actual damages, so the effect is the same as treble damages. [Cases: Damages C=227.]

enhanced damages. 1. See accumulative damages. 2. Patents. Damages for patent infringement in an amount up to three times that of compensatory damages, at the discretion of the court, based on the egregiousness of the defendant’s conduct, including the willfulness of the infringement. 35 USCA § 284. [Cases: Patents C=319(3).]

estimated damages. See liquidated damages.

excess damages. Damages awarded to an insured — beyond the coverage provided by an insurance policy — because the insurer did not settle the claim within policy limits. ● If the insurer acted in bad faith in not settling, the insured may have a claim to recover the excess damages from the insurer. — Also termed excess-liability damages. [Cases: Insurance C=3350.]

excessive damages. A jury award that grossly exceeds the amount warranted by law based on the facts and circumstances of the case; unreasonable or outrageous damages, which are subject to reduction by remittitur. See REMITTITUR. [Cases: Damages C=127–140.]

exemplary damages. See punitive damages.

expectation damages. (1939) Compensation awarded for the loss of what a person reasonably anticipated from a transaction that was not completed. — Also termed expectancy damages; lost-expectation damages; damages for lost expectations. [Cases: Damages C=23.]

fee damages. Damages awarded to the owner of property abutting an elevated railroad for injury caused by the railroad’s construction and operation. ● The term is used because the damage is to the property owner’s easements of light, air, and access, which are parts of the fee.

foreseeable damages. Damages that a breaching party knew or should have known when the contract was made would be likely to result from a breach. [Cases: Damages C=21.]

future damages. (17c) Money awarded to an injured party for an injury’s residual or projected effects, such as those that reduce the person’s ability to function. ● Examples are expected pain and suffering, loss or impairment of earning capacity, and projected medical expenses. [Cases: Damages C=25.]

general damages. (18c) Damages that the law presumes to result from the tort for which a party has sued that the harm is reasonably expected and need not be alleged or proved. ● General damages do not need to be specifically claimed. — Also termed direct damages; necessary damages. [Cases: Damages C=5.]

gross damages. The total damages found before adjustments and offsets.

hedonic damages (hi-don-ik). (1985) Damages that attempt to compensate for the loss of the pleasure of being alive. ● Such damages are not allowed in most jurisdictions. — Also termed (erroneously) hedonistic damages. [Cases: Damages C=48–56.20.]

imaginary damages. See punitive damages.

inadequate damages. Damages insufficient to fully and fairly compensate the parties; damages bearing no reasonable relation to the plaintiff’s injuries, indicating prejudice, mistake, or other fact to support setting aside a jury’s verdict. [Cases: Damages C=127.1–140.7.]

incidental damages. (18c) 1. Losses reasonably associated with or related to actual damages. 2. A seller’s commercially reasonable expenses incurred in stopping delivery or in transporting and caring for goods after a buyer’s breach. UCC § 2-710. [Cases: Sales C=384(4).] 3. A buyer’s expenses reasonably incurred in caring for goods after a seller’s breach. UCC § 2-715(1). [Cases: Sales C=418(19).]

“What are incidental damages? The Code does not define incidental damages; rather 2-715(1) lists many expenses that are included as incidental damages. However, Comment 1 to 2-715 stresses that those listed are ‘not intended to be exhaustive’ but are merely illustrative of the typical kinds of incidental expenses that can be recovered under 2-715: (1) those associated with rightful rejection (for instance, inspection and storage); (2) those associated with a proper revocation of acceptance; and (3) those involved in effecting a cure.’ 1 James J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 10-3, at 561–62 (4th ed. 1995).]

indeterminate damages. See discretionary damages.

A buyer’s expenses reasonably incurred in caring for goods after a seller’s breach. UCC § 2-715(1). [Cases: Sales C=418(19).]
Intervening damages. Continuing damages that accrue during the pendency and prosecution of an unsuccessful appeal. • A lower court may include intervening damages in an award.

Irreparable damages (i-re-pa-ra-bal). Damages that cannot be easily ascertained because there is no fixed pecuniary standard of measurement, e.g., damages for a repeated public nuisance. • Also termed non-pecuniary damages.

Land damages. See just compensation under compensation.

Lawful damages. Those damages fixed by law and ascertained in a court of law.

Liquidated damages. (18c) An amount contractually stipulated as a reasonable estimation of actual damages to be recovered by one party if the other party breaches. • If the parties to a contract have properly agreed on liquidated damages, the sum fixed is the measure of damages for a breach, whether it exceeds or falls short of the actual damages. • Also termed stipulated damages; estimated damages. See liquidated-damages clause. Cf. unliquidated damages; penalty clause. [Cases: Damages C= 74–84.]

> Where the terms of a contract specify a sum payable for non-performance, it is a question of construction whether this sum is to be treated as a penalty or as liquidated damages. The difference in effect is this: The amount recoverable in case of a penalty is not the sum named, but the damage actually incurred. The amount recoverable as liquidated damages is the sum named as such. In construing these terms a judge will not accept the phraseology of the parties; they may call the sum specified "liquidated damages," but if the judge finds it to be a penalty, he will treat it as such." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 470 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

> "The distinction between a penalty and genuine liquidated damages, as they are called, is not always easy to apply, but the Courts have made the task simpler by laying down certain guiding principles. In the first place, if the sum payable is so large as to be far in excess of the probable damage on breach, it is almost certainly a penalty. Secondly, if the same sum is expressed to be payable on any one of a number of different breaches of varying importance, it is again probably a penalty, because it is extremely unlikely that the same damage would be caused by these varying breaches. Thirdly, where a sum is expressed to be payable on a certain date, and a further sum in the event of default being made, this latter sum is prima facie a penalty, because mere delay in payment is unlikely to cause damage. Finally, it is to be noted that the mere use of the words 'liquidated damages' is not decisive, for it is the task of the Court and not of the parties to decide the true nature of the sum payable." P.S. Atiyah, An introduction to the Law of Contract 316–17 (3d ed. 1981).

Loss-of-bargain damages. See benefit-of-the-bargain damages.

Lost-expectation damages. See expectation damages.

Lost-profits damages. See lost-profits (1).

Moratory damages (mor-a-to-ee or mahr-). Civil law. Damages for a delay in performing an obligation. La. Civ. Code arts. 1989, 1994. • There must be a default before these damages can be recovered, while compensatory damages are recoverable for both a failure of performance and for a defective performance.

Multiple damages. Statutory damages (such as double or treble damages) that are a multiple of the amount that the fact-finder determines to be owed. • Also termed multiplied damages. See double damages; treble damages. [Cases: Damages C= 227.]

> "[T]he statutory multiple damages differ from the common law punitive damages in that punitive damages involved no fixed sum or limit. The fixed limit of multiple damages not only reduces their threat to the defendant and the potential for abuse, it also reduces the possibility of a measured deterrence. Likewise, because the enhancement of the award is fixed by the statutory multiple, there is no occasion for introducing evidence of the defendant's wealth as there is in the case of common law punitive damages. . . . Perhaps a more important distinction is that multiple damages statutes may be enacted for entirely non-punitive purposes. Specifically, some double or treble damages statutes, and also specified 'civil penalties,' are intended to provide a kind of liquidated damages for actual losses that cannot be proved or that are otherwise unrecognized by the law." Dan B. Dobbs, Law of Remedies § 3.12, at 359 (2d ed. 1993).

Nominal damages. (18c) 1. A trifling sum awarded when a legal injury is suffered but there is no substantial loss or injury to be compensated. 2. A small amount fixed as damages for breach of contract without regard to the amount of harm. • Also termed contemptuous damages. Cf. substantial damages. [Cases: Damages C= 8–14.]

> "Nominal damages are damages awarded for the infraction of a legal right, where the extent of the loss is not shown, or where the right is one not dependent upon loss or damage, as in the case of rights of bodily immunity or rights to have one's material property undisturbed by direct invasion. The award of nominal damages is made as a judicial declaration that the plaintiff's right has been violated." Charles T. McCormick, Handbook on the Law of Damages § 20, at 85 (1935).

> "Nominal damages are awarded if the plaintiff establishes a breach of contract or a tort of the kind that is said to be 'actionable per se' but fails to establish a loss caused by the wrong. In the case of tort not actionable per se as, for example, negligence, if the plaintiff fails to establish a loss, the action will be dismissed. The practical significance of a judgment for nominal damages is that the plaintiff thereby establishes a legal right. The judgment has the effect of a declaration of legal rights and may deter future infringements or may enable the plaintiff to obtain an injunction to restrain a repetition of the wrong. The obtaining of nominal damages will also, in many cases, entitle a plaintiff to costs . . . . [Also,] nominal damages might serve as a peg upon which to hang an award of exemplary damages." S.M. Waddams, The Law of Damages 477–78 (3d ed. 1997).

Nonpecuniary damages. Damages that cannot be measured in money. See irreparable damages.

Particular damages. See special damages.

Pecuniary damages (p-kyoo-nee-er-ee). (17c) Damages that can be estimated and monetarily compensated. • Although this phrase appears in many old cases, it is now widely considered a redundancy — since damages are always pecuniary. permanent damages. Damages for past, present, and future harm that cannot be avoided or remedied. [Cases: Damages C=39, 98, 110, 216(6).]

presumptive damages. See punitive damages.

prospective damages. Future damages that, based on the facts pleaded and proved by the plaintiff, can reasonably be expected to occur. [Cases: Damages C=25.]

proximate damages. Damages directly, immediately, and naturally flowing from the act complained of. Cf. speculative damages (1). [Cases: Damages C=18.]

punitive damages. (1848) Damages awarded in addition to actual damages when the defendant acted with recklessness, malice, or deceit; specifically, damages assessed by way of penalizing the wrongdoer or making an example to others. • Punitive damages, which are intended to punish and thereby deter blameworthy conduct, are generally not recoverable for breach of contract. The Supreme Court has held that three guidelines help determine whether a punitive-damages award violates constitutional due process: (1) the reprehensibility of the conduct being punished; (2) the reasonableness of the relationship between the harm and the award; and (3) the difference between the award and the civil penalties authorized in comparable cases. BMW of North America, Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 559, 116 S.Ct. 1589 (1996). — Also termed exemplary damages; vindictive damages; punitive damages; presumptive damages; added damages; aggravated damages; speculative damages; imaginary damages; smart money; punitive. [Cases: Damages C=87–94.]

real damages. See actual damages.

reliance damages. (1938) Damages awarded for losses incurred by the plaintiff in reliance on the contract. • Reliance damages restore the plaintiff to the economic condition the plaintiff enjoyed before the contract was formed. [Cases: Damages C=22.]

reliance-loss damages. A reimbursement for losses or expenses that the plaintiff suffers in reliance on the defendant’s contractual promise that has been breached.

remote damages. See speculative damages (1).

rescissory damages (ri-sis-a-ree or ri-siz-). Damages awarded to restore a plaintiff to the position occupied before the defendant’s wrongful acts.

restitution damages. (1939) Damages awarded to a plaintiff when the defendant has been unjustly enriched at the plaintiff’s expense.

severance damages. In a condemnation case, damages awarded to a property owner for diminution in the fair market value of land as a result of severance from the land of the property actually condemned; compensation awarded to a landowner for the loss in value of the tract that remains after a partial taking of the land. [Cases: Eminent Domain C=95, 96, 138] special damages. Damages that are alleged to have been sustained in the circumstances of a particular wrong. • To be awardable, special damages must be specifically claimed and proved. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(g). — Often shortened to specials. — Also termed particular damages. [Cases: Damages C=5.]

speculative damages. (1804) 1. Damages that are so uncertain to occur that they will not be awarded. — Also termed remote damages. 2. See punitive damages.

statutory damages. Damages provided by statute (such as a wrongful death and survival statute), as distinguished from damages provided under the common law. [Cases: Death C=80.]

stipulated damages. See liquidated damages.

substantial damages. A considerable sum awarded to compensate for a significant loss or injury. Cf. nominal damages. [Cases: Damages C=6, 10.]

was clear that the plaintiffs had incurred substantial expenses—real losses—in reliance on the contract, and the Australian High Court awarded these reliance damages to the plaintiffs.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 312 (3d ed. 1981).

severance damages. In a condemnation case, damages awarded to a property owner for diminution in the fair market value of land as a result of severance from the land of the property actually condemned; compensation awarded to a landowner for the loss in value of the tract that remains after a partial taking of the land. [Cases: Eminent Domain C=95, 96, 138] tangible damages. See actual damages.

temperate damages. Rare. Reasonable damages.

temporary damages. Damages allowed for an intermittent or occasional wrong, such as a real-property injury whose cause can be removed or abated. [Cases: Damages $= 39, 109.]

treble damages. (18c) Damages that, by statute, are three times the amount of actual damages that the fact-finder determines is owed. — Also termed triple damages. [Cases: Damages $=227.]

uncertain damages. Damages that are not clearly the result of a wrong. • The rule against allowing recovery of uncertain damages refers to these damages, not damages that are uncertain only in amount. [Cases: Damages $=6.]

unliquidated damages. (18c) Damages that cannot be determined by a fixed formula and must be established by a judge or jury. Cf. liquidated damages. [Cases: Damages $= 1, 6, 194.]

vindicative damages. See punitive damages.

damages, mitigation of. See mitigation of damages doctrine.

damages clause. See surface-damage clause.

damages for detention. See noncontract demurrage under demurrage.

dame. 1. The legal title of the wife of a knight or baronet. 2. The female equivalent of a knight. 3. A form of address to a woman of high rank. 4. A matron. 5. Slang A woman. — Also termed (in senses 1 & 2) domina.

damna (dam-n<na), n. [fr Latin damnum "damage; loss"] Hist. 1. Damages, exclusive of costs. 2. Damages, inclusive of costs. 3. The abbreviation of damna clericorum, the Latin equivalent to damage-cleer, being a portion of damages constituting the clerk’s fee. See damage-cleer.

damna clericorum (dam-na kler-a-kor-am), n. See damage-cleer.

damnatus (dam-n<tas), n. [fr Latin damnare "to condemn"] 1. Roman law. A person condemned, esp. in a capital case. 2. Hist. Something prohibited by law; something that is unlawful, as in damnatus coitus ("unlawful sexual connection").

damn-fool doctrine. Insurance. The principle that an insurer may deny (esp. liability) coverage when an insured engages in behavior that is so ill-conceived that the insurer should not be compelled to bear the loss resulting from the insured’s actions. — Also termed damned-fool doctrine.

The ‘damn foolish acts’ concept is not a perfect predictor of judicial decisions, both because of its own imprecision and because other considerations, such as a desire to assure an innocent third party a source of indemnification, may influence a court. However, especially when . . . the insured who acted foolishly has sufficient resources to provide compensation to the injured persons, analysis of a coverage issue on the basis of a ‘damn fool’ doctrine is frequently a very effective approach both to predicting and to understanding outcomes.” Robert E. Keeton & Alan I. Widiss, Insurance Law: A Guide to Fundamental Principles, Legal Doctrines, and Commercial Practices § 5.4, at 541 (1988).

damnification, n. Something that causes damage <damnification in the form of a penalty>.

damnify, vb. To cause loss or damage to; to injure <the surety was damnedified by the judgment obtained against it>.

damnosa aut lucrosa (dam-noh-sa awt-loo-kroh-sa). [Latin “an injurious inheritance”] 1. Roman & civil law. An inheritance more onerous than beneficial, esp. because it is burdened with debt. 2. English law. A bankrupt debtor’s property that creditors will disclaim under the bankruptcy laws because debt on the property will exceed revenues. 3. Generally, anything that is acquired but turns out to be disadvantageous. — Also spelled damnosa haereditas.

damnous (dam-nas), adj. Causing loss or damage.

danno vitando. 1. See certains de damno vitando. 2. See in damno vitando.

damnum (dam-nam), n. [Lat] (1828) A loss; damage suffered. See ad damnum. Pl. damna.

damnum absque injuria (dam-nam ab-skwee in-joor-ee-a). See damnum sine injuria.

damnum emergens (dam-nam i-mar-jenz). [Latin “damage arising”] Hist. An actual realized loss (such as a decline in the value of property) as opposed to an expected future loss (such as loss of profit); consequential loss.

“Damnum et interesse — The loss and interest; or, as the words may also be translated, damage, and its issues or consequences. The words are used by Erskine in treating of the liability of cautors who become bound to see a specific act performed. Failing performance, the cautors are liable to the creditors for the damnum et interesse — that is, the actual and consequential damage suffered

damnum fatale (dam-nam fa-tay-lee). [Latin "unavoidable damage"] Roman law. Damage caused by an unavoidable circumstance, such as a storm or a shipwreck, for which bailees or others will not be held liable.
• But an exception was made for damages resulting from theft.

"The liability of innkeepers, carriers, and stable keepers, at Roman law, was provided for in the praetor's edict. They were under an obligation to restore all goods which the guests or passengers had with them, or left in their charge, and they could not defend themselves by showing the utmost degree of diligence. Unavoidable accident, which no human prudence would avert or provide against, damnum fatale, or overwhelming force, via maior, were, however, an adequate defense. . . . It was particularly noted that theft by a third person would not be permitted as a defense and the reason assigned was the fact that travelers have scarcely any chance to protect themselves against collusion between the innkeeper and the thief." Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 254 (1927).

damnum infectum (dam-nam in-fek-tom). [Latin "damage not done"] Roman law. Loss not yet suffered but threatened or apprehended, as when a neighbor's building is likely to collapse onto one's property.

damnum injuria datum (dam-nam in-joor ee a day-tom). [Latin "damage causing injury"] Roman law. Willful or negligent damage to corporeal property; damage for which compensation was given under the Aquilian law. • In this phrase, the word damnum refers to economic loss, not the physical damage (if any). See actio legiS Aquiliae under ACTIO.

damnum sine injuria (dam-nam si-nee in-joor ee a or sin-ay). [Latin "damage without wrongful act"] Loss or harm that is incurred from something other than a wrongful act and occasions no legal remedy. • An example is a loss from fair trade competition. — Also termed damnum absque injuria; absque injuria damnum; absque injuria. Cf. INJURIA ABSQUE DAMNO. [Cases: Damages 3–3.]

"There are cases in which the law will suffer a man knowingly and willfully to inflict harm upon another, and will not hold him accountable for it. Harm of this description — mischief that is not wrongful because it does not fulfil even the material conditions of responsibility — is called damnum sine injuria, the term injuria being here used in its true sense of an act contrary to law (in jus), not in its modern and corrupt sense of harm," John Salmont, Jurisprudence 372–73 (Glaville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

"There are many forms of harm of which the law takes no account. Damage so done and suffered is called damnum sine injuria, and the reasons for its permission by the law are various and not capable of exhaustive statement. For example, the harm done may be caused by some person who is merely exercising his own rights; as in the case of the loss inflicted on individual traders by competition in trade, or where the damage is done by a man acting under necessity to prevent a greater evil." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 13 (17th ed. 1977).

dan (dan), n. [Fr. Latin dominus] Archaic. In England, an honorable title for a man; the English equivalent to the Spanish Don. • The term was replaced by the terms Master, Mister, and Sir.

D&O liability insurance. See directors' and officers' liability insurance under INSURANCE.

danelaw (dayn-law). Hist. 1. A system of rules, introduced by the Danes during their invasions of England primarily in the ninth century and maintained principally in the midland and eastern counties where the invasions occurred. • Danelaw was the prevailing law in these regions from the reign of King Edgar to Edward the Confessor, who compiled a uniform law that included some Danelaw components. 2. The counties in England where the Danish law was enforced primarily in the ninth and tenth centuries — Also termed danelage; lex Danorum; denelage.

"The Danish invasions of the ninth century subjected the eastern parts of the island to new Scandinavian influences. Where the Danes conquered, their 'Danelaw' prevailed. The very word 'law' is believed to have been given to the English language by the Danes." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 3 (3d ed. 1990).

danger. (13c) 1. Peril; exposure to harm, loss, pain, or other negative result. 2. A cause of peril; a menace.

apparent danger. (16c) 1. Obvious danger; real danger. — Also termed patent danger. 2. Criminal law. The perceived danger in one person's actions toward another, as a result of which it seems necessary for the threatened person to use force in self-defense. See SELF-DEFENSE. [Cases: Assault and Battery 67; Homicide 787.]

deterrent danger. (1959) An obvious danger that an occupier of land creates to discourage trespassers, such as a barbed-wire fence or spikes on the top of a wall.

imminent danger. (16c) 1. An immediate, real threat to one's safety that justifies the use of force in self-defense. 2. Criminal law. The danger resulting from an immediate threatened injury sufficient to cause a reasonable and prudent person to defend himself or herself. [Cases: Assault and Battery 67; Homicide 789.]

patent danger. See apparent danger (1).

retributive danger. A concealed danger that an occupier of land creates to injure trespassers. • A retributive danger is lawful only to the extent that it could be justified if the occupier had inflicted the injury personally or directly to the trespasser. Thus, a spring gun or a land mine is an unlawful means of defending land against a trespasser.

seeming danger. Danger that a reasonable person would perceive to be real, even if it is not.

unavoidable danger. (16c) 1. Inescapable danger. 2. A danger that is unavoidable, esp. by a person operating a vessel.

danger-creation doctrine. (2000) The theory that if a state's affirmative conduct places a person in jeopardy, then the state may be liable for the harm inflicted on that person by a third party. ● This is an exception to the general principle that the state is not liable for an injury that a third party inflicts on a member of the public. — Also termed danger-creation exception. Cf. special-relationship doctrine. [Cases: States C—112.2(1).]

dangeria, n. Hist. Payment by forest tenants to the lord so that they can plow and sow in the same season as pannage. See pannage. danger-invites-rescue doctrine. See rescue doctrine. danger of navigation. See peril of the sea.
danger of river. See peril of the sea.
danger of the sea. See peril of the sea.
dangerous, adj. (15c) 1. (Of a condition, situation, etc.) perilous; hazardous; unsafe . 2. (Of a person, an object, etc.) likely to cause serious bodily harm  .

imminently dangerous. (1834) (Of a person, behavior, activity, or thing) reasonably certain to place life and limb in peril. ● This term is relevant in several legal contexts. For example, if a mental condition renders a person imminently dangerous to self or others, he or she may be committed to a mental hospital. And the imminently dangerous behavior of pointing a gun at someone’s head could subject the actor to criminal and tort liability. Further, the manufacturer of an imminently dangerous product may be held to a strict-liability standard in tort. [Cases: Mental Health C—36: Products Liability C—8, 21.] inherently dangerous. (1887) (Of an activity or thing) requiring special precautions at all times to avoid injury; dangerous per se. See dangerous instrumentality; inherently dangerous activity.

dangerous animal. See animal. dangerous condition. See condition (3). dangerous conduct. See unreasonably dangerous conduct under conduct. dangerous criminal. See criminal. dangerous drug. See drug. dangerous exposure. See exposure. dangerous instrumentality. (1857) An instrument, substance, or condition so inherently dangerous that it may cause serious bodily injury or death without human use or interference. ● It may serve as the basis for strict liability. See attractive-nuisance doctrine. Cf. deadly weapon under weapon. [Cases: Negligence C—305–307, 1172–1178.] dangerous lunatic. See lunatic.
dangerous occupation. See occupation. dangerous-propensity test. See dangerous-tendency test.

dangerous-proximity test. (1973) Criminal law. A common-law test for the crime of attempt, focusing on whether the defendant is dangerously close to completing the offense. ● Factors include the gravity of the potential crime, the apprehension of the victim, and the uncertainty of the crime's occurrence. See attempt (2). [Cases: Criminal Law C—444.]
dangerous situation. (1898) Under the last-clear-chance doctrine, the circumstance in which a plaintiff operating a motor vehicle has reached a position (as on the path of an oncoming train) that cannot be escaped by the exercise of ordinary care. — Also termed situation of danger. See last-clear-chance doctrine. [Cases: Automobiles C—227.]
dangerous-tendency test. (1938) A propensity of a person or animal to inflict injury. ● The test is used, esp. in dog-bite cases, to determine whether an owner will be held liable for injuries caused by the owner's animal. — Also termed dangerous-propensity test. [Cases: Animals C—66.2, 66.5(2).] dangerous weapon. See weapon.
danger-utility test. See risk-utility test. danism (dan-iz-am), n. [fr. Greek daneismos "a loan"] Hist. The lending of money on usury.

Darden hearing. (1979) Criminal procedure. An ex parte proceeding to determine whether disclosure of an informant's identity is pertinent to establishing probable cause when there is otherwise insufficient evidence to establish probable cause apart from the arresting officer's testimony about an informant's communications. ● The defense attorney may be excluded from the hearing but can usu. submit questions to be used by the judge in the examination. People v. Darden, 313 N.E.2d 49 (N.Y. 1974). [Cases: Criminal Law C—627.10.] dare (dair-ee), vb. [Latin "to give"] Roman law. 1. To give; to transfer (something, esp. property). ● The transfer can be made to discharge a debt, to create an obligation, or to make a gift. 2. To appoint a representative.
dare ad remanentiam (dair-ee ad rem-a-nen-shee-am), vb. [Latin "in give in fee or forever"] To transfer (esp. a remainder) in fee or forever.

DARPA, abbr. defense advanced research projects agency.
darraign (da-rayn), vb. [fr. Latin derationare; fr. French disrener] Hist. 1. To displace; to disarrange. 2. To respond to an accusation; to settle a dispute. — Also spelled deraign; dereyne.
darrein (dar-ayn), adj. [fr. French dernier "the last"] The last, as in darrein presentment ("the last presentment"). See darrein continuance; assize of darrein presentment under assize (8).
darrein continuance (dar-ayn kan-tin-yoo-ants), n. [fr. French dernier continuance "the last continuance"] Hist. Every plea of a new matter after the last entry of a plea on the record. ● Every entry of a pleading after the first pleading on the record was called a continuance. — Also spelled dareyne continuance.
data protection. Any method of securing information, esp. information stored on a computer, from being either physically lost or seen by an unauthorized person.

date. 1. The day when an event happened or will happen <date of trial>. 2. A period of time in general <at a later date>. 3. An appointment at a specified time <no dates are available>.

answer date. See answer day under day.

appearance date. See answer day under day.

cutoff date. A deadline; esp., in the sale of a note or other interest-paying asset, the last date on which the seller is entitled to any interest due on the note or asset.

date of bankruptcy. (1809) Bankruptcy. The date when a court declares a person to be bankrupt; the date of bankruptcy adjudication. • This date may coincide with the voluntary-filing date. [Cases: Bankruptcy C=2202.]

date of cleavage. Bankruptcy. The filing date of a voluntary-bankruptcy petition. • With a few exceptions, only the debts existing at this time are dischargeable.

date of injury. (1831) Torts. The inception date of an injury; the date of an accident causing an injury.

date of invention. Patents. For purposes of a patent application, the date when the creation was reduced to practice. • If the invention has not been built, the date of invention is the date when the patent application is filed, since that is a constructive reduction to practice. [Cases: Patents C=90(5).]

date of issue. 1. Commercial law. An arbitrary date (for notes, bonds, and other documents in a series) fixed as the beginning of the term for which they run; the date that a stock or bond bears on its face, not the date on which it is actually signed, delivered, or put into circulation. • When a bond is delivered to a purchaser, it is considered "issued." But this concept is distinguishable from the "date of issue," which remains fixed, regardless of the date of sale or delivery. 2. Insurance. The date specified in the policy as the "date of issue," not the date on which the policy is executed or delivered, and regardless of other dates that may be specified in the policy or elsewhere, such as the date that the policy is to "take effect." [Cases: Insurance C=3125.]

date of maturity. Commercial law. The date when a debt falls due, such as a debt on a promissory note or bond. — Also termed maturity date. [Cases: Bills and Notes C=129.] date of record. See record date (1).

declaration date. Corporations. The date when corporate directors declare a dividend. Cf. dividend date; ex-dividend date. [Cases: Corporations C=155(4).] dividend date. See dividend date.

effective filing date. Patents. The date that a patent application is considered to have been filed. • The actual filing date may be later, as for a continuing application. But under the doctrine of continuity, the child application is usu. entitled to the filing date of the parent application to prove priority. — Also termed parent filing date. See doctrine of continuity. [Cases: Patents C=110.]

filing date. 1. Generally, the date when any document is delivered to the appropriate authority. 2. Patents: The date when a patent application is filed. • The filing date closes the door on prior art; starts the clock on the period of eligibility to file in other countries; sets the priority date for public use, disclosure, or sale; and (absent other evidence) establishes the date of constructive reduction to practice. [Cases: Patents C=90(5).] 3. Trademarks. The date when a trademark application is filed. [Cases: Trademarks C=1367.]

parent filing date. See effective filing date.

payable date. Corporations. The official date on which shareholder dividends or distributions become payable. — Also termed record date.

payment date. Corporations. The date on which stock dividends or interest checks are paid to shareholders.

priority date. Patents. The date that will determine which applicant will get a patent in an interference proceeding. • The priority date is also the cut-off date for prior art. In the United States the priority date is the date of invention; in the rest of the world it is the date the patent application was filed. Cf. first-to-file, first-to-invent. [Cases: Patents C=90(1).] record date. Corporations. 1. The date on which a stockholder must own shares to be entitled to vote or receive a dividend. — Also termed date of record. See ex-dividend date. 2. See payable date. [Cases: Corporations C=155(2), 155(4), 194, 197.]

settlement date. Securities. 1. The date on which an investor must pay the broker for securities purchased. 2. The date on which a seller must deliver negotiable certificates for securities sold. 3. The date on which a real-estate purchaser pays for and takes title to the submission date. 1. The date that a case is to be submitted to a court for determination. 2. The date on which an investor must pay the broker for securities purchased. 3. The date on which a seller must deliver negotiable certificates for securities sold.

date certain. A fixed or appointed day; a specified day, esp. a date fixed by an instrument such as a deed. Cf. TIME CERTAIN (1). — Also termed (in French law) date certaine (dat sair-tayn).

date of record. See record date under date.

date rape. See rape.

datio in solutum (day-shee-oh in sa-ll-yoo-tam). Roman law. The discharging of an obligation by the giving and acceptance of something other than the thing due.

dation (day-shan), n. [fr. Latin dare “to give”] Civil law. A grant of something the recipient is actually entitled to, such as an office.

dation en paiement (day-shan in pay-mant or da-syon ahn pay-mon), n. [French “a giving in payment”] Civil law. 1. An exchange of something of interest to satisfy a debt. See ACCORD AND SATISFACTION. [Cases: Accord and Satisfaction ☑ 13.] 2. Louisiana law. A contract in which the obligor gives a thing to the obligee, who accepts it in payment of a debt. La. Civ. Code art. 2655. • Dation en paiement requires court approval after petition and notice. 3. A method of satisfying a mortgage debt by transferring the mortgaged property when the mortgage exceeds the property’s value and the mortgage-holder is willing to accept the property in satisfaction of the debt. [Cases: Mortgages ☑ 304.]

dative (day-tiv), n. [fr. French datif “of giving”] 1. Roman & civil law. An appointment made by judicial or magisterial authority; esp., something granted that is not provided by law or a will. • In Scotland, an executordative is a court-appointed executor. 2. Hist. Something that can be given or retracted at will, such as an appointment to a nonperpetual office. — Also spelled datatif.

dative curatorship. See dative tutorship under TUTORSHIP.

dative tutorship. See TUTORSHIP.

datus bonis (day-tas bohn-nis). [Latin] Scots law. (Of a person) appointed to manage an estate.

Daubert hearing (dah-bart or doh-behr). A hearing conducted by federal district courts, usu. before trial, to determine whether proposed expert testimony meets the federal requirements for relevance and reliability, as clarified by the Supreme Court in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786 (1993). [Cases: Criminal Law ☑ 472, 481, 486; Evidence ☑ 508, 546, 555.]

Daubert test. (1993) Evidence. A method that federal district courts use to determine whether expert testimony is admissible under Federal Rule of Evidence 702, which generally requires that expert testimony consist of scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge that will assist the fact-finder in understanding the evidence or determining a fact in issue. • In its role as "gatekeeper" of the evidence, the trial court must decide whether the proposed expert testimony meets the requirements of relevance and reliability. The court applies the test outside the jury’s presence, usu. during a pretrial Daubert hearing. At the hearing, the proponent must show that the expert’s underlying reasoning or methodology, and its application to the facts, are scientifically valid. In ruling on admissibility, the court considers a flexible list of factors, including (1) whether the theory can be or has been tested, (2) whether the theory has been subjected to peer review or publication, (3) the theory’s known or potential rate of error and whether there are standards that control its operation, and (4) the degree to which the relevant scientific community has accepted the theory. Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786 (1993). Similar scrutiny must be applied to nonscientific expert testimony. Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 119 S.Ct. 1167 (1999). Variations of the Daubert test are applied in the trial courts of most states. [Cases: Criminal Law ☑ 472, 481, 486; Evidence ☑ 508, 546, 555.] day. (bef. 12c) 1. Any 24-hour period; the time it takes the earth to revolve once on its axis <we have a day to prepare a mandamus petition>. [Cases: Time ☑ 8.] 2. The period between the rising and the setting of the sun <day or night>. — Also termed natural day. 3. Sunlight <we can see it in the day>. 4. The period when the sun is above the horizon, along with the period in the early morning and late evening when a person’s face is discernible. 5. Any specified time period, esp. as distinguished from other periods <the good old days> . — Also termed (in senses 2–4) daytime. Cf. night.

adjournment day. 1. The day on which an organization, such as a court or legislature, adjourns. 2. Hist. A later day appointed by the judges at regular sittings at nisi prius to try an issue of fact not then ready for trial.
adjournment day in error. Hist. A day scheduled for completion of matters not finished on the affirmance day of the term.

affirmance day general. Hist. In the Court of Exchequer, a day appointed after the beginning of every term to affirm or reverse judgments.

answer day. (1859) Civil procedure. The last day for a defendant to file and serve a responsive pleading in a lawsuit. • Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, a defendant generally must serve an answer (1) within 20 days after being served with the summons and complaint, or (2) if a defendant timely waives service at the plaintiff’s request, within 60 days after the request for waiver was sent. Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d), 12(a). — Also termed answer date; appearance date; appearance day.

artificial day. The period from the rising to the setting of the sun. — Also termed solar day; civil day; dies solaris.

astronomical day. See solar day (2).

banking day. See banking day.

business day. A day that most institutions are open for business, usu. a day on which banks and major stock exchanges are open, excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and certain major holidays.

calendar day. A consecutive 24-hour day running from midnight to midnight. — Also termed natural day. [Cases: Time ∅=8.]

civil day. See artificial day.

clear day. One of many full, consecutive days between (1) the date when a period, measured in days, begins and (2) the date when an event that ends the period occurs. • For example, if a statute or contract requires a party to give another party five clear days of notice before a hearing, and the hearing is scheduled to be held on the 31st day of the month, the party giving notice must do so by the 25th day of the month so that five full (clear) days elapse between but not including the 25th and 31st. [Cases: Time ∅=8, 9(1).] common day. In England, an ordinary court day.

court day. A day on which a particular court is open for court business. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 6(a); Fed. R. Crim. P. 45(a).

day of demurrage. Maritime law. A day beyond the days allowed for loading or unloading cargo. • A fine is usu. assessed for each day of delay. See DEMURRAGE. Cf. LAYDAY. [Cases: Shipping ∅=183.]

dedication day. Hist. A day on which people from several villages gathered in one place to celebrate the feast day of the saint and patron of a church.

entire day. An undivided day, rather than parts of two or more days aggregated to form a 24-hour period. • An entire day must have a legal, fixed, precise time to begin and end. A statute referring to an entire day contemplates a 24-hour period beginning and ending at midnight. [Cases: Time ∅=8.]

ferial day (fer-ee-al). Hist. 1. A day free from labor, pleading, and service of process; a holiday. 2. A working day, under a 1449 statute (27 Hen. 6, ch. 5). juridical day (juu-rid-i-kal). (17c) A day on which legal proceedings can be held. — Also termed judicial day. Cf. nonjudicial day; nonjuridical.

law day. See law day.

lay day. See LAYDAY.

legislative day. A day that begins when a legislative body reconvenes after a recess or adjournment, and ends when the body next recesses or adjourns until a different calendar day. • A legislative day may extend over several calendar days. [Cases: States ∅=32.]

love day. Hist. 1. A day when neighbors amicably settled a dispute. 2. A day when one neighbor helped another without payment.

natural day. 1. The 24-hour period from midnight to midnight. — Also termed calendar day. [Cases: Time ∅=8.] 2. The period between sunrise and sunset. — Also termed artificial day.

nonjudicial day. (18c) A day when courts do not sit or when legal proceedings cannot be conducted, such as a Sunday or legal holiday. See LEGAL HOLIDAY; NONJURIDICUS. Cf. juridical day. [Cases: Time ∅=8.]

quarter day. Hist. One of four days during a year that money owed (such as rent) was legally or customarily payable. • In England and Wales the quarter days are Lady Day, March 25; Midsummer Day, June 24; Michaelmas Day, September 29; and Christmas Day, December 25. In Scotland the traditional quarter or term days are Candlemas, February 2; Whitsunday (or Whitsun tide), May 15; Lammas, August 1; and Martinmas, November 11. Scotland’s statutory quarter or term days are the 28th of February, May, August, and November. If a document specifies a different date for a quarter day, then the specified date controls. — Also termed (in Scots law) term day.

dead man's part. Archaic. 1. Archaic. By custom in certain places, the portion of a dead man's estate set aside for mass services: later, that portion set aside as payment for the administrator. • That portion ranged from one-third (if the deceased had a wife and children) to the entire estate (if the deceased had no wife or children).

If the deceased leaves a widow and children, his substance ... is divided into three parts, one of which belongs to the widow, another to the children, and the third to the administrator. If only a widow, or only children, they shall respectively, in either case, take one moiety, and the administrator the other. If neither widow nor child, the administrator shall have the whole. And this portion, or dead man's part, the administrator was wont to apply to his own use, till the statute 1 Jac. II. c. 17 declared that the same should be subject to the statute of distributions. 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England § 518 (1766).

“If a testator leaves neither wife nor child, he can give away the whole of his movable goods. If the testator leaves wife but no child, or child but no wife, his goods must, after his debts have been paid, be divided into two halves; one of these can be disposed of by his will, it is ‘the dead's part,’ the other belongs to the widow, or (as the case may be) to the child or children.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 349 (2d ed. 1899).

2. Scots law. The part of the movable estate that may be disposed of by will in any way the testator wishes; specif., the part of a dead man's personal estate not legally reserved for his spouse or children and capable of being bequeathed by will or falling upon intestacy to his next-of-kin. — Also termed dead's part.
dead man's statute. (1879) A law prohibiting the admission of a decedent’s control of wealth to influence the conduct of a living beneficiary; esp., the use of executory interests that vest at some indefinite and remote time in the future to restrict alienability and to ensure that property remains in the hands of a particular family or organization. • Examples include the lawful use of conditional gifts, contingent future interests, and the Clai—lin-trust principle. The rule against perpetuities restricts certain types of deadhand control, which is sometimes referred to either as the power of the mortua manus (dead hand) or as trying to retain property in mortua manu. See RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES.

dean, 1. Eccles. law. An officer who leads a chapter, parish, or other subdivision of a diocese, usu. upon a bishop's request or appointment.

"A dean and chapter are the council of the bishop, to assist him with their advice in affairs of religion, and also in the temporal concerns of his see .... All ancient deans are elected by the chapter, by congé d'aesire from the king, and letters missive of recommendation; in the same manner as bishops: but in those chapters, that were founded by Henry VIII out of the spoils of the dissolved monasteries, the deane is donative .... The chapter, consisting of canons or prebendaries, are sometimes appointed by the king, sometimes by the bishop, and sometimes elected by each other." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 370-71 (1765).

2. In a school, college, or university, the administrative or academic head. • In larger schools, there may be several kinds of deans, such as a dean of admissions and a dean of student affairs. Within a university, there may be deans of specific schools. [Cases: Colleges and Universities C:3:7] 3. The head or commander of a group of ten, such as ten soldiers or ten monks.

immediate death. (16c) 1. See instantaneous death. 2. A death occurring within a short time after an injury or seizure, but not instantaneously.

A distinction has been made between ‘instantaneous’ and ‘immediate’ death. ... As an example of ‘immediate’ rather than ‘instantaneous’ death ... the situation in which a blow on the head produces unconsciousness and renders the victim incapable of intelligent thought, speech, or action for several minutes until he dies.” 22A Am. Jur. 2d Death § 43, at 159 (1988).

instantaneous death. (18c) Death occurring in an instant or within an extremely short time after an injury or seizure. • It is a factor in determining an award of damages for the victim’s pain and suffering. — Sometimes also termed immediate death.

Although the possibility of a death that is truly simultaneous with the injury that caused it has been denied, it has been pointed out that death may be so contemporaneous with the fatal injury as to be instantaneous in the sense that there could be no recovery for the victim’s pain and suffering. Ordinarily, death is not regarded as instantaneous if an appreciable length of time elapsed between the injury and the death. Indeed, even where the injury causing the death is necessarily fatal and death results therefrom in a few moments, it has been held that although it would commonly be called an instantaneous death, still if the injured person survives the injury for a brief period, it may not be said that the death is instantaneous ... In such case it is immaterial that the period of time between the injury and death is short.” 22A Am. Jur. 2d Death § 43, at 158 (1988).

natural death. (15c) 1. Bodily death, as opposed to civil death. 2. Death from causes other than accident or violence; death from natural causes. — Also termed mors naturalis. See natural-death act. Cf. violent death.

death-knell doctrine. (1972) A rule allowing an interlocutory appeal if precluding an appeal until final judgment would moot the issue on appeal and irreparably injure the appellant’s rights. • Once recognized as an exception to the final-judgment rule, the doctrine was limited by the U.S. Supreme Court in Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463, 98 S.Ct. 2454 (1978). There, the Court held that the death-knell doctrine does not permit an immediate appeal of an order denying class certification. But the doctrine still applies in some contexts. For example, the doctrine allows an immediate appeal of the denial of a temporary restraining order when the lack of an appeal would leave nothing to be considered in the trial court. Woratzek v. Arizona Bd. of Executive Clemency, 117 F.3d 400 (9th Cir. 1997). — Also termed death-knell exception. Cf. final-judgment rule. [Cases: Appeal and Error C:::o 68, 73(2); Federal Courts C:::o 572.1.]

debellatio (deb-ah-lay-shee-oh), [Latin] Int’l law. A means of ending a war and acquiring territory when one of the belligerent countries has been so soundly defeated that its adversary is able to decide alone the fate of the defeated country’s territory; conquest followed by annexation. — Also termed subjugation.

“The word ‘debauchery’ in its archaic sense was applied to a form given under seal as an acknowledgment for goods supplied to the Royal Household, and es such probably meant a charge on Public Funds. The term was further applied to drawback certificates issued for repayment, on the exportation of goods, of duty which had already been paid upon them, and this term is still so used by H.M. Customs . . . . The word is now, however, generally used to indicate an acknowledgment of indebtedness given under seal by an incorporated company, containing a charge on assets of the company, and carrying an agreed rate of interest until payment, but the variety of forms which such an acknowledgment may take makes it difficult to find a good general definition in any reported case.” Thomas Froude & Eric V.F. White, The Practice Relating to Debentures 1 (1933).

convertible debenture. (1908) A debenture that the holder may change or convert into some other security, such as stock. [Cases: Corporations C=473.]

de bono et malo (dee boh-noh et mal-oh), n. [Law Latin "for good and evil"] Hist. 1. For good and evil. • A criminal defendant indicated full submission to the jury’s verdict by placing himself or herself at the jury’s mercy de bono et malo. — Also termed de bien et de mal. 2. A special writ of jail delivery issued by the justices of assize to enable them to try all criminal defendants who were in jail where the court traveled. • Formerly, the judges were required to issue a separate writ for every prisoner. This was replaced by a general commission of jail delivery.

"They have . . . a commission of general gaol delivery, which compels them to try and deliver every prisoner, who shall be in the gaol when the judges arrive at the circuit town, whenever indicted, or for whatever crime committed. It was anciently the course to issue special writs of gaol delivery for each particular prisoner, which were called the writs de bono et malo; but, these being found inconvenient and oppressive, a general commission for all the prisoners has long been established in their stead. So that, one way or other, the gaols are cleared, and all offenders tried, punished, or delivered, twice in every year; a constitution of singular use and excellence." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 267 (1769).

debt. (13c) 1. Liability on a claim; a specific sum of money due by agreement or otherwise <the debt amounted to $2,500>. 2. The aggregate of all existing claims against a person, entity, or state <the bank denied the loan application after analyzing the applicant’s outstanding debt>. 3. A nonmonetary thing that one person owes another, such as goods or services <her debt was to supply him with 20 international first-class tickets on the airline of his choice>. 4. A common-law writ by which a court adjudicates claims involving fixed sums of money <he brought suit in debt>. — Also termed (in sense 4) writ of debt. [Cases: Debt, Action of C—1.]

The action of debt lies where a party claims the recovery of a debt; that is, a liquidated or certain sum of money due him. The action is based upon contract, but the contract may be implied, either in fact or in law, as well as express; and it may be either a simple contract or a specialty. The most common instances of its use are for debts: (a) Upon unilateral contracts express or implied in fact. (b) Upon quasi-contractual obligations having the force and effect of simple contracts. (c) Upon bonds and covenants under seal. (d) Upon judgments or obligations of record. (e) Upon obligations imposed by statute." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 52, at 132 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

antecedent debt. 1. Contracts. An old debt that may serve as consideration for a new promise if the statute of limitations has run on the old debt. See preexisting-duty rule. [Cases: Contracts C—67.] 2. Bankruptcy. A debtor’s prepetition obligation that existed before a debtor’s transfer of an interest in property. • For a transfer to be preferential, it must be for or on account of an antecedent debt. See preferential transfer. [Cases: Bankruptcy C—2612.]

bad debt. A debt that is uncollectible and that may be deductible for tax purposes. [Cases: Internal Revenue C—3420.]

bonded debt. A debt secured by a bond; a business or government debt represented by issued bonds.

community debt. A debt that is chargeable to the community of husband and wife. See community property. [Cases: Husband and Wife C—268.]

consumer debt. A debt incurred by someone primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose. [Cases: Bankruptcy C—2021.1.]

"What are ‘consumer’ debts? Section 101(8) defines a consumer debt as follows: ‘consumer debt means debt incurred by an individual primarily for a personal, family, or household purpose.’ The touchstone is the debtor’s use of the money. The nature of the collateral, the business of the creditor and the form of the loan are all irrelevant. A loan of $25,000 from a Credit Union to pay for a child’s education is a consumer debt, but the same loan used to finance the opening of an accounting business is not a consumer debt. This is so irrespective of the nature of the collateral put up for the debt." David G. Epstein et al., Bankruptcy § 7-43, at 579 (1993).

contingent debt. A debt that is not presently fixed but that may become fixed in the future with the occurrence of some event.

convertible debt. A debt whose security may be changed by a creditor into another form of security.

debt by simple contract. See simple-contract debt.

debt by special contract. See special-contract debt.
debt by specialty contract. See special-contract debt.

debt of record. A debt evidenced by a court record, such as a judgment.

desperate debt. 1. Uncollectable debt. 2. A debt taken on by one who is either insolvent or on the verge of insolvency.

distressed debt. A debt instrument issued by a company that is financially troubled and in danger of defaulting on the debt, or in bankruptcy, or likely to default or declare bankruptcy in the near future.

funded debt. 1. A state or municipal debt to be paid out of an accumulation of money or by future taxation. [Cases: Municipal Corporations § 951.] 2. Secured long-term corporate debt meant to replace short-term, floating, or unsecured debt.

general debt. A governmental body’s debt that is legally payable from general revenues and is backed by the full faith and credit of the governmental body. [Cases: Municipal Corporations § 894.]

hypothecary debt. A lien on an estate.

individual debt. (usu. pl.) Debt personally owed by a partner, rather than by the partnership. [Cases: Partnership § 144.]

installment debt. A debt that is to be repaid in a series of payments at regular times over a specified period.

judgment debt. A debt that is evidenced by a legal judgment or brought about by a successful lawsuit against the debtor.

junior debt. See subordinate debt.

legal debt. A debt recoverable in a court of law.

liquidated debt. A debt whose amount has been determined by agreement of the parties or by operation of law.

liquid debt. A debt that is due immediately and unconditionally.

long-term debt. Generally, a debt that will not come due within the next year.

mutual debts. Cross-debts of the same kind and quality between two persons. Cf. setoff (2).

national debt. See national debt.

nondischARGEABLE debt. (1908) A debt (such as one for delinquent taxes) that is not released through bankruptcy. [Cases: Bankruptcy § 3341–3378.]

passive debt. A debt that, by agreement between the debtor and creditor, is interest-free.

preferential debt. A debt that is legally payable before others, such as an employee’s wages.

privileged debt. A debt that has priority over other debts if a debtor becomes insolvent; a secured debt.

public debt. A debt owed by a municipal, state, or national government. [Cases: Municipal Corporations § 869.]

pure debt. See pure obligation under obligation.

secured debt. A debt backed by collateral.

senior debt. A debt that takes priority over other debts. • Senior debts are often secured by collateral.

short-term debt. Collectively, all debts and other liabilities that are payable within one year. — Also termed current liability.

simple-contract debt. A debt that is either oral or written but is not of record and not under seal. — Also termed debt by simple contract.

special-contract debt. A debt due, or acknowledged to be due, by an instrument under seal, such as a deed of covenant or sale, a lease reserving rent, or a bond. — Also termed debt by special contract; debt by specialty contract; specialty debt.

“Any contract in short whereby a determinate sum of money becomes due to any person, and is not paid but remains in action merely, is a contract of debt. And, taken in this light, it comprehends a great variety of acquisition; being usually divided into debts of record, debts by special, and debts by simple contract.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 464 (1766).

subordinate debt. A debt that is junior or inferior to other types or classes of debt. • Subordinate debt may be unsecured or have a low-priority claim against property secured by other debt instruments. — Also termed junior debt.

unliquidated debt. A debt that has not been reduced to a specific amount, and about which there may be a dispute.

unsecured debt. A debt not supported by collateral or other security.

debt adjustment. See DEBT POOLING.

debt instrument. (1953) A written promise to repay a debt, such as a promissory note, bill, bond, or commercial paper. [Cases: Bills and Notes § 28.]

debt limitation. A ceiling placed on borrowing by an individual, business, or government. • The constitutions of many states prohibit the states from incurring debt in excess of a stated amount. Other state constitutions allow states to incur debt above a stated amount only through a vote of the people. — Also termed limitation on indebtedness. [Cases: States $\Rightarrow 115.]

debt of record. See DEBT.

debtor. (13c) 1. One who owes an obligation to another, esp. an obligation to pay money. 2. Bankruptcy. A person who files a voluntary petition or against whom an involuntary petition is filed. — Also termed bankrupt. [Cases: Bankruptcy $\Rightarrow 2221.]

"Section 101 [of the Bankruptcy Code] also introduces us to the language of modern bankruptcy practice. It tells us, for instance, that the person whom a bankruptcy case concerns is a debtor. A person or a firm in bankruptcy is no longer called a bankrupt. Although that word retains some currency among lay people, among bankruptcy lawyers it sounds old-fashioned and precious." Douglas G. Baird, Elements of Bankruptcy 6 (2001).

3. Secured transactions. A person who either (1) has a property interest — other than a security interest or other lien — in collateral, even if the person is not an obligor, or (2) is a seller of accounts, chattel paper, payment intangibles, or promissory notes. UCC § 9-102(a)(28). — Abbr. Dr. Cf. CREDITOR. [Cases: Secured Transactions $\Rightarrow 12, 21.]

absconding debtor. (18c) A debtor who flees from creditors to avoid having to pay a debt. • Absconding from a debt was formerly considered an act of bankruptcy. See ACT OF BANKRUPTCY.

absent debtor. A debtor who lacks the intent to defraud creditors but is beyond the geographic reach of ordinary service of process.

account debtor. A person obligated on an account, chattel paper, or general intangible. • The UCC exempts from the definition of account debtor a person obligated to pay a negotiable instrument, even if the instrument constitutes chattel paper. UCC § 9-102(a)(3).

common debtor. Scots law. A debtor whose property has been arrested by more than one creditor.

concealed debtor. A debtor who hides from creditors, usu. with the intent to defraud the creditors or to avoid service of process, but does not leave the community or move out of state.

joint debtor. One of two or more debtors jointly liable for the same debt.

judgment debtor. See JUDGMENT DEBTOR.

new debtor. (18c) Secured transactions. A person who becomes bound as debtor under a security agreement previously entered into by another person. UCC §§ 9-102(a)(56), 9-203(c).

solvent debtor. A debtor who owns enough property to cover all outstanding debts and against whom a creditor can enforce a judgment.

debtor-in-possession. (1806) Bankruptcy. A Chapter 11 or 12 debtor that continues to operate its business as a fiduciary to the bankruptcy estate. • With certain exceptions, the debtor-in-possession has all the rights, powers, and duties of a Chapter 11 trustee. — Abbr. DIP. [Cases: Bankruptcy $\Rightarrow 3622, 3672.]

debtor rehabilitation. See REHABILITATION (3).

Debtor’s Act of 1869. An English statute that, among other things, (1) abolished imprisonment for debt except in certain cases, as when a debtor owed a debt to the Crown or a debtor had money but refused to pay a debt, (2) abolished arrest by mesne process, that is, by compelling the defendant to appear and give bail unless it was believed that the defendant would leave the country, (3) made it a misdemeanor to obtain credit under false pretenses or to defraud creditors, and (4) defined how warrants and judgment orders would be executed.

debtor’s examination. Bankruptcy. A meeting between a debtor and his or her creditors during which the creditors ask the debtor questions designed to uncover information about the location and extent of the debtor’s assets and the dischargeability of debts. • The examination may be conducted under § 343 of the Bankruptcy Code or Rule 2004 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure. The bankruptcy trustee may be present and preside over the initial § 343 examination, which is held shortly after the bankruptcy filing. But the party (usu. a creditor) who requests a Rule 2004 examination presides over the meeting, which can be held at any time. See 11 USCA § 343; Fed. R. Bankr. P. 2004. [Cases: Bankruptcy $\Rightarrow 3040.1–3048.] debtor’s petition. See voluntary petition under PETITION.

debtor’s property. See PROPERTY OF THE DEBTOR.

debt pooling. (1957) 1. Bankruptcy. An arrangement by which a person’s debts are consolidated and creditors agree to accept lower monthly payments or to take less money. — Also termed debt consolidation; debt adjustment. 2. An arrangement under which a debtor agrees to pay (1) a sum of money periodically or otherwise to a third person who will then distribute the money among certain specified creditors in accordance with a plan, and (2) a fee to the third person for his or her services as distributor. • Debt-pooling in this manner is generally illegal if the arrangement is not made with a bank, attorney, judicial officer, retail-merchants’ association, or nonprofit organization that provides debt-counseling services.

debt ratio. (1932) A corporation’s total long-term and short-term liabilities divided by the firm’s total assets. • A low debt ratio indicates conservative financing and thus usu. an enhanced ability to borrow in the future. — Also termed debt-to-total-assets ratio.

debt retirement. (1928) Repayment of debt; retirement (3).

debt security. See SECURITY.

debt service. (1930) 1. The funds needed to meet a long-term debt’s annual interest expenses, principal payments, and sinking-fund contributions. 2. Payments due on a debt, including interest and principal.

debt-to-equity ratio. (1954) A corporation’s long-term debt divided by its owners’ equity, calculated to assess its capitalization. — Also termed debt-equity ratio; debt-to-net-worth ratio.

debt-to-total-assets ratio. See debt ratio.

De Catallis Felonum. Hist. A 1326 statute providing that a felon forfeited his or her personal property and also lost all rights and means of acquiring property. • This statute is one of the earliest written laws imposing civil death. Cf. civil death (1) under death.

decatialis reddendis (dee ka-tal-is ri-den-dis), n. [Law Latin “of chattels to be restored”] Hist. A writ ordering a bailee to deliver chattels kept from the owner. • This was replaced by the writ of detinue. See detinue.

deca cautio admittedenda (dee kaw-shhe-oh nee ad-mi-ten-do), n. [Law Latin “of security to be taken”] Hist. A writ commanding a bishop who had ordered an excommunicated person held for contempt, even though the prisoner had offered bail and promised to obey the church in the future, to take the offered security and order the prisoner’s release.

decase, n. See death.

decade, vb. To die; to depart from life.

decase, n. See decedent.

decedent (di-see-dont), n. (16c) A dead person, esp. one who has died recently. • This term is little used outside law. It typically appears in legal proceedings or administrative inquiries. — Also termed deceased.

nonresident decedent. A decedent who was domiciled outside the jurisdiction in question (such as probate jurisdiction) at the time of death.

deciet, n. (14c) 1. The act of intentionally giving a false impression (the juror’s deceit led the lawyer to believe that she was not biased). 2. A false statement of fact made by a person knowingly or recklessly (i.e., not caring whether it is true or false) with the intent that someone else will act upon it. See fraudulent misrepresentation under misrepresentation. [Cases: Fraud C.3.] 3. A tort arising from a false representation made knowingly or recklessly with the intent that another person should detrimentally rely on it (the new homeowner sued both the seller and the realtor for deceit after discovering termites). See fraud; misrepresentation. — deceitive, vb.

decemviri litibus judicandis (di-sem-vir I-ti-bis judi-ca-dis). [Latin “ten persons to decide lawsuits”] Roman law. A group of five senators and five knights who assisted the elected magistrate in deciding legal disputes concerning liberty. — Also spelled decemviri stlitibus judicandis.

decenary. [Fr. Latin decena “a tithing”] Hist. A town or district consisting of ten freeholding families. • A freetholder of the decenary (a decennarius) was bound by frankpledge to produce any wrongdoer living in the decenary. — Also spelled (incorrectly) decennary. — Also termed decenna; tithing. Cf. FRANKPLEDGE.

"The civil division of the territory of England is into counties, of those counties into hundreds, of those hundreds into tithings or towns. Which division, as it now stands, seems to owe its original to king Alfred; who, to prevent the rapines and disorders which formerly prevailed in the realm, instituted tithings; so called from the Saxon, because ten freetholders, with their families, composed one. These all dwelt together, and were sureties or free pledges to the king for the good behavior of each other; and, if any offence was committed in their district, they were bound to have the offender forthcoming. And therefore anciently no man was suffered to abide in England above forty days, unless he were enrolled in some tithing or decennary." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 110 (1765).

decency. The state of being proper, as in speech or dress; the quality of being seemly.

decenna (di-sen-a), n. [fr. Latin decem “ten”] See DECENARY.

decennarius (des-a-nair-ee-as), n. [Law Latin “a deciner”]
One of ten families of freetholders comprising a decenary. See DECENARY.

decennary. See DECENARY.

decreto, vb. Scots law. To decree; to give final judgment.

"Before the judgment or interlocutor of any court in Scotland can be extracted, to the effect of warranting execution, it must import a decree. Hence, all extractable judgments close with the word ‘decrer.’ "William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 287 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

de certificando (dee sar-ti-fi-kan-doh), n. [Law Latin "about certification"] A writ requiring something to be certified, similar to certiorari. See CERTIFICANDO DE RECONCIONE STAPULAE.

decertify, vb. (1918) 1. To revoke the certification of. 2. To remove the official status of (a labor union) by withdrawing the right to act as a collective-bargaining agent. [Cases: Labor Relations C-216. 3. (Of a court) to overrule a previous order that created a class for purposes of a class action; to officially undo (a class). [Cases: Labor and Employment C-123. Cf. CERTIFY. — decertification, n.

decesus (di-ses-as), n. [fr. Latin decedere "to depart"]
1. Roman law. A death. 2. A departure. - This term has been used in both the civil and common law, esp. in reference to the desertion of a ground in a previous pleading in favor of another. See DEPARTURE.

- This was one of several statutes limiting luxury spending.

decies tantum (desh-ee-eez oor dee-shee-eez tan-tam), n. [Law Latin "ten times as much"] Hist. A writ ordering a juror who accepted a bribe for a verdict to pay ten times the bribery amount, half to the suing party and half to the Crown.

"Decies tantum is a writ that lies where a juror in any inquest takes money of the one part or other, to give his verdict; then he shall pay ten times as much as he hath received: and every one that will sue have this action, and shall have the one half, and the king the other .... And the same law is of all other actions popular, where one part is to the king, the other to the party that sues. Also the embracers, who procure such inquests, shall be punished in the same manner, and they shall have imprisonment a year. But no justice shall inquire thereof ex officio, but only at the suit of the party." Termes de la Ley 146 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

decimae (des-a-mee), n. [fr. Latin decem "ten"] Eccles. law. 1. The tenth part of the annual profits of a benefice originally payable to the Pope, and later to the Crown by 26 Hen. 8, ch. 3.

- The tenths, or decimae, were the tenth part of the annual profit of each living ... which was also claimed by the holy see .... But this claim of the pope met with a vigorous resistance from the English parliament; and a variety of acts were passed to prevent and restrain it .... But the popish clergy, blindly devoted to the will of a foreign master, still kept it on foot, sometimes more secretly, sometimes more openly and avowedly .... And, as the clergy expressed this willingness to contribute so much of their income to the head of the church, it was thought proper (when in the same reign the papal power was abolished, and the king was declared the head of the church of England) to annex this revenue to the crown .... "William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 274 (1765).

2. Tithes paid to the church, often in grain or wool.

decimae garbales (des-i-mee gahr-bay-leez), [Law Latin] Hist. Eccles. law. Tithe sheaves; grain tithes. - The parish rector was entitled to each tenth sheaf of the cut grain as a tith.

declaration against interest. (1940) A statement by a person who is not a party to a suit and is not available to testify at trial, discussing a matter that is within the declarant's personal knowledge and is adverse to the declarant's interest. • Such a statement is admissible into evidence as an exception to the hearsay rule. Fed. R. Evid. 804(b)(3). — Also termed self-disserving declaration. See admission against interest under admission (1). [Cases: Criminal Law \(\Rightarrow\) 417(15); Evidence \(\Rightarrow\) 272.]

declaration of pain. (1891) A person's exclamation of present pain, which operates as an exception to the hearsay rule. Fed. R. Evid. 803(3). [Cases: Criminal Law \(\Rightarrow\) 419(2.20); Evidence \(\Rightarrow\) 268.]

declaration of state of mind. (1843) A person's state-of-mind statement that operates as an exception to the hearsay rule. Fed. R. Evid. 803(3). [Cases: Criminal Law \(\Rightarrow\) 419(2.20); Evidence \(\Rightarrow\) 268.]

dying declaration. (18C) A statement by a person who believes that death is imminent, relating to the cause or circumstances of the person's impending death. • The statement is admissible in evidence as an exception to the hearsay rule. — Also termed deathbed declaration; ante mortem statement. [Cases: Evidence \(\Rightarrow\) 275.5; Homicide \(\Rightarrow\) 1075.]

"[A] rule peculiar to criminal cases is the exception to the rule respecting hearsay evidence which renders dying declarations as to the cause of death admissible in trials for murder or manslaughter. . . . The earliest emphatic statement of it . . . is to be found in Woodcock's case, decided in 1789 . . . . This case refers to a decision in 1720 . . . and to the case of R. v Reason and Tranter, decided in 1722. That case, however, says nothing as to any limitation on the rule. A series of cases from 1678 to 1765 show that during that period declarations of deceased persons as to the cause of their death were admitted even though the declarants had hopes of recovery when they were made." 1 James Fitzjames Stephen, A History of the Criminal Law of England 447–48 (1883).

self-serving declaration. (1881) An out-of-court statement made to benefit one's own interest. [Cases: Criminal Law \(\Rightarrow\) 413; Evidence \(\Rightarrow\) 271.]

7. Common-law pleading. The plaintiff's first pleading in a civil action. • It is an amplification of the original writ on which the action is founded, with the additional circumstances of the time and place of injury. In a real action, the declaration is called a count. Today the equivalent term in English law is statement of claim; in most American jurisdictions, it is called a petition or complaint. — Also termed narratio. See count (2), (3). Cf. PLEA (2). [Cases: Pleading \(\Rightarrow\) 41.]

"The declaration is a statement of all material facts constituting the plaintiff's cause of action in a methodical and legal form. It consists of the following parts: (a) Statement of title of court. (b) Statement of venue in the margin. (c) The commencement, (d) The body, or statement of the cause of action. (e) The conclusion." Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common-Law Pleading § 76, at 192 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

8. A formal, written statement — resembling an affidavit but not notarized or sworn to — that attests, under penalty of perjury, to facts known by the declarant. • Such a declaration, if properly prepared, is admissible in federal court with the same effect as an affidavit, 28 USCA § 1746. — Also termed declaration under penalty of perjury; unsworn declaration under penalty of perjury. Cf. AFFIDAVIT; sworn statement under statute. 9. Int'l law. An oral or written statement, unilaterally made, by which a state expresses its will, intent, or opinion when acting in the field of international relations. 10. declaration of incontestability. Trademarks. A sworn statement submitted by the owner of a registered mark after five years of registration, averring that the mark has been in continuous use in commerce for at least five consecutive years since registration, that the mark has not become generic, that there has been no final adverse decision to ownership in the mark, and that there is no pending proceeding in the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office or courts involving the mark. • The statement entitles the mark to immunity from some legal challenges under § 15 of the Lanham Act. — Also termed affidavit of incontestability; affidavit under § 15; declaration under § 15; Section 15 affidavit; Section 15 declaration. [Cases: Trademarks \(\Rightarrow\) 1352.]

declaration of legitimacy. See DECLARATION (1).

declaration of pain. See declaration (6).

Declaration of Paris. An international agreement, signed by Great Britain, France, Turkey, Sardinia, Austria, Prussia, and Russia in 1856 (at the end of the Crimean War), providing that (1) privateering is illegal, (2) with the exception of contraband, a neutral flag covers an enemy's goods, (3) with the exception of contraband, neutral goods cannot be confiscated under a hostile flag, and (4) a blockade must work to be binding. • The agreement was later adopted by most other maritime powers, except the United States and a few others.

"The Declaration of Paris is one of the greatest triumphs won by commercial interests over the strict rules of maritime warfare. Its importance resides in its first three articles. Article 4 did no more than formulate a principle acknowledged for more than a century. Constrained strictly it requires an impossibility; for no blockade, however strict, can always 'prevent access to the coast of the enemy.' But it is clear that the words were meant to be understood in a reasonable sense as merely prohibitory of ineffective or 'paper' blockades . . . . Article 1 struck at a most objectionable practice. The current of opinion had long been running strongly against the use of privateers . . . . Article 2 . . . has provoked an enormous amount of controversy. Together with Article 3 it amounted to a new departure in the law of maritime capture. Up to 1856 the great naval powers had been divided between the old principle that the liability of goods to capture should be determined by the character of their owner, and the more modern principle . . . . that the character of the ship in which the goods were laden should settle their fate." 1 R.H. Inglis Palgrave, Palgrave's Dictionary of Political Economy 520–21 (Henry Higgs ed., 2d ed. 1925).

declaration of restrictions. Property. A statement of all the covenants, conditions, and restrictions affecting a parcel of land, usu. imposed and recorded by a developer of a subdivision. • The restrictions usu. promote a general plan of development by requiring all lot owners to comply with the specified standards, esp. for buildings. The restrictions run with the land. — Sometimes also written declarations of restrictions. [Cases: Covenants C—69.]

declaration of rights. 1. An action in which a litigant requests a court's assistance not because any rights have been violated but because those rights are uncertain. • Examples include suits for a declaration of legitimacy, for declaration of nullity of marriage, and for the authoritative interpretation of a will. 2. See declaratory judgment under JUDGMENT. — Often shortened to declaration.

declaration of state of mind. See declaration (6).

Declaratory of Taking Act. The federal law regulating the government's taking of private property for public use under eminent domain. 40 USCA § 3114 et seq. • Fair compensation must be paid for the property. [Cases: Eminent Domain C—122, 167.]

declaration of use. Trademarks. A sworn statement submitted by a registered mark's owner averring that the registered mark is currently in use in commerce, and providing a specimen or facsimile of the mark's use. • The § 8 affidavit must be filed (1) between the fifth and sixth year following registration, and (2) within the year before the end of every ten-year period after the date of registration. If a registered mark's owner fails to file a § 8 affidavit within the required time, the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office may cancel the registration. The term comes from § 8 of the Lanham Act. — Also termed affidavit of continued use; affidavit of use; affidavit under § 8; declaration of continued use; declaration under § 8; Section 8 declaration; statement of use. Cf. INCONTESTABILITY STATUS; CANCELLATION. [Cases: Trademarks C—1254, 1304.]

declaratory-judgment act. (1921) A federal or state law permitting parties to bring an action to determine their legal rights and positions regarding a controversy not yet ripe for adjudication, as when an insurance company seeks a determination of coverage before deciding whether to cover a claim. 28 USCA §§ 2201, 2202. See declaratory judgment under JUDGMENT. [Cases: Declaratory Judgment C—21.] declaratory part of a law. A portion of a law clearly defining rights to be observed or wrongs to be avoided.

declaratory precedent. See precedent.

declaratory relief. See RELIEF.

declaratory statute. See statute.

declaratory theory. (1895) The belief that judges' decisions never make law but instead merely constitute evidence of what the law is. • This antiquated view — held by such figures as Coke and Blackstone — is no longer accepted.

"There are . . . at least three good reasons why the declaratory theory should have persisted for some time after the modern English doctrine [of precedent] had begun to take shape. In the first place, it appealed to believers in the separation of powers, to whom anything in the nature of judicial legislation would have been anathema. Secondly, it concealed a fact which Bentham was anxious to expose, namely, that judge-made law is retrospective in its effect.
If in December a court adjudges that someone is liable, in consequence of his conduct during the previous January, it would certainly appear to be legislating retrospectively, unless the liability is based on an earlier Act of Parliament, or unless the court is simply following a previous decision. A way of disguising the retrospective character of such a judgment would be to maintain the doctrine that the court really was doing no more than state a rule which anyone could have deduced from well-known principles or common usage, for the conduct in question would then have been prohibited by the law as it stood in January. The third reason for the persistence of the declaratory theory may be thought to justify its retention in a revised form today. When confronted with a novel point, judges always tend to speak as though the answer is provided by the common law. Rupert Cross & J.W. Harris, Precedent in English Law 30 (4th ed. 1991).

declinatory plea. Hist. A pretrial plea claiming benefit of clergy. — Also termed plea of sanctuary. See benefit of clergy.

de continuando assisam (dee kan-tin-yoo-an-doh a-st-zam), n. [Law Latin “for continuing an assise”] A writ to continue an assise.

de contumace capiendo (dee kon-ta-may see kap-een-doh), n. [Law Latin “for arresting a contumacious person”] Hist. A writ issuing out of the Court of Chancery at the request of an ecclesiastical court that has found a person to be in contempt. • This writ came into use after the Ecclesiastical Courts Act of 1813 removed ecclesiastical courts’ power to excommunicate litigants who failed to comply with a court order. Cf. EXCOMMUNICATIO CAPENDO.

“In 1812, the case of Mary Ann Dix—a woman not of age, who was imprisoned for two years on a writ de excommunicato capiendo for not paying costs in a suit for defamation—aroused the Legislature. In the following year it was enacted that excommunication should cease to exist as part of the process of the ecclesiastical courts to enforce appearance, and as a punishment for contempt. . . . [For the writ de excommunicato capiendo was substituted the writ de contumace capiendo; and the rules applying to the older writ were made applicable to the new.]” William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 632 (7th ed. 1956).

de copia libelli deliberanda (dee koh-pee-a li-bel-I de-lib-a-ran-da), n. [Law Latin “for delivering a copy of a libel”] Hist. A writ ordering an ecclesiastical-court judge (such as the Dean of Arches) to provide the defendant with a copy of the plaintiff’s complaint.

decree, n. (14c) 1. Traditionally, a judicial decision in a court of equity, admiralty, divorce, or probate—similar to a judgment of a court of law <the judge’s decree in favor of the will’s beneficiary>. 2. A court’s final judgment. 3. Any court order, but esp. one in a matrimonial case <divorce decree>. See JUDGMENT; ORDER (2); DECISION. [Cases: Divorce C=152.]

“The chief differences between decrees in equity and judgments at common law are as follows: The former are pronounced by courts of equity; the latter, by courts of law. The former result from an investigation and determination of the rights of the parties by the means provided and according to the principles recognized in equity jurisprudence; the latter result from an investigation and determination made by the more limited means and more inflexible rules of the common law. The former may be adjusted to all the varieties of interest and of circumstance, and may contain such directions as are needed to carry them into effect, both in letter and in spirit; the latter are in an invariable form, general in terms, and absolute for plaintiff or defendant. And the former often enforce rights not recognized by the common law . . . . The term ‘judgment’ is frequently used in a broad sense to include decrees in equity.” A.C. Freeman, A Treatise of the Law of Judgments § 12, at 23-24 (Edward W. Tuttle ed., 5th ed. 1925).

agreed decree. A final judgment, the terms of which are agreed to by the parties. [Cases: Judgment C=71, 91.]

consent decree. (1831) A court decree that all parties agree to. — Also termed consent order. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=2397; Judgment C=87.]

custody decree. A decree awarding or modifying child custody. • The decree may be included in the decree for a related proceeding — such as a divorce — or it may be a separate order. [Cases: Child Custody C=521.]

decree absolute. (1826) A ripened decree nisi; a court’s decree that has become unconditional because the time specified in the decree nisi has passed. — Also termed order absolute; rule absolute.

decree absolvitor (ab-zol-vi-tor), n. Scots law. A judgment for a defendant, either by a dismissal of a claim or by an acquittal. — Also termed decreet absolvitor.

decree ad factum praestandum. Scots law. A court order requiring that a party specifically perform an act, such as to deliver property. See IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT. decree arbitral (ahr-bi-tral), n. Scots law. 1. An arbitration award. 2. A form for an arbitration award. — Also termed decree arbitral.

decree cognitionis causa (kog-nish-ee-oh-nis kaw-za), n. Scots law. A judgment in a suit involving a plaintiff creditor suing a debtor's heir to attach the heir's lands. — Also termed decree cognitionis causa.

decree condemnator (kon-dem-nay tar or -tor), n. Scots law. A judgment for the plaintiff. — Also termed decree condemnator.

decree dative. Scots law. A decree appointing an executor.

decree nisi (n1-st). (18c) A court's decree that will become absolute unless the adversely affected party shows the court, within a specified time, why it should be set aside. — Also termed nisi decree; order nisi; rule nisi. See nisi.

decree of constitution. Scots law. A judgment declaring the extent of a debt or obligation.

decree of distribution. (1841) An instrument by which heirs receive the property of a deceased person. [Cases: Executors and Administrators ○ 315, 508.]

decree of valuation. Scots law. A decree of the Teind Court determining the extent and value of a heritor's teinds.

decree pro confesso (proh kan-fes-oh). (1821) Equity practice. A decree entered in favor of the plaintiff as a result of the defendant's failure to timely respond to the allegations in the plaintiff's bill; esp., a decree entered when the defendant has defaulted by not appearing in court at the prescribed time. — Also termed decree taken pro confesso. [Cases: Equity ○ 417-420.]

A decree pro confesso in equity is similar to a default judgment in an action at law. If a defendant in an equity suit fails to answer the plaintiff's petition within the prescribed time period, the bill will be taken pro confesso, and a decree entered in favor of the plaintiff . . . . However, whereas a default judgment in an action at law effects an admission of pleaded facts and conclusions of law . . . a decree pro confesso in an equity action admits only the material and well pleaded facts in the petition and does not admit the legal claims upon which the plaintiff seeks relief.” 27A Am. Jur. 2d Equity § 249, at 733-34 (1996).

deficiency decree. See deficiency judgment under judgment.

divorce decree. A final judgment in a suit for divorce. • A divorce decree dissolves the marriage and usu. resolves all matters concerning property and children. Generally, matters concerning children can be modified in a post-divorce action if there has been a substantial change in circumstances. [Cases: Divorce ○ 152.]

decreta (di-kree-ta), n. [Latin “decisions”] Roman law. Judgments of magistrates; esp., sentences pronounced by the emperor as the supreme judge. See decreetum.

"Decreta. In Roman law decisions of magistrates given after investigation of a case by cognitio . . . and in particular, decisions of the emperor as judge of first instance after trial by cognitio, or as a judge of appeal. As the highest authority in the State the emperor could interpret the law freely and even introduce new principles. Consequently imperial decisions were authoritative interpretations of the law or even innovatory and regarded as statements binding for the future, and as such quoted by the jurists. They were not only communicated to the parties but recorded in the records of the imperial court and private persons.
decrectal (di-krē-tal), adj. Of or relating to a decree.

miscellaneous itemized deduction. (1955) Generally, an itemized deduction of job or investment expenses; a deduction other than those allowable in computing adjusted gross income, those enumerated in IRC (26 USCA) § 67(b), and personal exemptions. • This type of deduction is allowed only to an itemizing taxpayer whose total miscellaneous itemized deductions exceed a statutory percentage of adjusted gross income.

standard deduction. (1944) A specified dollar amount that a taxpayer can deduct from adjusted gross income, instead of itemizing deductions, to determine taxable income. [Cases: Internal Revenue C-3295; Taxation C-3501.]
bargain-and-sale deed. (1972) A deed that conveys property to a buyer for valuable consideration but that lacks any guarantee from the seller about the validity of the title. See bargain and sale. [Cases: Deeds C>22.]

composition deed. A deed reflecting the terms of an agreement between a debtor and a creditor to discharge or adjust a debt. [Cases: Debtor and Creditor C>10.]

counterdeed. A secret deed, executed either before a notary or under a private seal, that voids, invalidates, or alters a public deed.

deathbed deed. Rare. A deed executed by a grantor shortly before death. • The grantor need not be aware that he or she is near death when the deed is executed. [Cases: Deeds C>68(3), 70(7), 72(2).]

deed in fee. (18c) A deed conveying the title to land in fee simple, usu. with covenants.

deed in lieu of foreclosure. (1934) A deed by which a borrower conveys fee-simple title to a lender in satisfaction of a mortgage debt and as a substitute for foreclosure. • This deed is often referred to simply as “deed in lieu.” [Cases: Mortgages C>293.]

deed of covenant. (17c) A deed to do something, such as a document providing for periodic payments by one party to another (usu. a charity) for tax-saving purposes. • The transferor can deduct taxes from the payment and, in some cases, the recipient can reclaim the deducted tax.

deed of distribution. A fiduciary’s deed conveying a decedent’s real estate.

deed of gift. (16c) A deed executed and delivered without consideration. • Also termed gratuitous deed.

deed of inspection. Hist. An instrument reflecting an agreement between a debtor and a creditor to appoint a receiver to oversee the winding up of the debtor’s affairs on behalf of the creditor.

deed of partition. (18c) A deed that divides land held by joint tenants, tenants in common, or coparceners. [Cases: Partition C>96.]

deed of reconveyance. A deed conveying title to real property from a trustee to a grantor when a loan is repaid. Cf. deed of trust.

deed of release. A deed that surrenders full title to a piece of property upon payment or performance of specified conditions.

deed of separation. An instrument governing a spouse’s separation and maintenance. [Cases: Husband and Wife C>278.]

deed of settlement. 1. A deed to settle something, such as the distribution of property in a marriage. 2. English law. A deed formerly used to form a joint-stock company.

deed of trust. (17c) A deed conveying title to real property to a trustee as security until the grantor repays a loan. • This type of deed resembles a mortgage. • Also termed trust deed; trust indenture; indemnity mortgage; common-law mortgage. Cf. deed of reconveyance. [Cases: Mortgages C>8.]

deed poll. (16c) A deed made by and binding on only one party, or on two or more parties having similar interests. • It is so called because, traditionally, the parchment was “polled” (that is, shaved) so that it would be even at the top (unlike an indenture). • Also spelled deed-poll. Cf. indenture.

deed to lead uses. A common-law deed prepared before an action for a fine or common recovery to show the object of those actions.

deed without covenants. See quitclaim deed.

defeasible deed. (1802) A deed containing a condition subsequent causing title to the property to revert to the grantor or pass to a third party.

derivative deed. See secondary conveyance under conveyance.

disentailing deed. Hist. A tenant-in-tail’s assurance that the estate tail will be barred and converted into an estate in fee. • The Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4 ch. 74) introduced this way of barring an entail. It authorized nearly every tenant in tail, if certain conditions were met, to dispose of the land in fee simple absolute and thus to defeat the rights of all persons claiming under the tenant.

donation deed. A deed granted by the government to a person who either satisfies the statutory conditions in a donation act or redeems a bounty-land warrant. See donation act; bounty-land warrant. [Cases: Public Lands C>42.]

full-covenant-and-warranty deed. See warranty deed.

general warranty deed. See warranty deed.

gift deed. (1864) A deed given for a nominal sum or for love and affection.

good deed. A deed that conveys good title as opposed to a deed that is merely good in form. • Also termed lawful deed.

grant deed. (1891) A deed containing, or having implied by law, some but not all of the usual covenants of title; esp., a deed in which the grantor warrants that he or she (1) has not previously conveyed the estate being granted, (2) has not encumbered the property except as noted in the deed, and (3) will convey to the grantee any title to the property acquired after the date of the deed.

inclusive deed. See inclusive grant under grant.

indented deed. See indenture (2).

latent deed. A deed kept in a strongbox or other secret place, usu. for 20 years or more. lawful deed. See good deed.

mineral deed. A conveyance of an interest in the minerals in or under the land. [Cases: Mines and Minerals C-55.]

mortgage deed. The instrument creating a mortgage. • A mortgage deed typically must contain (1) the name of the mortgagor, (2) words of grant or conveyance, (3) the name of the mortgagee, (4) a property description sufficient to identify the mortgaged premises, (5) the mortgagor's signature, and (6) an acknowledgment. To be effective and binding, a mortgage deed must also be delivered. [Cases: Mortgages C-73-42.]

onerous deed. Scots law. A deed given in exchange for a valuable consideration, often as part of a marriage settlement.

quitclaim deed. (18c) A deed that conveys a grantor's complete interest or claim in certain real property but that neither warrants nor professes that the title is valid. — Often shortened to quitclaim. — Also termed deed without covenants. Cf. warranty deed. [Cases: Deeds C-25, 121.]

release deed. A deed that is issued once a mortgage has been discharged, explicitly releasing and reconveying to the mortgagor the entire interest conveyed by an earlier deed of trust. — Also termed reconveyance; satisfaction; release. [Cases: Mortgages C-309.]

sheriff's deed. A deed that gives ownership rights in property bought at a sheriff's sale. [Cases: Deeds C-303.]

special warranty deed. (1808) 1. A deed in which the grantor covenants to defend the title against only those claims and demands of the grantor and those claiming by and under the grantor. [Cases: Covenants C-48, 67.] 2. In a few jurisdictions, a quitclaim deed. Cf. warranty deed. [Cases: Deeds C-25, 121.]

statutory deed. (1832) A warranty-deed form prescribed by state law and containing certain warranties and covenants even though they are not included in the printed form.

support deed. A deed by which a person (usu. a parent) conveys land to another (usu. a son or daughter) with the understanding that the grantee will support the grantor for life. • Support deeds often result in litigation.

tax deed. A deed showing the transfer of title to real property sold for the nonpayment of taxes. See office of tax deed under GRANT; tax sale under sale. Cf. tax certificate. [Cases: Taxation C-308c.]

trust deed. See deed of trust.

warranty deed. (1802) A deed containing one or more covenants of title; esp., a deed that expressly guarantees the grantor's good, clear title and that contains covenants concerning the quality of title, including warranties of seisin, quiet enjoyment, right to convey, freedom from encumbrances, and defense of title against all claims. — Also termed general warranty deed; full-covenant-and-warranty deed. See warranty (1). Cf. quitclaim deed; special warranty deed. [Cases: Covenants C-46-48, 67.]

wild deed. (1914) A recorded deed that is not in the chain of title, usu. because a previous instrument connected to the chain of title has not been recorded.

deed box. Archaic. A box in which deeds of land title are traditionally kept. • Such a box is considered an heirloom in the strict sense. See heirloom (1).

deed of agency. A revocable, voluntary trust for payment of a debt.

deed of crime. See actus reus.

deed of feoffment. See feoffment (3).

deep of inspectorship. See deed.

deed of reconveyance. See deed.

deed of trust. See deed.

de ejectione custodiae (dey ee-jek-shuh-ee-nee kast-toh-dee-ee). [Latin "ejectment of a ward"] Hist. A writ available to a guardian after being ejected from the ward's land during the ward's minority. • The writ lay to recover the land or person of the ward, or both. The French equivalent was ejectment de garde.

de ejectione firmae (dey ee-jek-shuh-ee-nee far-mee). [Latin "ejectment of farm"] Hist. A writ or action of trespass to obtain the return of lands or tenements to a lessee for a term of years that had been ousted by the lessor or by a reversioner, remainderman, or stranger. • The lessee was then entitled to a writ of ejectment to recover, at first, damages for the trespass only, but later the term itself, or the remainder of it, with damages. This action is the foundation of the modern action of ejectment. See ejectment.

A writ then of ejectione firmae, or action of trespass in ejectment, lieth, where lands or tenements are let for a term of years; and afterwards the lessor, reversioner, remainder-man, or any stranger, doth eject or oust the lessee of his term. In this case he shall have his writ of ejection, to call the defendant to answer for entering on the lands so demised to the plaintiff for a term that is not yet expired, and ejecting him. And by this writ the plaintiff shall recover back his term, or the remainder of it, with damages. 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 199 (1768).

deem, vb. (bey. 12c) 1. To treat (something) as if (1) it were really something else, or (2) it has qualities that it does not have <although the document was not in fact signed until April 21, it explicitly states that it must be deemed to have been signed on April 14. 2. To consider, think, or judge she deemed it necessary.

"Deem" has been traditionally considered to be a useful word when it is necessary to establish a legal fiction either positively by "deeming" something to be what it is not or negatively by "deeming" something not to be what it is. All other uses of the word should be avoided. Phrases like "if he deems fit" or "as he deems necessary" or nothing in this Act shall be deemed to... are objectionable as unnecessary deviations from common language. "Thinks" or "considers" are preferable in the first two examples and "construed" or "interpreted" in the third. "Deeming" creates an artificiality and artificiality should not be resorted to if it can be avoided. G.C. Thornton, Legislative Drafting 99 (4th ed. 1996).

deemed transferor. (1988) Tax. A person who holds an interest in a generation-skipping trust on behalf of a beneficiary, and whose death will trigger the imposition of a generation-skipping transfer tax. • A deemed transferor is often a child of the settlor. For example, a grandfather could establish a trust with income payable for life to his son (who, because he is only one generation away from his father, is also known as a nonskip person) with the remainder to his grandson, a beneficiary also known as the skip person. When the son dies, the trust will be included in his gross estate for determining the generation-skipping transfer tax. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 2601-2663. See generation-skipping transfer; generation-skipping transfer tax under tax; generation-skipping trust under trust; skip person; nonskip person.

deep link. Intellectual property. A Web-page hyperlink that, when clicked, opens a page on another website other than that site's home page. • Some plaintiffs have argued, with mixed success, that bypassing their home page in this manner deprives them of advertising revenue. Deep linking does not violate copyright if the portal provided does not copy any of the linked page's content. And if there is no confusion about the source of the information, deep linking does not constitute unfair competition.

deep pocket. (1975) 1. (pl.) Substantial wealth and resources the plaintiff nonsued the individuals and targeted the corporation with deep pockets. 2. A person or entity with substantial wealth and resources against which a claim may be made or a judgment may be taken the national insurance company is a favorite deep pocket among plaintiff's lawyers.

Deep Rock doctrine. Bankruptcy. The principle by which unfair or inequitable claims presented by controlling shareholders of bankrupt corporations may be subordinated to claims of general or trade creditors. • The doctrine is named for a corporation that made fraudulent transfers to its parent corporation in Taylor v. Standard Gas & Elec. Co., 306 U.S. 307, 59 S.Ct. 543 (1939). [Cases: Bankruptcy C-926.]

de estoveriis habendis (dee es-toe-vre-R ee-is ha-ben-dis), n. [Law Latin "for having estovers"] History. A writ allowing a wife divorced a mensa et thoro ("from bed and board") to recover alimony or estovers. — Often shorted to estoveris habendis.

"In case of divorce a mensa et thoro, the law allows alimony to the wife which is that allowance, which is made to a woman for her support out of her husband’s estate; being settled at the discretion of the ecclesiastical judge, on consideration of all the circumstances of the case. This is sometimes called her estovers for which, if he refuses payment, there is: (besides the ordinary process of excommunication) a writ at common law de estoveris habendis, in order to recover it... It is generally proportioned to the rank and quality of the parties. But in case of elopement, and living with an adulterer, the law allows her no alimony." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 429 (1765).

de estrepamento (dee e-strep-o-men-toh), n. [Law Latin "of estrepamento"] History. A writ to prevent waste by a tenant while a suit to recover the land is pending. • Because this writ was only auxiliary to a real action to recover land, and because equity afforded the same relief by injunction, the writ fell into disuse and was abolished by 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 27. • Also termed writ of estrepamento. See estrepmamento.

de eu et trene (do yoo ay trayn), n. [French] History. Of water and whip of three cords. • This term referred to a neife who, as a servant, could be corporally punished. See neife.

It was replaced by the writ de contumace capiendo. See DE CONTUMACI CAPIENDO.

de excommunicato deliberando (dee eks-ka-myoo-nikay-toh di-lib-a-ran-doh), n. [Law Latin "for delivering an excommunicated person"] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ releasing an excommunicated person from prison upon a certification by the person's superior that the person has reconciled with the church.

de excommunicato recapiendo (dee eks-ka-myoo-nikay-toh ri-kap-ee-en-doh), n. [Law Latin "for retaking an excommunicated person"] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ ordering the rearrest of an excommunicated person who had been released but had not reconciled with the church or given security for a reconciliation.

de excusationibus (dee ek-sk-yoo-zhee-oh-ni-bas), [Latin "of excuses"] Roman law. The first title of the 27th book of the Digest, containing a person's legal excuses from serving as tutor or curator.
It is primarily drawn from the Greek work of Herennius Modestinus. See DIGEST (2).

This is a type of capis in withernam directing the sheriff to take from the defendant goods equal in value to the goods that the defendant took from the plaintiff.

de executione judicii (dee ek-sa-kyoo-shee-oh-nee joo-dish-eet), n. [Law Latin "of execution of judgment"] Hist. A writ ordering a sheriff or bailiff to execute a judgment.

de exemplificatione (dee ig-zem-pli-fi kay-shee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin "of exemplification"] A writ ordering the transcription of an original record.

de exoneratione sectae (dee ig-zon-a-ray-shee-oh-nee sek-tee), n. [Law Latin "of exoneration of suit"] Hist. A writ exempting the king's ward from being sued in any court lower than the Court of Common Pleas (such as a county court, hundred court, leet, or court baron) during the time of the wardship.

de expensis militum levandis (dee ek-spen-sis mil-a-tom la-vaen-dis), n. [Law Latin "for levying the expenses of knights"] Hist. A writ ordering the sheriff to levy an allowance for the knights of the shire in Parliament.

deface (di-fays), vb. (14c) 1. To mar or destroy (a written instrument, signature, or inscription) by obliteration, erasure, or superinscription. 2. To detract from the value of (a coin) by punching, clipping, cutting, or shaving. 3. To mar or injure (a building, monument, or other structure). — defacement, n.

defacto (di fak-toh also dee or day), adj. [Law Latin "in point of fact"] (17c) 1. Actual; existing in fact: having effect even though not formally or legally recognized . 2. Illegitimate but in effect . Cf. DE JURE.

defalcation (dee-fal-kay-shon), n. (15c) 1. EMBEZZLEMENT. 2. Loosely, the failure to meet an obligation; a nonfraudulent default. 3. Archaic. A deduction; a setoff. — defalcate (di-fal-kayt or dee-), vb. — defal­cator, n. defalk (di-fawlK), vb. Archaic. To deduct (a debt); to set off (a claim).

defalso judicio (dee-fal-soh joo-dish-ee-oh), n. [Law Latin "of false judgment"] Hist. A writ of false judgment; a writ to reverse an inferior court's ruling.

defalso moneta (dee-fal-soh or fawl-soh mah-neek-ta), n. [Law Latin "of false money"] Hist. The statute of Edward I providing that persons importing certain coins (called "pollards" and "crokards") would forfeit both their goods and their lives.

The word was first used in American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc. v. Simpson, 126 S.E.2d 873, 879 (Ga. Ct. App. 1962). Although Prosser called it "a barbarous word" (William Prosser, The Law of Torts 753 [4th ed. 1971]), another authority has said that "[t]he word seems to be quite apt" (Laurence H. Eldredge, The Law of Defamation § 12, at 77 [1978]). See DEFA MATION.

defamation, n. (14c) 1. The act of harming the reputation of another by making a false statement to a third person.
If the alleged defamation involves a matter of public concern, the plaintiff is constitutionally required to prove both the statement's falsity and the defendant's fault. 2. A false written or oral statement that damages another's reputation. See LIBEL; SLANDER. Cf.
defamation privilege

Defamation is the publication of a statement which tends to lower a person in the estimation of right-thinking members of society generally; or which tends to make them shun or avoid that person. P.H. Winfield, A Textbook of the Law of Tort § 72, at 242 (5th ed. 1950).

The wrong of defamation consists in the publication of a false and defamatory statement concerning another person without lawful justification. That person must be in being. Hence not only does an action of defamation not survive for or against the estate of a deceased person, but a statement about a deceased or unborn person is not actionable at the suit of his relatives, however great their pain and distress, unless the statement is in some way defamatory of them. R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 138 (17th ed. 1977).

For entirely too long a period of time, English and American law have recognized two distinct kinds of defamation based solely on the form in which it is published. Oral defamation is slander; written defamation is libel. Libel is a crime and a tort which subjects the defamer to tort liability without proof of special damages. Slander is not a common law crime and, with certain exceptions, does not subject the defamer to liability unless there is proof of special damages. Under this distinction in form alone the defamatory letter read only by its addressee and burned to ashes after being read is a more serious defamation than a defamatory statement spoken to an audience of 3,000 community leaders and molders of public opinion. This is utterly absurd and completely indefensible. . . . Laurrence H. Eldredge, The Law of Defamation § 12, at 77 (1978).

Defamation . . . is involved in two related harms, libel and slander. A familiar statement is that libel is written whereas slander is oral. This covers the idea in a general way but tends to mislead because defamation may be published without the use of words and hence be neither written nor oral. Thus libel may be perpetrated by hanging a person in effigy and slander, by sign or gesture. Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 489 (3d ed. 1982).

defamation per quod. (1915) Defamation that either (1) is not apparent but is proved by extrinsic evidence showing its injurious meaning or (2) is apparent but is not a statement that is actionable per se. [Cases: Libel and Slander C=33.]

defamation per se. (1928) A statement that is defamation in and of itself and is not capable of an innocent meaning. [Cases: Libel and Slander C=33.]

trade defamation. The damaging of a business by a false statement that tends to diminish the reputation of that business. • Trade defamation may be trade libel if it is recorded, or trade slander if it is not. — Also termed commercial defamation. Cf. TRADE DISPARAGEMENT. [Cases: Libel and Slander C=130.] defamation privilege. See litigation privilege under privilege (1).

defamatory, adj. (16c) (Of a statement or communication) tending to harm a person's reputation, usu. by subjecting the person to public contempt, disgrace, or ridicule, or by adversely affecting the person's business. [Cases: Libel and Slander C=6-14.]

"A communication is defamatory if it tends so to harm the reputation of another as to lower him in the estimation of the community or to deter third persons from associating or dealing with him." Restatement (First) of Torts § 559 (1938).

"No exhaustive definition of 'defamatory' emerges from the cases for, as Lord Reid once said, it is not for the judges to 'frame definitions or to lay down hard and fast rules. It is their function to enunciate principles and much that they say is intended to be illustrative or explanatory and not to be definitive' [Cassell & Co. Ltd. v. Broome (1972) AC 1027, 1085]. One can nevertheless achieve a working description by combining two statements, namely: a defamatory statement is one which injures the reputation of another by exposing him to hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or which tends to lower him in the esteem of right-thinking members of society." R.W.M. Dias & B.S. Markesinis, Tort Law 423-24 (2d ed. 1989).

defamatory communication. See defamatory statement.

defamatory libel. See libel (1).

defamatory propaganda. See propaganda.

defamatory statement. A statement that tends to injure the reputation of a person referred to in it. • The statement is likely to lower that person in the estimation of reasonable people and in particular to cause that person to be regarded with feelings of hatred, contempt, ridicule, fear, or dislike. — Also termed defamatory communication. [Cases: Libel and Slander C=6-14.]

defames (di-fay-meez or di-fahm), adj. [Law French] Infamous. default (di-fawl) also dec-fawl), n. (13c) The omission or failure to perform a legal or contractual duty; esp., the failure to pay a debt when due. [Cases: Contracts C=312, 315.] default (di-fawl), vb. 1. To be neglectful; esp., to fail to perform a contractual obligation. 2. To fail to appear or answer. 3. To enter a default judgment against (a litigant).
defaultant (di-fawl-tant), adj. In default; having defaulted. See defaulter.
defaulter. 1. A person who is in default. 2. A person who misappropriates or fails to account for money held in the person's official or fiduciary capacity. — Also termed defaultant.
default judgment. (16c) 1. A judgment entered against a defendant who has failed to plead or otherwise defend against the plaintiff's claim. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=2411; Judgment C=92.] 2. A judgment entered as a penalty against a party who does not comply with an order, esp. an order to comply with a discovery request. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 55(b). — Also termed judgment by default. See judgment. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=1278, 2820; Pretrial Procedure C=46.]
nil-dicit default judgment (nil di-sit). [Latin "he says nothing"] (2002) A judgment for the plaintiff entered after the defendant fails to file a timely answer, often after the defendant appeared in the case by filing a preliminary motion. — Often shortened to nihil dict. — Also termed nihil-dicit default judgment; judgment by nil dict. [Cases: Judgment C=106.]

no-answer default judgment. (1979) A judgment for the plaintiff entered after the defendant fails to timely answer or otherwise appear. [Cases: Judgment ☑ 106.]

default rule. See RULE (1).

defeasance (di-feez-’nts), n. (15c) 1. An annulment or abrogation; VOIDANCE. 2. The fact or an instance of bringing an estate or status to an end, esp. by conditional limitation. 3. A condition upon the fulfillment of which a deed or other instrument is defeated or made void; a contractual provision containing such a condition. — Also termed defeasance clause. 4. Hist. A collateral deed made simultaneously with a conveyance and containing a condition by which the main deed might be defeated or made void. — Also spelled defeasance. — defease, vb.

“A defeasance is a collateral deed, made at the same time with a feoffment or other conveyance, containing certain conditions, upon the performance of which the estate then created may be defeated or totally undone.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 327 (1766).

defeasance clause. A mortgage provision stating that the conveyance to the mortgagee will be ineffective if the mortgagor pays the debt on time. See DEFEASANCE (3). [Cases: Mortgages ☑ 33.]
defeasable, adj. (16c) (Of an act, right, agreement, or position) capable of being annulled or avoided <defeasible deed>. See fee simple defeasible under FEE SIMPLE. — defeasibility, n.

defeasible fee simple. See fee simple defeasible under FEE SIMPLE.
defeasible interest. See INTEREST (2). defeasible remainder. See REMAINDER.
defeasible title. See TITLE (2). defeasive, adj. Rare. Capable of defeating .

defeat, vb. 1. To deprive (someone) of something expected, usu. by an antagonistic act <to defeat the opponent in an election>. 2. To annul or render (something) void <to defeat title>. 3. To vanquish; to conquer (someone or something) <to defeat the armies>. 4. To frustrate (someone or something) <the expenditures defeat the bill's purpose>.
defect, n. (15c) An imperfection or shortcoming, esp. in a part that is essential to the operation or safety of a product. — defective, adj. [Cases: Products Liability ☑ 119.]

apparent defect. See patent defect.
design defect. (1954) An imperfection occurring when the seller or distributor could have reduced or avoided a foreseeable risk of harm by adopting a reasonable alternative design, and when, as a result of not using the alternative, the product or property is not reasonably safe. Cf. manufacturing defect. [Cases: Products Liability ☑ 127, 128.] fatal defect. (18c) A serious defect capable of nullifying a contract. hidden defect. (1896) A product imperfection that is not discoverable by reasonable inspection and for which a seller or lessor is generally liable if the flaw causes harm. Upon discovering a hidden defect, a purchaser may revoke a prior acceptance. UCC § 2-608(1)(b). — Also termed latent defect; inherent defect. [Cases: Sales ☑ 119.]

latent defect. See hidden defect.
manufacturing defect. (1925) An imperfection in a product that departs from its intended design even though all possible care was exercised in its assembly. Cf. design defect. [Cases: Products Liability ☑ 125.]

marketing defect. (1980) 1. The failure to adequately warn of a potential risk of harm that is known or should have been known about a product or its foreseeable use. 2. The failure to adequately instruct the user about how to use a product safely. [Cases: Products Liability ☑ 133.]

patent defect. (1827) A defect that is apparent to a normally observant person, esp. a buyer on a reasonable inspection. — Also termed apparent defect.

product defect. (1967) An imperfection in a product that has a manufacturing defect or design defect, or is faulty because of inadequate instructions or warnings. See manufacturing defect; design defect; marketing defect. [Cases: Products Liability ☑ 122.]
defective, adj. (14c) 1. (Of a position, right, act, or process) lacking in legal sufficiency <defective execution of documents> <defective service of process>. 2. (Of a product) containing an imperfection or shortcoming in a part essential to the product's safe operation <defective wiring caused the accident>. [Cases: Products Liability ☑ 119.] defective condition. (1823) An unreasonably dangerous state that might well cause physical harm beyond that contemplated by the ordinary user or consumer who purchases the product. See PRODUCTS LIABILITY. [Cases: Products Liability ☑ 119.] defective performance. See PERFORMANCE.

defective process. See PROCESS.
defective product. See PRODUCT.
defective record. See RECORD.
defective title. See TITLE (2). defective trust. See TRUST.
defective verdict. See VERDICT.
defect of form. (17c) An imperfection in the style, manner, arrangement, or nonessential parts of a legal document, as distinguished from a substantive defect. Cf. defect of substance.

defect of parties. (18c) A failure to include all indispensable parties in a lawsuit. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure \(\Rightarrow 384\); Parties \(\Rightarrow 77, 81\)].

defect of substance. (18c) An imperfection in the substantive part of a legal document, as by omitting an essential term. Cf. defect of form.

defectus (di-fek-tas), n. [fr. Latin deficere “to be deficient”] Hist. A defect; a deficiency.

defence. See defense.

defend, vb. (14c) 1. To deny, contest, or oppose (an allegation or claim) <the corporation vigorously defended against the shareholder’s lawsuit>. 2. To represent (someone) as an attorney <the accused retained a well-known lawyer to defend him>.

defendant (di-fen-dant). (14c) A person sued in a civil proceeding or accused in a criminal proceeding. — Abbr. D. Cf. plaintiff.

John Doe defendant. An anonymous defendant labeled “John Doe” because the plaintiff does not, at the time of filing suit, know the person’s name. • John Doe defendants are common in several situations, such as police-brutality lawsuits in which the plaintiff does not know the names of the officers allegedly at fault, and in some copyright-infringement lawsuits where defendants are identified only by Internet addresses. See John Doe. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure \(\Rightarrow 101\); Parties \(\Rightarrow 73\)].

target defendant. In a case with multiple defendants, the one whom the plaintiff considers the primary source for any recovery of damages. • Among several defendants, one is usu. the most blameworthy or has the most insurance or greatest assets, or both.

defendant in error. (18c) Archaic. In a case on appeal, the prevailing party in the court below. See appellant; respondent (1).

defendant score. (1982) A number taken from an established scale, indicating the relative seriousness of the defendant’s criminal history. Cf. crime score.

defendant’s gain. (1882) The amount of money or the value of property that a criminal defendant has obtained by committing a crime. • Some states, such as New York, consider the defendant’s gain when assessing a criminal fine or ordering restitution.

defendemus (di-fen-da-mas). [fr. Latin defendere] We will defend. • This term was used in conveyancing to require the donor and the donor’s heirs to defend the donee against any attempted encumbrance not specifically agreed to. Although defendemus was not a warranty, it became part of the warranty clause “shall and will warrant and forever defend.”

defender. 1. One who defends, such as the defendant in a lawsuit, a person using self-defense, or defense counsel. 2. Public defender.

defendere (di-fen-da-re), vb. [Law Latin] To deny; to defend.

defendere se per corpus suum (di-fen-da-re see par kor-pos sl(y)oo-am), vb. [Law Latin “to defend himself by his own body”] Hist. To agree to a trial by judicial combat; to agree to a duel.

Defender of the Faith. See defender fidel.

defendour (day-fon-duur), n. [Law French] Hist. A defendant; the party accused in an appeal.

defeneration (dee-fen-a-ray-shan), n. [fr. Latin de “of” + foenero “to lend upon usury”] Hist. The act of lending money at a usurious interest rate.

defenestration (dee-fen-a-stray-shan). (17c) The act of throwing someone or something out a window. — defenestrate, vb.

defense (di-fen[t]s). (16c) 1. A defendant’s stated reason why the plaintiff or prosecutor has no valid case; esp., a defendant’s answer, denial, or plea <her defense was that she was 25 miles from the building at the time of the robbery>. [Cases: Criminal Law \(\Rightarrow 31\).]

"Defence is defined to be that which is alleged by a party proceeded against in an action or suit, as a reason why the plaintiff should not recover or establish that which he seeks by his complaint or petition.” Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 240 (2d ed. 1899).

affirmative defense. (1837) A defendant’s assertion of facts and arguments that, if true, will defeat the plaintiff’s or prosecutor’s claim, even if all the allegations in the complaint are true. • The defendant bears the burden of proving an affirmative defense. Examples of affirmative defenses are duress (in a civil case) and insanity and self-defense (in a criminal case). — Also termed plea in avoidance; plea in justification. Cf. negative defense; confession and avoidance. [Cases: Criminal Law \(\Rightarrow 31\); Federal Civil Procedure \(\Rightarrow 751\); Pleading \(\Rightarrow 76, 78, 130\).] capacity defense. (1967) A defense based on the defendant’s inability to be held accountable for an illegal act or the plaintiff’s inability to prosecute a lawsuit (as when the plaintiff was a corporation, but has lost its corporate charter). See capacity.

choice-of-evils defense. See lesser-evils defense.

collateral defense (ko-lat-a-rəl). Criminal law. A defense of justification or excuse not involving a rebuttal of the allegation and therefore collateral to the elements that the prosecutor must prove. See excuse (2); justification (2). [Cases: Criminal Law \(\Rightarrow 38\).]
cultural defense. 1. A criminal defendant's assertion that because an admitted act is not a crime in the perpetrator's culture or native land, it should not be judged by the laws of the place where it was committed. • This cultural defense is asserted as an affirmative defense to a criminal charge. 2. The defense that the actor's mental state at the time the alleged crime was committed was heavily influenced by cultural factors. • This is not a complete defense but a mitigating one, pleaded to reduce the charges, the sentence, or both. See female genital mutilation. [Cases: Criminal Law C-34.]

defense of habitation. The defense that conduct constituting a criminal offense is justified if an aggressor unjustifiably threatens the defendant's place of abode or premises and the defendant engages in conduct that is (1) harmful to the aggressor, (2) sufficient to protect that place of abode or premises, and (3) reasonable in relation to the harm threatened. — Also termed defense of premises. See Castle Doctrine. [Cases: Assault and Battery C-69; Criminal Law C-38, Homicide C-759.]

defense of inequitable conduct. Patents. A defense to an action for patent infringement, made by charging the plaintiff with breaching the duty of candor and good faith. • To succeed, the defendant must show that, in the patent prosecution, the plaintiff intentionally withheld material information from or misled the Patent Office. [Cases: Patents C-97.]

derivative defense. (1972) A defense that rebuts the criminal elements that a prosecutor must establish to justify the submission of a criminal case to a jury. [Cases: Criminal Law C-31.]

designer defense. A novel defense based on diminished capacity attributed to stress or impairment. • The phrase derives from the fact that the defense is tailored to the defendant and the circumstances of the crime. Examples include extraordinary reactions to snack food (the Twinkie defense), unconsciousness or sleepwalking, and postpartum psychosis. See automatism. [Cases: Criminal Law C-46; Homicide C-815, 816.]

dilatory defense (dil-a-tor-ee). (1845) A defense that temporarily obstructs or delays a lawsuit but does not address the merits. • Examples of dilatory defenses include misjoinder, nonjoinder, res judicata, misnomer, lack of capacity to sue, another action pending, statute of limitations, prematurity, unripe­ness, release, and settlement.

empty-suit defense. A defense in which a high-ranking officer or director in an organization claims ignorance of any wrongdoing by subordinates.

equitable defense. (18c) A defense formerly available only in a court of equity but now maintainable in a court of law. • Examples include mistake, fraud, illegality, failure of consideration, forum non conveni­niens, laches, estoppel, and unclean hands.

frivolous defense. (18c) A defense that has no basis in fact or law.

full defense. A technical common-law defensive plea, stated at length and without abbreviation. • This plea is obsolete because of the pleading requirements in federal and state rules of civil procedure.

general-justification defense. See lesser-evils defense.

honesty defense. Rare. An assertion that the defendant acted honestly and in good faith. • This defense, almost unique to civil suits, is rarely raised. For example, a defendant may assert honesty as a defense to a charge of fraudulent misrepresentation. — Also termed defense of honesty. Cf. claim of right (1). [Cases: Fraud C-36.]

imperfect defense. (1835) A defense that fails to meet all legal requirements and usu. results only in a reduction in grade or sentence rather than an acquittal, as when a defendant is charged with manslaughter rather than murder because the defendant, while defending another, used unreasonable force to repel the attack. See imperfect self-defense under self-defense. Cf. perfect defense.

inconsistent defense. (1852) A defense so contrary to another defense that the acceptance of one requires abandonment of the other. • A person accused of murder, for example, cannot claim both self-defense and the alibi of having been in a different city when the murder took place. [Cases: Criminal Law C-43.5] innocent-owner defense. In forfeiture action, an affirmative defense in which the owner of property (such as real estate or money) asserts that another person committed the wrongful act or omission while using the property without the owner's knowledge or consent. See 18 USCA § 983(d). See civil forfeiture under FORFEITURE. [Cases: Controlled Substances C-174; Forfeitures C-4.]

issuable defense. (1847) Common-law pleading. A plea on the merits setting forth a legal defense. Cf. issuable plea under plea (3).

legal defense. (17c) A complete and adequate defense in a court of law.

lesser-evils defense. (1982) The defense that, while the defendant may have caused the harm or evil that would ordinarily constitute a criminal offense, in the present case the defendant has not caused a net harm or evil because of justifying circumstances and therefore should be excused. — Also termed choice-of-evils defense; necessity; general-justification defense.
meritorious defense (mer-ə-tor-ə-scəs). (18c) 1. A defense that addresses the substance or essentials of a case rather than dilatory or technical objections. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=;> 2450, 2651; Judgment C=;> 145, 379, 447.] 2. A defense that appears likely to succeed or has already succeeded.

necessity defense. See justification (2).

negative defense. A defendant's outright denial of the plaintiff's allegations without additional facts pleaded by way of avoidance. Cf. affirmative defense. [Cases: Pleading C=;> 76.]

new-value defense. Bankruptcy. A defense to a suit to recover preferential payments whereby the transferee of the payments can reduce liability by the amount of consideration or value that the transferee provided to the transferor after a suspect transfer. [Cases: Bankruptcy C=;> 2613.]

ostrich defense. A criminal defendant's claim not to have known of the criminal activities of an associate.

partial defense. (1818) A defense going either to part of the action or toward mitigation of damages.

pass-on defense. An antitrust defense that a member of the distributive chain who was overcharged or undercharged passed on the price adjustment to reflect the charge and thereby suffered no damage. — Also termed passing on. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation C=;> 908.] peremptory defense (por-emp-tər-ə). (1860) A defense that questions the plaintiff's legal right to sue or contends that the right to sue has been extinguished.

perfect defense. (1817) A defense that meets all legal requirements and results in the defendant's acquittal. See perfect self-defense under self-defense. Cf. imperfect defense.

pretermitted defense (pree-tər-mit-id). (1947) A defense available to a party that must be pleaded at the right time or be waived.

sham defense. (1853) A fictitious, untrue defense, made in bad faith.

sleepwalking defense. See automatism.

SODDI. See soddi defense.

trust defense. A defense admitting that a defendant committed the charged offense, but seeking to avoid punishment based on a legal excuse (such as insanity) or justification (such as self-defense).

unconsciousness defense. See automatism.

XYY-chromosome defense. See XYY-chromsome defense.

2. A defendant's method and strategy in opposing the plaintiff or the prosecution; a doctrine giving rise to such a method or strategy <the lawyer advised her client to adopt a passive defense and to avoid taking the witness stand.>

empty-chair defense. (1981) A trial tactic in a multiparty case whereby one defendant attempts to put all the fault on a defendant who plea-bargained or settled before trial or on a person who was neither charged nor named as a party.

malicious defense. Torts. A defendant's use of unfair, harassing, or illegal tactics to advance a frivolous or unmeritorious defense. • The elements of the tort are (1) the defendant's initiation, continuation, or procurement of proceedings; (2) knowledge that the defense lacks merit; (3) the assertion of the defense for a purpose other than to properly adjudicate the claim, such as to harass, annoy, or injure, or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation; (4) termination of the suit in the plaintiff's favor; and (5) harm to the plaintiff resulting from the proceeding. Damages are the same as in an action for malicious prosecution. A minority of states recognizes the tort. Cf. malicious prosecution. [Cases: Torts C=;> 437.]

Stalingrad defense. The strategy of wearing down the plaintiff by tenaciously fighting by whatever means anything the plaintiff presents and appealing every ruling favorable to the plaintiff, rather than presenting a meritorious case. • The tactic is named for the Russian city besieged by the Germans in World War II. The defenders refused to surrender and used every available tactic and tool to hold the attackers at bay until winter cut the enemy's supply lines, leaving the attackers with inadequate resources with which to continue the siege.

3. One or more defendants in a trial, as well as their counsel <the defense rests.> 4. Commercial law. A basis for avoiding liability on a negotiable instrument <the drawer asserted a real defense against the holder in due course.>

personal defense. (1950) An ordinary defense in a contract action — such as failure of consideration or nonperformance of a condition — that the maker or drawer of a negotiable instrument is precluded from raising against a person who has the rights of a holder in due course. See UCC § 3–305(b). • A personal defense can be asserted only against a transferee who is not a holder in due course. — Also termed limited defense.

real defense. A type of defense that is good against any possible claimant, so that the maker or drawer of a negotiable instrument can raise it even against a holder in due course. • The ten real defenses are (1) fraud in the factum, (2) forgery of a necessary signature, (3) adjudicated insanity that, under state law, renders the contract void from its inception, (4) material alteration of the instrument, (5) infancy, which renders the contract voidable under state law, (6) illegality that renders the underlying contract void, (7) duress, (8) discharge in bankruptcy, or any discharge known to the holder in due course, (9) a suretyship defense (for example, if the holder knew that one indorser was signing as a surety or accommodation party, and (10) a statute of limitations (generally three years after dishonor or acceptance on a draft and six years after demand or other due date on a note). — Also termed absolute defense; universal defense. [Cases: Bills and Notes \(\supset\) 364.]

5. Measures taken by a country or individual to protect against an attack. See self-defense; national defense (1).

self-defense. See self-defense.

6. A country's military establishment. See national defense (2). — Also spelled in all senses (esp. in BrE) defense.

defense attorney. A lawyer who represents a defendant in a civil or criminal case. — Also termed defense counsel; defense lawyer.

Defense Commissary Agency. An agency in the U.S. Department of Defense responsible for providing goods and services to members of the armed forces at reduced prices. — Abbr. DeCA.

defense contingent fee. See reverse contingent fee under contingent fee.

Defense Contract Audit Agency. An agency in the U.S. Department of Defense responsible for conducting contract audits and for providing accounting and financial advice to all Department components responsible for procurement and contract administration. — Abbr. DCAA.

Defense Contract Management Agency. A unit in the U.S. Department of Defense responsible for managing contracts to ensure that supplies and services are delivered on time and within cost and that they meet performance requirements. — Abbr. DCMA.

defense counsel. See defense attorney.

Defense Department. An executive department of the federal government, responsible for coordinating and overseeing military affairs and the agencies responsible for national security. • The Department was established as the National Military Establishment in 1947, by combining the War and the Navy Departments. Its name was changed to Department of Defense in 1949. The Department's components include the Army, the Air Force, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff. It is headed by the Secretary of Defense, who is answerable to the President as Commander-in-Chief. — Also termed Department of Defense (abbr. DOD).

Defense Finance and Accounting Service. A unit in the U.S. Department of Defense responsible for providing professional finance and accounting services and for overseeing the Department's day-to-day finance and accounting activities. — Abbr. DFAS.

Defense Information Systems Agency. An agency in the U.S. Department of Defense responsible for developing and operating information systems to provide combat support for the armed forces. — Abbr. DISA.

Defense Intelligence Agency. A combat-support unit in the U.S. Department of Defense responsible for developing and managing foreign military intelligence in support of military planning and operations and of weapons-systems acquisition. — Abbr. DIA.

Defense Investigative Services. See defense security service.

defense lawyer. See defense attorney.

Defense Legal Services Agency. An agency in the U.S. Department of Defense responsible for providing legal services to all agencies in the Department. • The General Counsel of the Department directs its operations. — Abbr. DLSA.

Defense Logistics Agency. A unit in the U.S. Department of Defense responsible for providing worldwide logistics support for military missions both in peace and in war. • The Agency also supports nonmilitary agencies overseas. — Abbr. DLA.

defense-month. See fence-month.

Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board. An independent federal board that sets standards for the design, construction, operation, and decommissioning of defense nuclear facilities of the U.S. Department of Energy. • It was established in 1988. 42 USCA §§ 2286–2286i.

defense of habitation. See defense (1).

defense of honesty. See defense (1).

Defense of Marriage Act. A federal statute that (1) provides that no state can be required to recognize or give effect to same-sex marriages, (2) defines the term "marriage" for purposes of federal law as the union of a man and a woman as husband and wife, and (3) defines "spouse" for purposes of federal law as being only a person of the opposite sex. 1 USCA § 7; 28 USCA 1738C. • The Defense of Marriage Act was enacted in response to the fear that if one state sanctuoned same-sex marriages, other states might then have to give full faith and credit to those marriages. — Abbr. DOMA. [Cases: Marriage \(\supset\) 17.5.] defense of others. (1942) A justification defense available if one harms or threatens another when defending a third person. See justification (2). [Cases: Assault and Battery \(\supset\) 68; Homicide \(\supset\) 757.]

defense of premises. See defense of habitation under defense (1).

defense of property. (1918) A justification defense available if one harms or threatens another when defending one's property. See justification (2). [Cases: Assault and Battery \(\supset\) 69; Homicide \(\supset\) 758.]

defense of self. See self-defense.

Defense Security Service. A unit in the U.S. Department of Defense responsible for conducting personnel investigations and providing industrial-security products and services to the Department and other agencies. The agency was formerly known as the Defense Investigative Service. — Abbr. DSS.

Defense Threat Reduction Agency. A unit in the U.S. Department of Defense responsible for reducing the risk of and defending against attacks that involve nuclear, chemical, biological, or other weapons of mass destruction. The Agency was formerly known as the Defense Investigative Service. — Abbr. DTRA.

defensiva (dee-fen-si-va), n. [Latin “a protector”] Hist. A warden of the Marches, being one of many lords appointed by the Crown to defend England’s borders.

defensive allegation. See ALLEGATION.

defensive collateral estoppel. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL.

defensive disclosure. Patents. The deliberate publication of details about an invention in order to render it prior art and preclude others from getting a patent on the same invention. This can be done formally, by filing for public disclosure through the Statutory Invention Registration and publishing the abstract in the Official Gazette of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, or privately, by publishing it in an independent journal that will probably be consulted by a patent examiner. — Also termed defensive publication. See STATUTORY INVENTION REGISTRATION. [Cases: Patents C-115.] defensive-force justification. See JUSTIFICATION.

defensive lockout. See LOCKOUT.

defensive-posture memorandum. See DEFENSIVE PROFILE.

defensive profile. The set of strategies devised by a company to discourage others from attempting a hostile takeover.

defensive-profile memorandum. Corporations. An outline of a company’s strategy against a hostile takeover. — Also termed defensive-posture memorandum.

defensive publication. See DEFENSIVE DISCLOSURE.

defensive treaty. See TREATY (1).

defensor civitatis (di-fen-sor siv-i-tay-tis). [Latin “defender of the city”] Roman law. An officer conducting public business, including protecting people, esp. the poor, from legal injustices, adjudicating certain minor offenses and pecuniary matters, and acting as a notary in the execution of a will or other transfer. Often shortened to defensor.

defensor fidei (di-fen-sor ft-dee-t), n. [Latin “defender of the faith”] Hist. A unique title of the sovereign of England, first granted in 1521 by Pope Leo X to Henry VIII for writing against Martin Luther. The Pope later withdrew the title because of Henry’s harsh regulation of the church, but the title was again bestowed on the King by Parliament in 1544. The term is similar to the application of “Catholic” to the Spanish sovereign and “Most Christian” to the French sovereign. — Also termed Defender of the Faith.

defensum (di-fen-sam), n. [Law Latin “an inclosure”] Hist. 1. A portion of an open field allotted for corn or hay but not for feeding. 2. A wood partially enclosed to prevent the cattle from damaging the undergrowth. 3. A prohibition.

defer, vb. (17c) 1. To postpone; to delay <to defer taxes to another year>. 2. To show deference to (another); to yield to the opinion of <because it was a political question, the courts deferred to the legislature>.

deferment, n. 1. The act of delaying; postponement <deferment of a judicial decision>. 2. Military law. A delay in serving in the military. [Cases: Armed Services C-20.6] 3. Military law. A delay in serving confinement that results from a court-martial until the sentence has been approved and its execution has been ordered. The convening authority may grant a deferment. [Cases: Armed Services C-48; Military Justice C-1399.] — defer, vb.

deferral of taxes. The postponement of paying a tax from one year to another, as by contributing money to an IRA, for which earnings and contributions will be taxed only when the money is withdrawn.

deferral state. (1977) Under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA), a state that has its own anti-discrimination legislation and enforcement mechanism, so that the time to file a federal lawsuit under the ADEA is postponed until state remedies have been exhausted. [Cases: Civil Rights C-1507.]

deflation, n. A general decline in the price of goods and services. Cf. inflation; disinflation. — deflate, vb. — deflationary, adj.
deforce, vb. (15c) 1. To keep (lands) from the true owner by means of force. 2. To oust another from possession by means of force. 3. To detain (a creditor’s money) unjustly and forcibly. — deforciant, n.

"The character of the action of debt is well illustrated by the form of the writ as given by Glanville. It directs the sheriff to order the debtor to render a stated sum which he owes to the plaintiff, ‘and whereof the plaintiff complains that the defendant unjustly deforses him,’ and, if he will not obey, he is to be summoned before the King’s Court. The plaintiff is ‘deforced’ of money just as in a writ of right he is ‘deforced’ of land. It is true that the term ‘deforces’ disappeared from the writ shortly after Glanville’s time, the word debet taking its place; but this seems to have been a matter of form, not of substance. The plaintiff sought to recover the money due as his property.” — William F. Walsh, Outlines of the History of English and American Law 411 (1924).
defforcement. 1. An act of keeping lands from the true owner by force. 2. An act of ousting another from possession by means of force. 3. An act of detaining a creditor’s money unjustly and forcibly.

de haereticum comburendo (dee hi-rect-i-koh kom-byaren-doh). n. [Law Latin "of burning a heretic"] Hist.
1. A writ ordering the execution by burning of a convicted heretic who refused to recant, or was convicted of heresy again after recanting. — Also termed writ de haereticum comburendo.

"[W]e find among our ancient precedents a writ de haereticum comburendo, which is thought by some to be as ancient as the common law itself. However, it appears from thence, that the conviction of heresy by the common law was not in any petty ecclesiastical court, but before the archbishop himself in a provincial synod, and that the delinquent was delivered over to the king to do as he should please with him: so that the crown had a control over the spiritual power, and might pardon the convict by issuing no process against him; the writ de haereticum comburendo being not a writ of course, but issuing only by the special direction of the king in council." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries

"But the case of Sawtre (1400) is a clear case in which the rule of the canon law was applied. He was convicted of heresy before the Bishop of Norwich and recanted his heresy. He fell again into heresy, and was condemned by the archbishop and his provincial Council, as a relapsed heretic. On this conviction the king issued a writ de haereticum comburendo. This case clearly shows that the common law recognized the rule of the canon law . . . ."
ed. 1956).

2. The first English penal law against heresy, enacted in 1401 (2 Hen. 4, ch. 15). • The law authorized the burning of defendants who relapsed or refused to abandon their heretical opinions.

"The first English statute that denounced the penalty of death against heretics was passed in the year 1401.
Whether before that statute the law that was in force in our land demanded or suffered that such persons should be burnt is a question that has been eagerly debated; on it in the days of Elizabeth and James I depended the lives of Anabaptists and Arians; it has not yet lost its interest; but it is a question thatuzzes in a vacuum, for until Lollardy became troublesome there was too little heresy in England to beget a settled course of procedure." 2 Frederick Pollock
the Time of Edward 1544 (1899).

See WITHERNAM.

de homine replegiando (dee hom-an-ee ri-plee-jee-ahndoh), n. [Law Latin "for replevy ing a man"] A writ to replevy a person out of jail or out of the custody of another person after giving security that the replevied person will answer any charge.

   "The writ de homine replegiando lies to replevy a man out of prison, or out of the custody of any private person, in the same manner that chattels taken in distress may be replevied ... upon giving security to the sheriff that the man shall be forthcoming to answer any charge against him. And, if the person be conveyed out of the sheriff's jurisdiction, the sheriff may return that he is eloyed ... upon which a process issues ... to imprison the defendant himself, without bail ... till he produces the party. But this writ is guarded with so many exceptions, that it is not an effectual remedy in numerous instances, especially where the crown is concerned." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 129 (1768).

delict (di-lik-t), n. [Latin delictum “an offense”] (16c) Roman & civil law. A violation of the law, esp., a wrongful act or omission giving rise to a claim for compensation; TORT. — Also termed (in Roman law) delictum; (in French law) délit. [Cases: Torts C> 107.]

"A delict is a civil wrong. It is an infringement of another’s interests that is wrongful irrespective of any prior contractual undertaking to refrain from it — though there may also be one. It entitles the injured party to claim compensation in civil proceedings — though criminal proceedings aimed at punishing the wrongdoer may also ensue." 1 P.Q.R. Böberg, The Law of Delict 1 (1984).

private delict. A wrong regarded primarily as a matter of compensation between individuals.

public delict. A wrong for which the community as a whole takes steps to punish the offender. Cf. public tort under TORT.

quasi-delict. 1. Roman law. A residuary category of private wrongs, characterized by either vicarious or strict liability.

"QUASI-DELIET... Justinian enumerates four cases of obligations said to arise quasi ex delicto. The implication seems to be that in all of them the law creates a liability though the defendant may not in fact be to blame. The cases are the following: — (1) The judge who ‘makes the case his own’... incurs a penalty fixed by the magistrate at discretion... (2) If anything was thrown, or poured, from an upper room... the occupier was liable for double the damage... (3) If a thing was kept placed or suspended to be that in all of them the law creates a liability though the defendant may not in fact be to blame. The cases are the following: — (1) The judge who ‘makes the case his own’... incurs a penalty fixed by the magistrate at discretion... (2) If anything was thrown, or poured, from an upper room... the occupier was liable for double the damage... (3) If a thing was kept placed or suspended over a way used by the public... there was a penalty... which might be recovered from the occupier. ... (4) Ship- owners, innkeepers and stable-keepers were liable for damage or theft committed by slaves or free persons in their employ.... " R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 401–02 (4th ed. 1956).

second deliverance. Hist. A second replevin remedy after the plaintiff has been nonsuited and the distrained property has been returned to the defendant. — Also termed writ of second deliverance.

'And at the common law, the plaintiff might have brought another replevin, and so in infinitum, to the intolerable vexation of the defendant. Wherefore the statute of Westm. 2, c. 2 restrains the plaintiff, when nonsuited, from suing any fresh replevin, but allows him a judicial writ issuing out of the original record, and called a writ of second deliverance, in order to have the same distress again delivered to him, on giving the like security as before. And, if the plaintiff be a second time nonsuit, or if the defendant has judgment upon verdict, ... he shall have a writ or return irreplevisible, after which no writ of second deliverance shall be allowed.' 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 150 (1767).

delivered at frontier. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must (1) clear the goods for export, (2) arrange and pay for transportation, and (3) deliver the goods to a specified place on the importing nation's border. • The seller's delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the goods arrive at the designated point and are placed at the disposal of the buyer. This term is generally used when the delivery place is on land, but it places no explicit restrictions on the mode of carriage. If the delivery place is a border port and delivery is complete either onboard or alongside the vessel, the term delivered ex ship or delivered ex quay is preferred. — Abbr. DAF. Cf. delivered ex ship; delivered ex quay.

delivered duty paid. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must (1) clear the goods for export, (2) bear the costs of carriage, (3) pay the buyer's import duties, and (4) make the goods available to the buyer on board the carrier at the destination. • The seller's delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the seller's carrier arrives at the agreed destination. This term is generally used when the delivery place is on land, but it places no explicit restrictions on the mode of carriage. If the delivery point is a port and delivery is complete either onboard or alongside the vessel, the term delivered ex ship or delivered ex quay is preferred. — Abbr. DDP. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must (1) clear the goods for export, (2) bear the costs of transportation to the port named by the importing buyer, and (3) place the goods alongside the ship in the port of destination. • The seller’s delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the goods are unloaded in the destination port. This term is used only when goods are transported by sea or inland waterway. — Abbr. DEQ. Cf. DELIVERED EX SHIP; FREE ALONGSIDE SHIP.

delivered ex ship. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must clear the goods for export and bear the costs of transportation (apart from unloading charges and import duties) to the importing nation’s port of destination. • The seller’s delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the seller’s carrier arrives at the destination port. This term is used only when goods are transported by sea or inland waterway. — Abbr. DES. Cf. DELIVERED EX QUAY; FREE ON BOARD.

delivery, n. (15c) 1. The formal act of transferring something, such as a deed; the giving or yielding possession or control of something to another. 2. The thing so transferred or conveyed. Cf. LIVERY. — deliver, vb.

absolute delivery. (1808) A delivery that is complete upon the actual transfer of the instrument from the grantor’s possession. • Such a delivery does not usually depend on recordation.

actual delivery. (17c) The act of giving real and immediate possession to the buyer or the buyer’s agent.

conditional delivery. (18c) A delivery that passes possession subject to the happening of a specified event. • Possession passes immediately; title remains conditional.

constructive delivery. (18c) An act that amounts to a transfer of title by operation of law when actual transfer is impractical or impossible. • For example, the delivery of a deposit-box key by someone who is ill and immobile may amount to a constructive delivery of the box’s contents even though the box may be miles away. For the three traditional types of constructive delivery, see ATTORNMENT; CONSTITUTUM POSSESSORIUM; TRADITIO BREVI MANU.

good delivery. Securities. A security’s delivery when the certificate (1) is in good condition, (2) belongs to the person transferring it, (3) is properly indorsed, and (4) is accompanied by any legal documents necessary for its negotiability.

jail delivery. See JAIL DELIVERY.

second delivery. (17c) A legal delivery by the depositary of a deed placed in escrow. [Cases: Deeds $58; Deposits and Escrows $21.]

symbolic delivery. (18c) The constructive delivery of the subject matter of a sale or gift by the actual delivery of an article that represents the item, that renders access to it possible, or that provides evidence of the title to it, such as the key to a warehouse or a bill of lading for goods on board. [Cases: Sales $162.]

unconditional delivery. (18c) A delivery that immediately passes both possession and title and that takes effect immediately.

delivery in escrow. (1842) The physical transfer of something to an escrow agent to be held until some condition is met, at which time the agent will release it. • An example of such a delivery is a stock buyer’s transfer of cash to a bank that will give the seller the cash upon receiving the stock certificates. This type of delivery creates immediate conditional rights in the promisee. The device may be used to create an option contract in which the promisee has the option. See ESCROW. [Cases: Deposits and Escrows $14.]

delivery of deed. (18c) The placing of a deed in the grantor’s hands or within the grantee’s control. • By this act, the grantor shows an intention that the deed operates immediately as a conveyance. A deed may also be held to be delivered when the grantor manifests the intention to complete the conveyance, regardless of actual delivery. [Cases: Deeds $54–67.]

delivery order. A written order to deliver goods, directed to a warehouseman, carrier, or other person who ordinarily issues warehouse receipts or bills of lading. UCC § 7-102(1)(d).

de lucrandae dote (dee loo-kan-da doh-tee). [Latin “of being enriched by the dowry”] Hist. A spousal agreement giving a husband the right to retain his wife’s dowry upon her death.

A writ ordering a sheriff to summon 4 knights to go oaths before the justices of assize and then choose 12 more knights to form a grand assize to determine who had the right in a writ of right.

demain. See DEMESNE.

de malo (dee mal-oh). [Law Latin] Of illness. • This term defined certain legal excuses, such as de malo lecti (“of illness in bed”), de malo veniendi (“of illness or misfortune in coming where the court is”), and de malo villae (“of illness in town where the court is”).

demand, n. (13c) 1. The assertion of a legal or procedural right.

contingent demand. A demand that cannot be fixed because it depends on the occurrence of a contingency.

cross-demand. (18c) A party’s demand opposing an adverse party’s demand. See COUNTERCLAIM; CROSS-CLAIM.

demand in reconvention. See reconventional demand.

incidental demand. Civil law. A plea by which a party other than the plaintiff asserts a claim that is related to the plaintiff’s suit. Examples include a cross-claim, a demand against a third party, an intervention, and a reconventional demand. La. Code Civ. Proc. art. 1031.

legal demand. A lawful demand made by an authorized person.

main demand. Civil law. A plaintiff’s principal or primary claim against one or more defendants, contained in an original or validly amended pleading. Also termed principal demand; principal action.

reconventional demand. Civil law. A plea by which a defendant asserts any claim that it has against the plaintiff, or any offset against the plaintiff’s claim.

- This plea is similar to the common-law counterclaim. La. Code Civ. Proc. 1061 et seq. Also termed demand in reconvention.

2. Parliamentary law. A request, usu. invoking a right, that must be granted on a single member’s motion. See REQUEST. 3. A request for payment of a debt or an amount due. 4. In economics, the intensity of buyer pressure on the availability and cost of a commodity or service. 3. A request for payment of a debt or an amount due. [Cases: Bills and Notes ⊆ 393–399.]

personal demand. An in-person demand for payment upon the drawer, maker, or acceptor of a bill or note.

4. In economics, the intensity of buyer pressure on the availability and cost of a commodity or service.

aggregate demand. 1. The total amount spent on goods and services in an economy during a specific period. 2. The total demand for a firm’s products and services during a specific period.

derived demand. Product demand that is related to another product’s demand.

demand, vb. (14c) 1. To claim as one’s due; to require; to seek relief. 2. To summon; to call into court.

demandant. Archaic. The plaintiff in a real action (the defendant being called a tenant). See real action under action.

demand clause. (1919) A provision in a note allowing the holder to compel full payment if the maker fails to meet an installment. Cf. ACCELERATION CLAUSE. [Cases: Bills and Notes ⊆ 129.]
available to a tenant of a frankmarriage to regain land lost by default.

dematerialized security. See unsecured security under security.

de me (dee mee). [Latin] Of me. • This phrase appeared in feudal grants to confirm that a superior lord's permission was not needed for the conveyance. This was distinguished from a conveyance a me de superiore meo ("from me of my superior").

demeanor. (iSc) Outward appearance or behavior, such as facial expressions, tone of voice, gestures, and the hesitation or readiness to answer questions. • In evaluating credibility, the jury may consider the witness's demeanor. [Cases: Witnesses ći=315.]

de mediatae linguae (dee mee-dee-oo-tay-tee ling-gwee). [Law Latin] Of half-tongue. • This term describes a jury made up of an equal number of natives and aliens. Edward III originally provided for such a jury in commercial cases when one party was an alien. If enough aliens could not be found, trial proceeded with the available number.

de medio (dee mee-dee-oh), n. [Law Latin "of mesne"] Hist. A writ against a mesne (i.e., middle) lord to protect an undertenant from harassment by a paramount lord for rent actually due from the mesne lord. — Also termed writ of mesne.

-de melioribus damnis (dee mee-lee-or-oo-bas dam-nee-s), [Law Latin] Of the better damages. • This term describes a plaintiff's election of the defendant against which to take judgment when the jury has mistakenly awarded separate damages against two or more defendants for a joint tort. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff could take a judgment against the defendant that had been assessed the greatest damages, and then enter a nolle prosequi against the others. [Cases: Judgment ći=240, 256(4, 5).]

demembration (dee mee-bray-shan), n. The cutting off of a limb; dismemberment; mutilation.

demented, adj. Not of sound mind; insane.

-de mercatoribus (dee mar-kah-tor-oo-bas), n. [Latin "of merchants"] Hist. The title of two statutes enacted in the 11th and 13th years of the reign of Edward I, providing that the land of a business debtor could be held by a creditor as security until the debt was paid.

"But by the statute de mercatoribus . . . the whole of a man's lands was liable to be pledged in a statute merchant, for a debt contracted in trade, though one half of them was liable to be taken in execution for any other debt of the owner." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 161 (1765).

demesne (di-mayn or di-meeen), n. [French] 1. At common law, land held in one's own right, and not through a superior; esp., land attached to a manor and reserved for the court's own use. 2. Domain; realm. — Also spelled demain.

ancient demesne. Hist. A manor that was held by the Crown at the time of William the Conqueror and was recorded in the Domesday Book.

demesne as of fee. Hist. Complete ownership of something.

"But there is this distinction between the two species of hereditaments: that, of a corporeal inheritance a man shall be said to be seised in his demesne, as of fee; of an incorporeal one, he shall only be said to be seised as of fee, and not in his demesne. For, as incorporeal hereditaments are in their nature collateral to, and issue out of, lands and houses, their owner hath no property, dominicum, or demesne, in the thing itself, but hath only something derived out of it; resembling the servitutes, or services, of the civil law." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 106 (1766).

demesne land. See land.

demesnial (di-may-nee-al or di-meeen-ee-al), adj. Of or relating to a demesne.

demi (dem-ee), n. [French] Half; the half. • The term is most often a combining form, as in demi-sangue.

demidietas (dem-ee-di-ee-tas), n. [Law Latin] A half; a moiety.

demilitarization. Int'l law. The process by which a country obligates itself not to station military forces — or to maintain military installations — in specified areas or zones within its territory.

demilitarized zone. Int'l law. A territorial area in a country or between countries in which no military forces or military installations are stationed or maintained.

demimark. Hist. Half a mark; money equal to six shil­lings and eight pence, required to be tendered in a writ of right to force the demandant to prove seisin. — Also termed half-mark.

de minimis (de min-oo-mis), adj. [Latin "of the least"] (1952) 1. Trifling; minimal. 2. (Of a fact or thing) so insignificant that a court may overlook it in deciding an issue or case. 3. DE MINIMIS NON CURAT LEX.

de minimis non curat lex (de min-oo-mis non kyoor-at leks). [Latin] The law does not concern itself with trifles. — Often shortened to de minimis.

de minimis test. Copyright. A judicial test for determining whether a contributor to a joint work is an author for legal purposes, based on whether the joint effort itself is an original expression that qualifies for copyright protection. • This test has been rejected in favor of the copyrightability test by most courts that have addressed the issue. Cf. COPYRIGHTABILITY TEST. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ći=41(3).] demisí (dee-mi-sí). [fr. Latin demittere] I have demised. • This was the operative phrase in a lease.

demissio (di-mish-ee-oh). n. [fr. Latin demittere “to demisse”] Hist. A lease or other transfer. • In an ejectment action, this term was used in the phrase ex demissione (“on the demise”) to show that a nominal plaintiff (a fictitious person) held an estate on a demise from the real plaintiff.

de mittendo tenorem recordi (dee mi-ten-doh to-nor-am ri-kor-di). n. [law Latin “of sending the tenor of a record”] Hist. A writ to certify a record under seal.

demobilization. A dismissal of troops from active service.

democracy. n. Government by the people, either directly or through representatives elected by the people. Cf. republic. — democratic, adj.

de moderata misericordia capienda (dee mod-ah-ray-ta miz-ah-ri-kor-dee-a kap-ee-ee-en-da). n. [law Latin “for taking a moderate amercement”] Hist. A writ ordering a bailiff to take a moderate penalty from a party who had been excessively penalized in a court not of record. • The writ was founded on Magna Carta.

demoiselle. See BEQUEST.

demonstratio (dem-oh-sray-shoh-ee). n. [fr. Latin demonstrare “to show”] Roman law. 1. A description, as in falsa demonstratio (a false description of something or someone in a will). 2. Under the formulary procedure, the statement of facts in a formula, forming the basis of a claim. Pl. demonstrationes (dem-on-stray-shee-oh-neez). See FORMULA (1).

demote. vb. To lower (usu. a person) in rank, position, pay, or other status. See degradation (1).

demur (di-mar), vb. (17c) 1. To file a demurrer. See DEMURRER. 2. To object to the legal sufficiency of a claim alleged in a pleading without admitting or denying the truth of the facts stated. [Cases: Pleading ⇑189.] 3. To object to the legal sufficiency of a claim alleged in a pleading while admitting the truth of the facts stated. [Cases: Pleading ⇑189, 214.]

demurrable (di-mar-a-bol), adj. (usu. pl.) Maritime law. 1. Liquidated damages owed by a charterer to a shipowner for the charterer’s failure to load or unload cargo by the agreed time. [Cases: Shipping ⇑170.]

c合约demurrage. Demurrage paid by a vessel’s charterer if the time to load or unload the vessel at port takes longer than that agreed on in the charterer’s contract with the shipowner. Cf. DISPATCH MONEY.

“The contract may also provide that if . . . the loading time exceeds that fixed by the charter, the charterer will pay a liquidated compensation termed ‘contract demurrage.’” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell § 4-8, at 212 (2d ed. 1988).

noncontract demurrage. Demurrage not provided by contract, but ordered by a court. — Also termed damages for detention.

2. A charge due for the late return of ocean containers or other equipment.

demurrage lien. See LIEN.

demurrant (di-mar-a-nt). One who demurs; esp., a litigant who files a demurrer.

demurrer (di-mar-ar). [Law French demourer "to wait or stay"] (16c) A pleading stating that although the facts alleged in a complaint may be true, they are insufficient for the plaintiff to state a claim for relief and for the defendant to frame an answer. • In most jurisdictions, such a pleading is now termed a motion to dismiss, but demurrer is still used in a few states, including California, Nebraska, and Pennsylvania. Cf. DENIAL. (1). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⇑658, 1725; Pleading ⇑189, 193(5).]

“The word ‘demurrer,’ derived from the Latin damnari, or the French demourer, meaning ‘to wait or stay,’ imports that the party demurring waits or stays in his proceedings in the action until the judgment of the court is given whether he is bound to answer so insufficient a pleading. Each party may demur to what he deems an insufficient pleading of the other. The demurrer was general when it was to matter of substance; it was special when it was made to matter of form, and must specifically point out the defect.” Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 15 (2d ed. 1899).

demurrer ore tenus. An oral demurrer. See OR TENUS.

“‘The codes either expressly or by implication require all pleadings to be in writing. To this proposition there is the apparent exception that objections to the jurisdiction of the court, or to the sufficiency of a pleading, that it does not state a cause of action or defence, may be raised on the trial by what is sometimes called a demurrer ore tenus (that is, orally, — by word of mouth).” Edwin E. Bryant, The Law of Pleading Under the Codes of Civil Procedure 179 (2d ed. 1899).

general demurrer. See general exception (1) under EXCEPTION (1).

parol demurrer. Hist. A suspension of proceedings during the minority of an infant.

speaking demurrer. (18c) A demurrer that cannot be sustained because it introduces new facts not contained in the complaint. [Cases: Pleading ⇑210.]

special demurrer. (17c) A demurrer that states grounds for an objection and specifically identifies the nature of the defect, such as that the pleading violates the rules of pleading or practice. • If a pleading is defective in form but not substance, the defect must be pointed out by a special demurrer. [Cases: Pleading ⇑206.]

demurrer book. Hist. A record of the demurrer issue used by the court and counsel in argument.

demurrer to evidence. (17c) A party’s objection or exception that the evidence is legally insufficient to make a case. • Its effect, upon joinder in the demurrer by the opposite party, is that the jury is discharged and the demurrer is entered on record and decided by the court. A demurrer to evidence admits the truth of all the evidence and the legal deductions from that evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ⇑752; Trial ⇑150.]

demurrer to interrogatories. (18c) The objection or reason given by a witness for failing to answer an interrogatory.

demutualization, n. The process of converting a mutual insurance company (which is owned by its policyholders) to a stock insurance company (which is owned by outside shareholders), usu. as a means of increasing the insurer’s capital by allowing the insurer to issue shares. • About half the states have demutualization statutes authorizing such a conversion. [Cases: Insurance ⇑1160. — demutualize, vb.]

de non decimando (dee non des-a-man-doh), n. [Law Latin “of not paying tithes”] Eccles. law. A claim for release from paying a tithe. — Also termed modus de non decimando.

“A prescription de non decimando is a claim to be entirely discharged of tithes, and to pay no compensation in lieu of them. Thus the king by his prerogative is discharged from all tithes. So a vicar shall pay no tithes to the rector, nor the rector to the vicar. . . . But these privileges are personal to both the king and the clergy; for their tenant or lessee shall pay tithes . . . . And from this original have sprung all the lands, which, being in lay hands, do at present claim to be tithe-free: for, if a man can show his lands to have been such abbey lands, and also immemorially discharged of tithes . . . this is now a good prescription, de non decimando. But he must show both these requisites for abbey lands, without a special ground of discharge, are not discharged of course; neither will any prescription de non decimando avail in total discharge of tithes, unless it relates to such abbey lands.” William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 31–32 (1766).

de non procedendo ad assissam (dee non proh-sah den-doh ad a-si-zom), n. [Law Latin “of not proceeding to hold an assize”] Hist. A writ ordering justices not to hold an assize in a particular case.

de non residentia clericis regis (dee non reez-uh den-shay-she-kler a-si-ree-jees), n. [Law Latin “of the nonresidence of a parson employed in royal service”] Hist. A writ to excuse a parson from nonresidence because the parson is busy serving the Crown. See NONRESIDENCE (1).

A summons; a public notice. 3. Scots law. The Crown’s public denunciation of a debtor as a rebel and an outlaw when the debtor has disobeyed an order to pay. Pl. denuntiaciones.

deodand (dee oh-dee-oh). Hist. Something (such as an animal) that has done wrong and must therefore be forfeited to the Crown. • Deodand was abolished in 1846.

“In the oldest records, we see no attempt to distinguish the cases in which the dead man was negligent from those in which no fault could be imputed to him, and the large number of deodands collected in every eyre suggests that many horses and boats bore the guilt which should have been ascribed to beer. A drunken carter is crushed beneath the wheels of his cart; the cart, the cask of wine that was in it and the oxen that were drawing it are all deodand. Bracton apparently thought it an abuse to condemn a thing that had not moved; he would distinguish between the horse which throws a man and the horse off which a man stupidly tumbles, between the tree that falls and the tree against which a man is thrown. We do not see these distinctions in the practice of the courts.” Frederick Pollock & Frederick William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 474 n.4 (2d ed. 1899).

“[W]hen in 1716 the coroner’s jury of Yarmouth declared a stack of timber which had fallen on a child to be forfeited as a deodand, it was ransomed for 30s., which was paid over to the child’s father.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 15 (1899).

de odio et atia (dee oh-dee-oh et ay-shay-ah), n. [Law Latin “of hatred and malice”] Hist. A writ ordering the sheriff to release the prisoner on bail if the sheriff could find 12 good citizens of the county to vouch for the prisoner. This writ, similar to habeas corpus, was first mentioned in Magna Carta. — Also termed breve de bono et malo.
de onerando pro rata portione (dee on-ər·ən-dō pro rō-tā por-shē-ō-nē), n. [Law Latin "of charging according to a ratable proportion"]; Hist. A writ for a joint tenant or cotenant who is distrained for more rent than is proportionately required.

deo nology. The philosophy of ethics, rights, and duties as a matter of natural law. ● Moral rights in one's one intellectual property are often considered deontological issues. — deontological, adj.

de parco fracto (dee pahr·ko frak-toh), n. [Law Latin "of pound breach"]; Hist. A writ against someone, esp. an owner, who breaks into a pound to rescue animals that have been legally distrained and impounded.

"And, being thus in the custody of the law, the taking them back by force is looked upon as an atrocious injury, and denominated a rescus, for which the distressor has a remedy in damages, either by writ of rescus, in case they were going to the pound, or by writ de parco fracto, or pound-breach, in case they were actually impounded." — William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 146 (1768).

de partitione facienda (dee pahr·tish-ē ee-ō-nē fay-shē-ēn·da), n. [Law Latin]; Hist. A writ to partition lands or tenements.

It was created in 1849 and reorganized in 1950. Headed by the Secretary of the Interior, it administers several agencies, including the Bureau of Land Management, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and the U.S. Geological Survey. — Also termed Interior Department. [Cases: Public Lands C–94.]

Department of the Navy. See navy department.

Department of the Treasury. The cabinet-level department of the federal government responsible for recommending tax and fiscal policies, collecting taxes, disbursing U.S. government funds, enforcing tax laws, and manufacturing coins and currency. • Created by Congress in 1789, it is headed by the Secretary of the Treasury. — Also termed Treasury Department. [Cases: United States C–33.]

Department of Transportation. The federal executive division responsible for programs and policies concerning transportation.
• Through a series of specialized agencies, this department oversees aviation, highways, railroads, mass transit, the U.S. merchant marine, and other programs. — Abbr. DOT.

departure, n. (15c) 1. A deviation or divergence from a standard rule, regulation, measurement, or course of conduct [an impermissible departure from sentencing guidelines].

downward departure. (1982) In the federal sentencing guidelines, a court's imposition of a sentence more lenient than the standard guidelines propose, as when the court concludes that a criminal's history is less serious than it appears. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment C–850.]

forbidden departure. (1996) An impermissible deviation from the federal sentencing guidelines based on race, sex, national origin, creed, religion, or socioeconomic status. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment C–804.]

lateral departure. (1993) In the federal sentencing guidelines, a sentence allowing a defendant to avoid incarceration through community or home confinement. — Also termed lateral sentencing. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment C–800–802.]

upward departure. (1982) In the federal sentencing guidelines, a court's imposition of a sentence harsher than the standard guidelines propose, as when the court concludes that a criminal's history did not take into account additional offenses committed by the prisoner. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment C–814.]
2. A variance between a pleading and a later pleading or proof <the departure between the plaintiff's pleadings and the actual evidence was significant>. 3. A party's desertion of the ground (either legal or factual) taken in the immediately preceding pleading and resort to another ground <the defendant's departure from the asserted alibi necessitated a guilty plea>. — depart, vb.

departure in despite of court. Hist. A failure of a defendant (called a tenant) in a real action to appear on demand. • A tenant, having once appeared in a real action, was considered to be constructively present until when demanded. So if the tenant failed to appear when demanded, the tenant was said to have departed in despite (in contempt) of court.

department, n. (17c) 1. The act of giving money or other property to another who promises to preserve it or to use it and return it in kind; esp., the act of placing money in a bank for safety and convenience. [Cases: Banks and Banking C=119–155.] 2. The money or property so given.

demand deposit. A bank deposit that the depositor may withdraw at any time without prior notice to the bank.

direct deposit. The payment of money by transferring the payment directly into the payee’s bank account, usu. by electronic transfer.

frozen deposit. A bank deposit that cannot be withdrawn, as when the financial institution is insolvent or an account is restricted.

general deposit. 1. A bank deposit of money that is commingled with other depositors’ money. 2. A bank deposit that is to the depositor’s credit, thus giving the depositor a right to the money and creating a debtor-creditor relationship between the bank and the depositor. • A bank is not required to return the actual money deposited as a general deposit, as it must with a special deposit; the bank need return only an equivalent sum. [Cases: Banks and Banking C=75–80, 119.]

special deposit. A bank deposit that is made for a specific purpose, that is kept separately, and that is to be returned to the depositor. • The bank serves as a bailiff or trustee for a special deposit. — Also termed specific deposit. [Cases: Banks and Banking C=153.]

time deposit. A bank deposit that is to remain for a specified period or for which notice must be given to the bank before withdrawal. — Also termed term deposit.

3. Money placed with a person as earnest money or security for the performance of a contract. • The money will be forfeited if the depositor fails to perform. — Also termed security deposit.

4. Copyright. The placing of two copies of a published work with the Library of Congress within three months of publication. • This requirement is independent of copyright registration. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C=50.10.]

5. Civil law. A contract by which a depositor delivers a thing to a depositary for safekeeping. La. Civ. Code arts. 2926, 2929. • A deposit may be either an onerous or a gratuitous contract. — Also termed depositum; naked deposit; gratuitous deposit. See gratuitous bailment under BAILMENT. [Cases: Bailment C=2.]

involuntary deposit. A deposit made by accidentally leaving or placing personal property in another’s possession. See involuntary bailment under BAILMENT.

necessary deposit. A bailment, usu. made by reason of emergency or other necessity, that prevents the depositor from freely choosing the depositary. • A necessary deposit occurs, for example, when a person entrusts goods to a stranger during a fire.

quasi-deposit. An involuntary deposit made when one party lawfully possesses property merely by finding it.

voluntary deposit. A deposit made by the mutual consent of the bailor and bailee.

6. Patents. The placing of a sample of microorganisms or cell lines with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to satisfy the enablement requirement. • The practice is not statutory but has been established by regulation and caselaw. 37 CFR §§ 1.801–809. — Also termed enablement by deposit. [Cases: Patents C= 100.]

deposit account. See ACCOUNT.

depositary. (17c) 1. A person or institution that one leaves money or valuables with for safekeeping . • When a depositary is a company, it is often termed a safe-deposit company. Cf. DEPOSITORY. [Cases: Deposits and Escrows C= 13; Warehousemen C= 39.] 2. A gratuitous bailee. See DEPOSIT (5). [Cases: Bailment C= 2.] depositary bank. See BANK.

deposit box. See SAFE-DEPOSIT BOX.

deposit company. See COMPANY.

deposit contract. See CONTRACT.

deposit in court. The placing of money or other property that represents a person's potential liability in the court's temporary custody, pending the outcome of a lawsuit. Also termed deposit into the registry of the court. [Cases: Deposits in Court C= 1.]

deposit into the registry of the court. See DEPOSIT IN COURT.

deposition (dip-ə-zish-ən). (14c) 1. A witness's out-of-court testimony that is reduced to writing (usu. by a court reporter) for later use in court or for discovery purposes. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 30; Fed. R. Crim. P. 15. — Also termed examination before trial. [Cases: Criminal Law C= 627.2; Federal Civil Procedure C= 1311–1456; Pretrial Procedure C= 91–206.] 2. The session at which such testimony is recorded.

apex deposition. (1992) The deposition of a person whose position is at the highest level of a company's hierarchy. • Courts often preclude an apex deposition unless (1) the person to be deposed has particular knowledge regarding the claim, and (2) the requesting party cannot obtain the requested — and discoverable — information through less intrusive means. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C= 1325; Pretrial Procedure C= 101.]

deposition de bene esse (dee bee-nee es-ee also day ben-ay es-aay). (18c) A deposition taken from a witness who will likely be unable to attend a scheduled trial or hearing. • If the witness is not available to attend trial, the testimony is read at trial as if the witness were present in court. See testimony de bene esse under TESTIMONY. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C= 1291–1299, 1311–1456; Pretrial Procedure C= 61–65.]

deposition on written questions. (1970) A deposition given in response to a prepared set of written questions, as opposed to a typical oral deposition. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 31. — Formerly also termed deposition on written interrogatories. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C= 1369; Pretrial Procedure C= 155.]

"The advantage of a deposition on written questions is that counsel for the parties need not go to some distant place to be present at the taking of the deposition. Instead they serve on each other questions and cross questions — and even redirect and recross questions — that they wish to have put to the deponent. These are then sent to the officer who is to take the deposition. The officer puts the questions to the witness, records the answers, and transcribes and files the deposition as with an oral deposition. The officer is merely to record what the witness says in response to the various questions propounded to him or her." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 85, at 618–39 (5th ed. 1994).

oral deposition. (1910) A deposition given in response to oral questioning by a lawyer. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C= 1381; Pretrial Procedure C= 151.]

30(b)(6) deposition. (1979) Under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the deposition of an organization, through the organization's designated representative. • Under Rule 30(b)(6), a party may take the deposition of an organization, such as a corporation. The notice of deposition (or subpoena) may name the organization and may specify the matters to be covered in the deposition. The organization must then designate a person to testify about those matters on its behalf. Fed. R. Civ. P. 30(b)(6). Most states authorize a similar procedure under state-court procedural rules. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C= 1325.]

3. The written record of a witness's out-of-court testimony. A. Eccles. law. The involuntary release of a clergyman from the exercise of his office. Cf. DEGRADATION (1); DEPRIVATION (4).

- Derogation (der-og-i-sh;an). n. (15c) 1. The partial repeal or abrogation of a law by a later act that limits its scope or impairs its utility and force. [Statutes in derogation of the common law]. [Cases: Statutes. 237, 239.] 2. Disparagement; depreciation in value or estimation. See some argument that the derogation of family values has caused an increase in crime. 3. Detraction, prejudice, or destruction (of a grant or right). See an attorney may be punished for derogation from professional integrity. — derogate (der-og-yat), vb.

- Derogation clause. Int'l law. A reservation in a treaty allowing a signatory to refuse to comply with certain provisions. See For example, a signatory may be allowed to suspend some or all of its treaty obligations during a war or other national emergency. If a treaty lacks an express derogation clause, then general principles governing suspension or termination of treaties govern.

- Derogation from grant. A provision in an instrument of transfer (such as a deed) that diminishes, avoids, or otherwise limits the grant itself.

- Derogatory clause. (16c) 1. A statutory or contractual provision proclaiming that the document in which it appears, or a part of the document, cannot be repealed or amended. See Such provisions are considered ineffective.

"The one thing a sovereign legislature cannot do is truncate its own sovereignty by restricting its successors. A parliament sovereign today must also be sovereign tomorrow. What is technically called a clausula derogatoria is therefore ineffective: non impedit clausula derogatoria quo minus ab eadem potestate res dissolvantur a qua constituantur (a derogatory clause does not prevent things from being dissolved by the same power which created them)."

2. A clause that a testator inserts secretly in a will, containing a provision that any later will not having that precise clause is invalid. See A derogatory clause seeks to protect against a later will extorted by undue influence, duress, or violence. — Also termed clausula derogativa; clausula derogatoria.

descriptive trademark. See TRADEMARK.

descriptive word. Trademarks. A term that portrays a general characteristic or function of a product or service. • A descriptive word may not be registered as a trademark unless it has acquired secondary meaning in the minds of consumers such that it is directly associated with one brand. [Cases: Trademarks ⊂ 1035,]

"A trader cannot appropriate to his exclusive use words or symbols which (in the application he is to make of them) are public property. The right of all to use descriptive words in their ordinary and usual meaning must not be restricted. No sign or form of words may be appropriated as a trade-mark, for use in its primary meaning, which, from the nature of the fact conveyed by that primary meaning, others may employ with equal truth, and with de scutagio habendo (dee skyoo-tay-jee-oh ha-ben-doh), n. [Law Latin "for having scutage"] Hist. 1. A writ ordering a tenant-in-chief by knight's service to serve in a war, send a substitute, or pay a sum of money. 2. A writ authorizing a lord who had served in the war or paid the required fine, to recover the scutage from his knights' fees. See scutage.

"Such a baron, having proved that he fulfilled his contract or paid his fine, will have a royal writ de scutagio habendo, whereby the sheriff will be ordered to cause him to have the scutage due from his tenants. Still, before he can get his scutage, he has to obtain something that the king is apt to treat as a favour." T. Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 1270 (2a ed., 1898).

desecrate, vb. (17c) To divest (a thing) of its sacred character; to defile or profane (a sacred thing).

de secta ad molendinum (dee sek-to ad ma-len-din-nam), n. [Law Latin "of suit at mill"] Hist. A writ forcing a person to continue grinding corn at a particular mill, as was customary, or to give a good reason why the custom should not be continued.

"There are also other services, due by ancient custom and prescription only. Such is that of doing suit to another's mill where the persons, resident in a particular place, by usage time out of mind have been accustomed to grind their corn at a certain mill; and afterwards any of them go to another mill, and withdraw their suit . . . from the ancient mill. This is not only a damage, but an injury, to the owner . . . . And for this injury the owner shall have a writ de secta ad molendinum commanding the defendant to do his suit at that mill . . . or show good cause to the contrary: in which action the validity of the prescription may be tried, and if it be found for the owner, he shall recover damages against the defendant." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 234–35 (1768).

deserter. Int'l Law. A member of the armed forces who leaves national military service with the intention of reneging on military obligations either permanently or for the duration of a military operation; a member of the armed forces who illegally abandons a military force, often by seeking refuge in a foreign territory or by joining enemy forces. [Cases: Armed Services 38; Military Justice 661.]

desertion, n. (16c) The willful and unjustified abandonment of a person's duties or obligations, esp. to military service or to a spouse or family. • In family law, the five elements of spousal desertion are (1) a cessation of cohabitation, (2) the lapse of a statutory period, (3) an intention to abandon, (4) a lack of consent from the abandoned spouse, and (5) a lack of spousal misconduct that might justify the abandonment. — Also termed gross neglect of duty. Cf. abandonment. [Cases: Armed Services 38; Divorce 37; Military Justice 661.] — desert, vb.

constructive desertion. (1894) One spouse's misconduct that forces the other spouse to leave the marital abode. • The actions of the offending spouse must be serious enough that the spouse who is forced from the home finds the continuation of the marriage to be unendurable or dangerous to his or her safety and well-being, and finds it necessary to seek safety outside the marital domicile. — Also termed constructive abandonment. [Cases: Divorce 28, 37(22).]

criminal desertion. (18c) One spouse's willful failure without just cause to provide for the care, protection, or support of the other spouse who is in ill health or needy circumstances. [Cases: Husband and Wife 302, 304.]

obstinate desertion. Desertion by a spouse who persistently refuses to return to the marital home, so that the other spouse has grounds for divorce. • Before the advent of no-fault divorce, this term was commonly used in divorce statutes. The term was often part of the longer phrase willful, continued, and obstinate desertion. [Cases: Divorce 37(15).]

willful, continued, and obstinate desertion. See obstinate desertion.

design, n. (16c) 1. A plan or scheme. 2. Purpose or intention combined with a plan.

formed design. Criminal Law. The deliberate and fixed intention to kill, though not necessarily a particular person. See premeditation. [Cases: Homicide 353.]

3. The pattern or configuration of elements in something, such as a work of art. 4. Patents. The drawing or the depiction of an original plan for a novel pattern, model, shape, or configuration that is chiefly decorative or ornamental. • If it meets other criteria, a design may also be protectable as a trademark. — design, vb.

design around, vb. Patents. To make something that performs the same function or has the same physical properties as (a patented product or process) but in a way different enough from the original that it does not infringe the patent. Cf. doctrine of equivalents. [Cases: Patents 237.]

destructibility, n. (18c) The capability of being destroyed by some action, turn of events, or operation of law. — destructible, adj.
destructibility of contingent remainders. (1918) Property. The common-law doctrine requiring a future interest to vest by the time it is to become possessory or else be totally destroyed, the interest then reverting to the grantor. The doctrine could be avoided by the use of trustees to preserve contingent remainders. This doctrine has been abolished in all but a few American jurisdictions; the abolishing statutes are commonly termed anti-destructibility statutes. — Also termed destructibility rule. [Cases: Remainders C=10.]

The destructibility rule still exists in its old common-law form in Florida. Various authors have suggested that it also exists unchanged in Arkansas, North Carolina, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, and Tennessee; but there are no statutes or recent decisions to clarify the rule's status in these states. Thomas F. Bergin & Paul C. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 79 n.46 (2d ed. 1984).

destructible trust. See trust.

destruction. 1. The act of destroying or demolishing; the ruining of something. 2. Harm that substantially detracts from the value of property, esp. personal property. 3. The state of having been destroyed.

desuetude (des-wa-t[y]ood). (15c) I. Lack of use; obsolescence through disuse. 2. The doctrine holding that if a statute or treaty is left unenforced long enough, the courts will no longer regard it as having any legal effect even though it has not been repealed. [Cases: Statutes C=73.]

"[The doctrine of desuetude has had in all legal systems a very limited and cautious application. For the anachronistic statute a better remedy may be found through reinterpretation in the light of new conditions; as Gray remarks with some irony, 'It is not as speedy or as simple a process to interpret a statute out of existence as to repeal it, but with time and patient skill it can often be done.'"

"There is no doctrine of desuetude in English law, so a statute never ceases to be in force merely because it is obsolete. Normally there must be an express repeal, but the whole or part of an enactment may be impliedly repealed by a later statute." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 3 (1976).

de superoneratione pasturae (dee soo-pa-roh-na-ray-shee-oh-nee pas-tya-ree). n. [Law Latin] "of surcharge of pasture" Hist. A judicial writ against a person who was initially brought into county court for putting too much cattle on pasture, and later was impleaded in the same court on the same charge, and the cause was removed to the superior court at Westminster.

This was a subject covered under Roman exhibitory interdicts governing the production of documents. A will of a deceased person had to be produced and opened to determine whether the applicant had rights under it.

2. The confinement of a person in custody. 3. A writ authorizing a prison official to continue holding a prisoner in custody. [Cases: Extradition and Detainees C=52.] 4. A person who detains someone or something.

de tallagio non concedendo (dee ta-lay-jee-oh non kon-sa-den-doh), n. [Law Latin "of not granting tallage"] Hist. The title of a statute declaring that no taxes will be imposed by the king or his heirs without the consent of the archbishops, bishops, earls, barons, knights, and other freemen of the realm. The statute has been used to support the constitutional doctrine disallowing taxation except by Parliament. 34 Edw. 1 st. 4.

detection. The act of discovering or revealing something that was hidden, esp. to solve a crime.

"There is a clear distinction between inducing a person to do an unlawful act and setting a trap to catch him in the execution of a criminal plan of his own conception. There is also a distinction between the terms 'detection' and 'entrapment,' as applied to the activities of law enforcement officers. Legitimate detection of crime occurs when officers test a suspected person by offering him an opportunity to transgress the law in such manner as is usual in the activity alleged to be unlawful. On the other hand, entrapment occurs when officers induce a person to violate the law when he would not otherwise do so." 21 Am. Jur. 2d Criminal Law §202 (1981).

de tempore cajus contrarium memoria hominum non existit (dee tem-po-ree k-yoo-ja kon-trahr ee-am mo-mor-ee-ca hom-nom non eg-zis-tit). [Latin] From time whereof the memory of man does not exist to the contrary. See legal memory.

detention, n. (15c) 1. The act or fact of holding a person in custody; confinement or compulsory delay. — detain, vb.

investigative detention. (1968) The holding of a suspect without formal arrest during the investigation of the suspect's participation in a crime. • Detention of this kind is constitutional only if probable cause exists. [Cases: Arrest C=63.5] pretrial detention. (1962) 1. The holding of a defendant before trial on criminal charges either because the established bail could not be posted or because release was denied. [Cases: Bail C=42.] 2. In a juvenile-delinquency case, the court's authority to hold in custody, from the initial hearing until the probable-cause hearing, any juvenile charged with an act that, if committed by an adult, would be a crime. • If the court finds that releasing the juvenile would create a serious risk that before the return date the juvenile might commit a criminal act, it may order the juvenile detained pending a probable-cause hearing. Juveniles do not have a constitutional right to bail. The Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of such statutes in Schall v. Martin, 467 U.S. 253, 104 S.Ct. 2403 (1984). — Also termed temporary detention. [Cases: Infants C=192.]

preventive detention. (1952) Confinement imposed usu. on a criminal defendant who has threatened to escape, poses a risk of harm, or has otherwise violated the law while awaiting trial, or on a mentally ill person who may cause harm.

secret detention. The holding of a suspect in an undisclosed place, without formal charges, a legal hearing, or access to legal counsel, and without the knowledge of anyone other than the detaining authority. See secret detainee under DETAINEE.

initial determination. The first determination made by the Social Security Administration of a person's eligibility for benefits. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare C=8.5, 142.15, 175.25.]

2. The ending or expiration of an estate or interest in property, or of a right, power, or authority <the estate's determination after four years>. — determine, vb.

determination letter. (1929) A letter issued by the Internal Revenue Service in response to a taxpayer's request, giving an opinion about the tax significance of a transaction, such as whether a nonprofit corporation is entitled to tax-exempt status. — Also termed ruling letter. [Cases: Internal Revenue C=3049.]

determinative judgment. See final judgment under JUDGMENT.

determinism. (sometimes cap.) A philosophy that human behavior is governed primarily by preexisting conditions, such as family or environmental factors, and is not influenced by will. — deterministic, adj.

de termino moto (dee tar-ma-oh moh-toh). [Law Latin] Hist. The common-law offense of moving or defacing landmarks. • This was considered a serious crime because of the importance that agrarian laws attached to landmarks.

deterrence, n. (1861) The act or process of discouraging certain behavior, particularly by fear; esp., as a goal of criminal law, the prevention of criminal behavior by fear of punishment. Cf. REHABILITATION (1); RETRIBUTION (1). [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment C=41.] — deter, vb. — deterrent, adj.

general deterrence. (1949) A goal of criminal law generally, or of a specific conviction and sentence, to discourage people from committing crimes.

special deterrence. (1955) A goal of a specific conviction and sentence to dissuade the offender from committing crimes in the future.
deterrent, n. (1824) Something that impedes; something that prevents .

deterrent danger. See DANGER.

deterrent punishament. See PUNISHMENT.

del theolonio (dee thee-a-loh-ne-oh), n. [Law Latin “of toll”] Hist. A writ of trespass available to a person prevented from taking toll. See TOLL.

de tigno juncto (dee tig-noh jagnk-toh). See actio de tigno juncto under ACTIO.

detinet (det-i-net). [Latin “he detains”] A holding back; detention. • An action in debt may be in detinet when the plaintiff alleges that the defendant wrongfully kept goods, as distinguished from wrongly taking them. An action in debt may also be in detinet when it is brought by or against someone other than an original party to the debt, such as an executor. An action of replevin is in detinet when the defendant retains possession of the property until after the judgment. Cf. DEBET ET DETINET.

detinue (det-i-nyoo or -nno). (15c) A common-law action to recover personal property wrongfully taken or withheld by another. Cf. REPLEVIN; TROVER. [Cases: Detinue \(\leq 1.\)]

“A claim in detinue lies at the suit of a person who has an immediate right to the possession of the goods against a person who is in actual possession of them, and who, upon proper demand, fails or refuses to deliver them up by lawful excuse. Detinue at the present day has two main uses. In the first place, the plaintiff may desire the specific restitution of his chattels and not damages for their conversion. He will then sue in detinue, not in trover. In the second place, the plaintiff will have to sue in detinue if the defendant sets up no claim of ownership and has not been guilty of trespass; for the original acquisition in detinue sur bailment was lawful.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 111 (17th ed. 1977).

detinue of goods in frankmarriage. Hist. A writ allowing a divorced wife to obtain the goods given to her during the marriage.

detinue sur bailment (det-i-nyoo sar bayl-mant) [Law French] Hist. An action to recover property that the defendant acquired by bailment but refuses to return.

detinuit (di-tin-yoo-it). [Latin “he has detained”] (Of property) the former condition of being withheld. • An action is said to be in the detinuit when the plaintiff finally recovers possession of the property claimed under a writ of replevin.

detour, n. Torts. An employee’s minor deviation from the employer’s business for personal reasons. • Because a detour falls within the scope of employment, the employer is still vicariously liable for the employee’s actions. Cf. FROIC. [Cases: Labor and Employment \(\leq 3061\); Workers’ Compensation \(\leq 666\).]

detournement (di-tuurn-mant), n. An employee’s misappropriation of the employer’s funds.

detraction, n. (14c) The removal of personal property from one state to another after transfer of title by a will or inheritance.

detrangement (di-tuurn-mant), n. An employee’s misappropriation of the employer’s funds.

de transgressione (dee trans-gresh-ee-oh-nee), n. [Law Latin “of trespass”] The general name of various writs of trespass. See TREPASS.

de transgressione, ad audiendum et terminandum (dee trans-gresh-ee-oh-nee, ad aw-dee-en-dam et tor-min-an-dom), n. [Law Latin “of trespass, for determining and hearing a misdemeanor”] Hist. A commissioner, for hearing and determining an outrage or misdemeanor.

detriment. (15c) 1. Any loss or harm suffered by a person or property. 2. Contracts. The relinquishment of some legal right that a promisee would have otherwise been entitled to exercise. — Also termed legal detriment. Cf. BENEFIT (2).

“A promise or an act may be a detriment although on balance the promisor is making a good bargain. Thus a promise to pay £10,000 for a Rolls Royce worth £12,000, is none the less a detriment, and a good consideration for a promise to deliver the car.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 101 (3d ed. 1981).

detriment to a promisee. Contracts. Consideration offered by a promisee to a promisor, esp. in a unilateral contract. [Cases: Contracts \(\leq 52\).]

detrimental reliance. See RELIANCE.

detunicari (di-tyoo-ni-kair-I), vb. [Latin “to be revealed”] To discover; to lay open.

de una parte (dee yoo na pahr-tee), n. [Latin] Of one party. • A deed is de una parte when only one party grants something to another, as distinguished from a deed inter partes. See INTER PARTES.

deuterogamy (di-yoo-tor-og-a-mee), n. [fr. Greek deu­terogamia”second marriage”] A second marriage after the death of or divorce from the first spouse, or after an annulment of a first marriage. — Also termed digama; digamy.

de uxore rapt et abducta (dee ak-sor-ee rap-ta et ab-dak-ta), n. [Law Latin “of seizing and carrying away a man’s wife”] Hist. A writ of trespass for a man whose wife had been raped and carried away.

devaluation, n. The reduction in the value of one currency in relation to another currency. Cf. REVALUE­ATION. — devalue, vb.

devastation. (17c) 1. An executor’s squandering or mismanagement of the deceased’s estate. 2. An act of destruction. 3. WASTE (1).

devastaverunt (di-vas-to-veer-ant), [Latin pl. of dev­astavit “he (or she) has wasted”] They have wasted. • This word usu. referred to both an executor’s waste of a decedent’s property and the action against the executor for that waste.

devastavit (dev-a-stay-vit), n. [Latin “he (or she) has wasted”] A fiduciary’s failure to administer an estate or trust promptly and properly, esp. by spending extravagantly or misapplying assets. • A fiduciary who commits waste in this way becomes personally liable to those having claims on the assets, such as creditors and beneficiaries.

de vasto (dee vas-toh), n. [Law Latin “of waste”] A writ allowing a reversioner or remainderman to compel a tenant for life or for years to appear and answer for the waste and resulting damage to the plaintiff’s inheritance. See waste (1). development. (1885) 1. A substantial human-created developing country. See COMPANY.

developed country. Int’l law. A country that is not as economically or politically advanced as the main industrial powers. • Developing countries are located mostly in Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, the Middle East, and Latin and South America. — Also termed developing state; underdeveloped country; less-developed country; Third World country.

development. (1885) 1. A substantial human-created change to improve or unimproved real estate, including the construction of buildings or other structures. 2. An activity, action, or alteration that changes undeveloped property into developed property.

de ventre inspiciendo (dee ven-tree in-spish-ee-en-doh), n. [Law Latin “in the belly”] Hist. 1. A writ allowing a presumptive heir to summon a jury of matrons to verify the pregnancy of a widow to examine whether she be with child, or not . . . and, if the widow be upon due examination found not pregnant, any issue she may afterwards produce, though within nine months, will be bastard.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 444 (1765).

2. A writ providing a temporary stay of execution if a jury of matrons determines that a woman scheduled for execution and claiming pregnancy is “quick with child.” • The execution would be postponed until after the birth, but if the woman became pregnant a second time before execution, she had no remedy. — Sometimes shortened to ventre inspiciendo. — Also spelled de ventre in spiciendo.

devest (di-vest), vb. 1. Hist. To deprive (a person) of possession, title, or property. 2. To take; to draw away. — Also spelled divest.

deviance, n. (1941) The quality or state of departing from established norms, esp. in social customs. — deviate (dee-vee-at), vb. — deviant, adj. & n. — deviate (dee-vee-at), n.

deviation. 1. Generally, a change from a customary or agreed-on course of action. 2. Employment law. A departure from one’s course of employment to tend to a personal matter. • A deviation from the course of employment may be an issue in disputes about workers’ compensation or about the employer’s tort liability to third parties based on the employee’s actions. See COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT. Cf. FROLIC. [Cases: Labor and Employment C=3047; Workers’ Compensation C=666.] 3. Insurance. A departure by an insured party from a routine course of action, resulting in increased risk of some loss that the insured is indemnified against. [Cases: Insurance C=3059.] 4. Maritime law. A departure from the terms expressed in a bill of lading or other transportation contract.

“For both geographic deviations and quasi-deviations, the contractual voyage is the benchmark against which the carrier’s performance is to be measured. If the parties agreed to an indirect route, the carrier commits no deviation in following it; if the parties agreed to deck carriage, the carrier may stow the cargo on deck. All deviations “have one common, indispensable element — a violation of the terms of the bill of lading.” Michael F. Sturley, “Deviation Defined,” in 2A Benedict on Admiralty 122 (7th rev. ed. 2002) (quoting Rockwell Int’l Corp. v. M/V Incorruptible Spirit, 707 F. Supp. 272, 273 (S.D. Tex. 1989), aff’d, 998 F.2d 316 (5th Cir. 1993)). [Cases: Shipping C=125.] quasi-deviation. A deviation from an agreed-on shipping term other than a deviation in course or destination (e.g., an unreasonable delay or the unauthorized carriage of cargo on deck). [Cases: Shipping C=125.]

reasonable deviation. A deviation that is justified by circumstances. • If a deviation is reasonable, the carrier does not lose its usual limitations and exemptions under the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act. [Cases: Shipping C=125, 138.]

unreasonable deviation. A deviation that is not justified by circumstances. • An unreasonable deviation causes the carrier to lose the benefit of its usual limitations and exemptions under the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act. [Cases: Shipping C=125, 138.]

deviation doctrine. (1948) 1. A principle allowing variation from a term of a will or trust to avoid defeating the document’s purpose. 2. A principle allowing an agent’s activity to vary slightly from the scope of the principal’s permission. 3. Maritime law. The rule that a carrier loses the benefit of its limitations and exemptions under the Carriage of Goods by Sea Act if a deviation from the terms of the bill of lading is unreasonable, but does not if it is reasonable. [Cases: Shipping ☐ 138.]

deviation-well survey. An examination to determine whether a well is bottomed under another person's land.

device. (14c) 1. Patents. A mechanical invention, as differentiated in patent law from a chemical discovery. • A device may be an apparatus or an article of manufacture. — Also termed machine. [Cases: Patents ☐ 11.] 2. A scheme to trick or deceive; a stratagem or artifice, as in the law relating to fraud. [Cases: Fraud ☐ 3.]

de vicineto (dee vi-sin-ə-toh or -st-na-toh). [Law Latin] From a vicinage; from a neighborhood. • This term was generally used in reference to a jury pool. See De Corpore Comitatus.

devicineto amovenda (dee vi lay-ə-ka ay-moh-ven-do), n. [Law Latin "of removing a lay force"] Hist. A writ allowing a parson claiming rights to a church to order a sheriff to remove a group of laymen who, with another parson, had taken control of the church and prevented the new parson from entering.

devilling (dev-ə-līng). 1. The act of a barrister's handing a brief over to another to handle a case. 2. The practice of a junior barrister (known as a "devil") who drafts pleadings or other documents for a senior barrister who approves them, signs them, and is ultimately responsible for the work. — Also spelled devilling.

devil on the neck. Hist. A torture device made of irons that fastened to a person's neck and legs and then wrenched together to either gradually or quickly break the person's back. • It was often used to coerce confessions.

devisable, adj. (16c) 1. Capable of being bequeathed by a will. 2. Capable of being invented. 3. Feigned.

devisavit vel non (dev-ə-say-vit [or -zay-vit] vel non), n. [Law Latin "he (or she) devises or not"] Hist. An issue directed from a chancery court to a court of law to determine the validity of a will that has been contested, as by an allegation of fraud or testamentary incapacity. See Vel Non.

devise (di-viz), n. (15c) 1. The act of giving property by will. • Although this term traditionally referred to gifts of real property — and in British usage the term is still confined to real property — in American usage the term has been considerably broadened. In both the Restatement of Property and the Uniform Probate Code, a disposition of any property by will is a devise. In the United States today, it is pedantry to insist that the noun devise be restricted to real property. [Cases: Wills ☐ 1.] 2. The provision in a will containing such a gift. 3. Property disposed of in a will. 4. A will disposing of property. Cf. testament (1); bequest; legacy. — devise, vb.

alternative devise. A devise that, under the terms of the will, is designed to displace another devise if one or more specified events occur. — Also termed secondary devise. [Cases: Wills ☐ 553, 856.] conditional devise. (18c) A devise that depends on the occurrence of some uncertain event. [Cases: Wills ☐ 639–668.]

demonstrative devise. A devise, usu. of a specific amount of money or quantity of property, that is primarily payable from a designated source, but that may be payable from the estate's general assets if the designated property is insufficient. See Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 5.1 (1999). Cf. pecuniary devise. [Cases: Wills ☐ 751, 755.]

executory devise. (17c) An interest in land, created by will, that takes effect in the future and depends on a future contingency; a limitation, by will, of a future estate or interest in land when the limitation cannot, consistently with legal rules, take effect as a remainder. • An executory devise, which is a type of conditional limitation, differs from a remainder in three ways: (1) it needs no particular estate to support it, (2) with it a fee simple or lesser estate can be limited after a fee simple, and (3) with it a remainder can be limited in a chattel interest after a particular estate for life is created in that interest. See conditional limitation under limitation. [Cases: Wills ☐ 7.]

The reason of the institution of the executory devise was to support the will of the testator, for when it was evident that he intended a contingent remainder, and when it could not operate as such by the rules of law, the limitation was then, out of indulgence to wills, held to be good as an executory devise. They are not mere possibilities, but certain and substantial interests and estates, and are put under such restraints only as have been deemed requisite to prevent the miscarriages of perpetuities, or the existence of estates that were unalienable.” 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law 264 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

failed devise. See lapsed devise.

general devise. (18c) 1. A devise, usu. of a specific amount of money or quantity of property, that is payable from the estate's general assets. See Restatement (Third) of Property: Wills and Other Donative Transfers § 5.1 (1999). 2. A devise that passes the testator's lands without specifically enumerating or describing them. [Cases: Wills ☐ 583.]

lapsed devise. (18c) A devise that fails because the testator outlives the named recipient. — Also termed failed devise; failed gift.

pecuniary devise. A demonstrative devise consisting of money. Cf. demonstrative devise. [Cases: Wills ☐ 750.]

primary devise. A devise to the first person named as taker. • For example, a devise of "Blackacre to A, but if A does not survive me then to B" names A as the recipient of the primary devise and B as the recipient of the secondary or alternative devise. residuary devise. (18c) A devise of the remainder of the testator's property left after other specific devises are taken. [Cases: Wills 751.]

devise. vb. To give (property) by will. [Cases: Wills 751.]

"The modern convention which sets apart 'devise' for 'realty' and 'bequeath' for 'personalty' is modern; in the middle ages, the English word . . . is the equivalent of the French word." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 338 (2d ed. 1899).

devaee (dev-a-zee or di-vi-zee). (16c) A recipient of property by will. Cf. legatee.

first devisee. The first devisee designated to receive an estate under a will.

next devisee. The devisee who receives the remainder of an estate in tail, as distinguished from the first devisee. See fee tail. [Cases: Wills 751.]

residuary devisee. The person named in a will to receive the testator's remaining property after the other devises are distributed.

deviser. (16c) One who invents or contrives <the deviser of these patents>.

devisor. (16c) One who disposes of property (usu. real property) in a will. [Cases: Wills 751.]

devoir (da-vwaahr or dev-waahr). Hist. A duty; a tax. — Also spelled devoire.

"Devoir is as much as to say a duty. It is used in the statute of 2 R. 2, cap. 3, where it is provided, that all the western merchants, being of the king's amity, shall pay all manner of customs and subsidies, and other devoire of Calais." Terms de la Ley 168 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

devolution (dev-a-loo-shan), n. (16c) The act or an instance of transferring one's rights, duties, or powers to another; the passing of such rights, duties, or powers by transfer or succession <the federal government's devolution of police power to the states>.

devolutionary, adj. — devolutionist, n.

devolutive appeal. See appeal.

devolve (di-vahlv), vb. (16c) 1. To transfer (rights, duties, or powers) to another. 2. To pass (rights, duties, or powers) by transmission or succession. See devolution.

devy (da-vi), vb. [Law French] To die.

de warranty chartae (dee wa-ran-shy-uh kahr-tee), n. [Law Latin "of a warranty of charter"] Hist. A writ allowing a tenant enfeoffed with a warranty, who was impleaded in an assize or other action in which the tenant could not call upon the warranty, to compel the feoffor to assist the tenant with a plea or defense, or else to pay damages and the value of the land, if it is recovered against the tenant.

"This we still make use of in the form of common recoveries, which are grounded on a writ of entry; a species of action that we may remember relies chiefly on the weakness of the tenant's title, who therefore vouches another person to warrant it . . . . In assises indeed, where the principal question is whether the demandant or his ancestors were or were not in possession till the ouster happened, and the title of the tenant is little (if at all) discussed, there no voucher is allowed; but the tenant may bring a writ of warranta chartae against the warrantor, to compel him to assist him with a good plea or defence, or else to render damages and the value of the land, if recovered against the tenant." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 299 (1768).

de warranty diei (dee wa-ran-shy-uh di-ee-i), n. [Law Latin "of warranty of day"] Hist. A writ ordering a judge not to default a party for nonappearance because the Crown warranted that the party was busy in its service.

dextrarius (dek-strair-e-ee-as). Hist. One at the right hand of another.

dextras dare (dek-stras dair-ee), vb. [Latin "to give right hands"] 1. To shake hands to show friendship. 2. To give oneself up to the power of another.

diaconate (di-ak-o-nit), n. [Law Latin] A deacon's office.

diagnosis (di-ag-noh-sis). (17c) 1. The determination of a medical condition (such as a disease) by physical examination or by study of its symptoms. 2. The result of such an examination or study. Cf. prognosis.

clinical diagnosis. A diagnosis from a study of symptoms only.

physical diagnosis. A diagnosis from a study of symptoms only.

diagnostic commitment. See commitment.

dialectic (di-a-lek-tik), n. (16c) 1. A school of logic that teaches critical examination of the truth of an opinion, esp. by discussion or debate. • The method was applied by ancient philosophers, such as Plato and Socrates, primarily in the context of conversational discussions involving questions and answers, and also by more modern philosophers, such as Immanuel Kant, who viewed it as a theory of fallacies, and G.W.F. Hegel, who applied the term to his philosophy proceeding from thesis, to antithesis, to synthesis. 2. An argument made by critically examining logical consequences. 3.
A logical debate. 4. A disputant; a debater. Pl. dialectics.

diallage (di-al-aj-lee). n. [fr. Greek diallage "interchange"]
A rhetorical figure of speech in which arguments are placed in several points of view, and then brought to bear on one point.

Dialogus de Scaccario (di-al-o-gas de kair-ee-oh). n. [Law Latin "a dialogue of or about the Exchequer"] Hist. A treatise, written during the reign of Henry II, on the Court of Exchequer, set up in imaginary dialogue form between a master and a disciple. • Although some originally attributed the work to Gervase of Tilbury, it was probably written by Richard Fitz Nigel, the bishop of London under Richard I, and the former Treasurer of the Exchequer.

"The Dialogus de Scaccario is an anonymous book, but there can be little doubt that we are right in ascribing it to Richard Fitz Neal: that is to say, to Richard the son of that Nigel, bishop of Ely. ... The book stands out as an unique book in the history of mediæval England, perhaps in the history of mediæval Europe. A high officer of state, the trusted counsellor of a powerful king, undertakes to explain to all whom it may concern the machinery of government. He will not deal in generalities, he will condescend to minute details. Perhaps the book was not meant for the general public so much as for the numerous clerks who were learning their business in the exchequer, but still that such a book should be written, is one of the wonderful things of Henry's wonderful reign." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 161-62 (2d ed. 1898).

dianoetic (di-a-no-et-ik). n. [Greek diaanetikos, fr. dia- "through" + noein "to revolve in the mind"] Archaic.
A form of logical reasoning that proceeds from one subject to another. — Also termed (erroneously) dianatic.

diarhy. See DYARCHY.

diary (di-air-ee-am). n. [fr. Latin dies "day"] Roman law. An allowance (usu. of food) needed for a day; a daily allowance of food or pay. Pl. diaries (di-air-ee-ahs).

diastim (di-ay-tam). [fr. Latin dies "day"] Every day; daily.

dicast (di-kast or dik-ast). n. [Greek dikastes] Hist. An ancient Greek officer sitting as both judge and juror. • Each dicast was generally a free citizen over the age of 30. The dicasts sat together in groups of between 100 to 500, according to each case's importance, and decided cases by a majority.

dicis causa (di-sis kaw-zo). [Lat.] Roman law. For form's sake; on the surface. •The phrase appeared in reference to transactions completed in a certain form to conceal their true purpose.

dictate, vb. 1. To pronounce orally for transcription. 2. To order; to command authoritatively.

dictation. 1. The act of speaking words to be transcribed. 2. The words so transcribed.

dictator. 1. Roman law. An absolute ruler appointed in an emergency for a term of six months and subject to reappointment.

"In special emergencies, particularly in times of grave crisis, either consul might appoint a dictator who exercised supreme authority, but not beyond six months, unless reappointed. This was, in effect, a temporary reversion to monarchy." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 14 (4th ed. 1956).

2. A person, esp. a ruler, with absolute authority.

dictum (di-tam). n.(16c) 1. A statement of opinion or belief considered authoritative because of the dignity of the person making it. 2. A familiar rule; a maxim. 3. Obiter dictum. Pl. dicta. [Cases: Courts C-92.]

"As a dictum is by definition no part of the doctrine of the decision, and as the citing of it as a part of the doctrine is almost certain to bring upon a brief maker adverse comment, lawyers are accustomed to speak of a dictum rather slightly, and sometimes they go so far as to intimate a belief that the pronouncing of a dictum is the doing of a wrong. Yet it must not be forgotten that dicta are frequently, and indeed usually, correct, and that to give an occasional illustration, or to say that the doctrine of the case would not apply to some case of an hypothetical nature, or to trace the history of a doctrine, even though it be conceded, as it must, that such passages are not essential to the deciding of the very case, is often extremely useful to the profession." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 307 (3d ed. 1914).

dictum proprium (di-tam proh-pree-am). A personal or individual dictum that is given by the judge who delivers an opinion but that is not necessarily concurred in by the whole court and is not essential to the disposition of the case. — Also termed (loosely) dictum propria.

gratia dictum (gray-tis dik-tam). 1. A voluntary statement; an assertion that a person makes without being obligated to do so. 2. A court's stating of a legal principle more broadly than is necessary to decide the case. 3. A court's discussion of points or questions not raised by the record or its suggestion of rules not applicable in the case at bar.

judicial dictum. An opinion by a court on a question that is directly involved, briefed, and argued by counsel, and even passed on by the court, but that is not essential to the decision. Cf. OBITER DICTUM.

obiter dictum. See OBITER DICTUM.

simplic dictum (sim-pleks dik-tam). An unproved or dogmatic statement. See IPSE DIXIT.

dictum de Kenilworth (di-tam de ken-al-wirth). n. [Law Latin "edict of Kenilworth"] Hist. A declaration of an agreement between Edward I and the barons who had opposed him under the leadership of Simon de Montfort. • The agreement, which concerned rent on the lands forfeited in the rebellion, was so called because it was made at Kenilworth castle in Warwickshire in A.D. 1266. It was published in the Statutes of the Realm and 52 Hen. 3.

dictum page. See pinpoint citation under CITATION (3).

diei dictio (dī-ee-e dik-shee-oh). [Latin “appointing a day”] Roman law. 1. A magistrate’s notice summoning the accused to appear on a fixed day for trial. 2. The service of a summons. — Also written diei dictitio, diem dicere.

diem clausit extremum (dī-əm klaw-zit ek-stree-mō̄m), n. [Law Latin “he closed his last day”] Hist. 1. A chancery writ, founded on the statute of Marlbury, ordering the county escheator, after the death of a chief tenant of the Crown, to summon a jury to determine the amount and value of land owned by the chief tenant, to determine the next heir, and to reclaim the property for the Crown. • It was a type of inquisition post mortem.

“Diem clausit extremum is a writ that lies where the king’s tenant that holds in chief, dies; then this writ shall be directed to the escheator, to inquire of what estate he was seised, who is next heir, and his age, and of the certainty and value of the land, and of whom it is held; and the inquisition shall be returned into the chancery, which is commonly called the office after the death of that person.” Termes de la Ley 169 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

2. An Exchequer writ ordering a sheriff to summon a jury to investigate a Crown debtor’s place of death and amount of property owned, and to levy the property of the deceased’s heirs and executors. • It was repealed by the Crown Proceedings Act of 1947.

“And there is another writ of diem clausit extremum awarded out of the exchequer, after the death of an accomptant or debtor of his majesty, to levy the debt of his heir, executor, administrator’s lands or goods.” Termes de la Ley 169 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

dies ad quem (dī-eez ad kwem), n. [Latin “the day to which”] Civil law. An ending date for a transaction; the ending date for computing time, such as the day on which interest no longer accrues.

dies amoris (dī-eez a-mor-is), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A day of favor; esp., a day set by the court for the defendant to make an appearance. • This was usu. the fourth day of the term, which was the first day the court normally sat for business. In addition, the defendant usu. had three days of grace from the summons to appear, but an appearance on the fourth day quarto die post (“on the fourth day thereafter”) was usu. sufficient.

dies a quo (dī-eez ay kwoh), n. [Latin “the day from which”] Civil law. A transaction’s commencement date; the date from which to compute time, such as a day when interest begins to accrue. La. Civ. Code art. 1784.

dies cedit (dī-eez see-dit). [Latin “the time begins to run”] Roman & Scots law. The day on which an interest, esp. a legacy, vests; the day on which a conditional obligation becomes due. • An interest usu., but not always, vested on the day of the testator’s death. — Also termed dies cedens. Cf. dies venit.

“A legacy was due, or became a valid right, either at the death of the testator or the occurrence of a condition precedent. This vesting of the property or the accruing of an obligation determined the content and nature of the interests involved. What the legatary got was discovered by examining what the legacy actually carried with it on the day when it became vested. To express the fact that the legacy had become vested, the technical expression dies cedit was used.” Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 434–35 (1927).

dies comitiales (dī-eez ko-mish-ee-ay-leez). [Latin] Roman law. The 190 days in the year when an election could be held or the people could assemble as a legislative body. • The praetors could not hold court while a legislative assembly was in session.

dies communes in banco (dī-eez kə-myoo-nee ez in bang-koh), n. [Law Latin “common days before the bench”] 1. Regular appearance dates in court. — Also termed common-return days. 2. An enactment printed under the Statutes of Henry III, regulating continuances and writ return dates.

dies datus (dī-eez day-tas), n. [Law Latin “a given day”] A continuance, esp. for a defendant before a declaration is filed; a time of respite in a case. • A continuance granted after the filing of the declaration is called an imparlance. See Imparlance.

dies datus in banco (dī-eez day-tas in bang-kohl), n. [Law Latin “a day given to the parties”] A continuance; an adjournment.

dies datus partibus (dī-eez day-tas pahr-ta-bas), n. [Law Latin “a day given to the parties”] A continuance granted after the filing of the declaration is called an imparlance. See Imparlance.

dies datus prece partium (dī-eez day-tas pree-see pahr-shee-am), n. [Law Latin “a day given at the prayer of the parties”] A day given at the parties’ request.

dies Dominicus (dī-eez do-min-i-kas), n. [Latin] The Lord’s day; Sunday.

dies excrescens (dī-eez ek-skree-sanz), n. [Law Latin “the increasing day”] The additional day in a leap year.

dies fasti (dī-eez fas-ti). [Latin] Roman law. A day when justice could be administered; a day when the praetor could officially pronounce the three words “do,” “dico,” and “addico.” — Also called trivertial days. Cf. nefastus.

dies feriati (dī-eez fer-ee-ay-ti), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. A holiday; holidays.

dies gratiae (dī-eez gray-shee-e), n. [fr. Law French jour de grace] Hist. A day of grace, usu. granted to the plaintiff.

dies in banco. See Days in Bank.

dies intercissi (dī-eez in tər-si-tə). [Latin “divided days”] Roman law. A day when the courts were open for only part of the day.

dies juridicus (dī-eez juu-rid-i-kas), n. [Latin] A day when justice can be administered. • This term was derived from the civil-law term dies fasti. See dies fasti. diet. 1. A esp. of food. 2. including levying taxes, enacting laws, and declaring dies votorum (di-eez voh-tor-am), n. [Latin “a day of vows”] A wedding day.

diet. A day to perform a duty, such as a court sitting day, an appearance day, and a criminal pleading or trial day. — Also spelled dyet.

“In procedure on indictment there are two diets, the pleading diet, when the accused is called to plead, and the trial diet when, if he has pled not guilty, he is tried.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 357 (1980).

dies marchiae (di-eez mahr-kee-ee), n. [Law Latin “a day of the march”] Hist. In the reign of Richard II, the annual day set aside for the wardens of the English and Scottish borders to hold peace talks and resolve differences.

dies nefasti (di-eez nee-fas-ee), n. 1. NEFASTUS (2). 2. See dies non juridicus.
dies non (di-eez non). See dies non juridicus.

dies non juridicus (di-eez non juu-rid-i-ko-ee), n. [Law Latin “a day not juridical”] A day exempt from court proceedings, such as a holiday or a Sunday. — Often shortened to dies non.

dies pacis (di-eez pays-is), n. [Law Latin “day of peace”]Hist. A day of peace. • The days were originally divided into two categories: dies pacis ecclesiae (“a day of the peace of the church”) and dies pacis regis (“a day of the Crown’s peace”).

dies religiosi (di-eez ri-lij-ee-oh-st), [Latin] Roman law. Religious days on which it was unlawful to transact legal or political business.

dies solaris (di-eez sa-lair-ee), n. [Latin “a solar day”] See solar day under DAY.

dies solis (di-eez soh-lis), [Latin “day of the sun”] Roman law. Sunday.

dies utiles (di-eez yoo-t<>-leez), [Latin “available days”] Romae law. A day when something can be legally done, such as an application to the praetor to claim legal or political business.

dies veniens (di-eez veen-ee), [Latin “the day has come”] Roman & Scots law. The date when an interest is both vested and actionable. • It is usu. the day when the heir accepts the inheritance and a legatee can claim payment of a legacy. — Also termed dies veniens. Cf. dies cedit.

"But the legacy, though vested, is not yet so completely the property of the legatee that he may bring an action for it. To express the fact that such a right of action accrues, the term dies veniens was used; in general, it may be said that dies veniens occurred when, and not until, the heres has actually entered upon the inheritance. But, of course, if the legacy was conditional, the heres may enter before the condition happens. In that case, dies veniens will occur simultaneously with dies cedens; i.e., the legacy will vest and the bequest become actionable at the same moment." Max Radin, Handbook of Roman Law 435 (1927).

dies voctorum (di-eez voh-tor-am), n. [Latin “a day of vows”] A wedding day.

di. et fi. (di et fi), abbr. DILECTO ET FIDELI.

Dieu et mon droit (dyuu ay mawn drwah). [French “God and my right”] The motto of the royal arms of England. • It was first used by Richard I and, with the exception of Elizabeth I, was continually used from Edward III to William III, who used the motto je maintiendrai. Queen Anne used Elizabeth I’s motto, semper eadem, but Dieu et mon droit has been used since her death.

difforciare (di-fay-sI-ree), vb. [Law Latin “to deny”]Hist. To deface; to mutilate. — Also termed disfacere; defacere.

different-department rule. A doctrine holding that people who work for the same employer are not fellow servants if they do not do the same work or do not work in the same department. • This rule, which creates an exception to the fellow-servant doctrine, has been rejected by many jurisdictions. See FELLOW-SERVANT DOCTRINE; fellow servant under servant. [Cases: Labor and Employment C-2921.]

differential pricing. (1946) The setting of the price of a product or service differently for different customers. See PRICE DISCRIMINATION.

diffused surface water. See WATER.

DIF system. See DISCRIMINANT FUNCTION.

digama (dig-a- MMA), See DEUROGAMY.

digamy (dig a-me), See DEUROGAMY.

digest, n. (14c) 1. An index of legal propositions showing which cases support each proposition; a collection of summaries of reported cases, arranged by subject and subdivided by jurisdiction and court. • The chief purpose of a digest is to make the contents of reports available and to group together those cases bearing on some specific point. The American Digest System covers the decisions of all American courts of last resort, state and federal, from 1658 to present. — Abbr. D.; Dig.

"An important and numerous class of books included in the general division designated as books of secondary authority is the group known by the generic name of ‘Digests.’ A Digest is essentially an index to Cases. But it is much more than an ordinary index, for it indicates the holdings and (in some, though not all, publications) the facts of each case. Any particular digest is a summary of the case law coming within its scope, and its units are summaries of particular points of particular cases. What the syllabi of a reported case are to that case, a digest is to many cases. Were a digest simply a collection of citations to cases, arranged logically according to the contents of such cases, it would be a search book; but, being a summary of the case law, it is a book of secondary authority." William M. Lile et al., Brief Making and the Use of Law Books 68 (3d ed. 1914).

2. Civil law. (cap.) A compilation and systematic statement of the various areas of law; chiefly, the Pandects of Justinian in 50 books, known as the Digest. — Also termed digesta; digests. See Pandect (2).

digital agenda. Copyright. A series of 10 proposed changes to copyright law announced by WIPO in 1999 and designed to protect intellectual-property rights on the Internet while promoting e-commerce. — Also termed WIPO digital agenda.

digital cash. See e-money under money.

digital certificate. A publicly available computer-based record that identifies the certifying authority and the subscriber who was issued a digital signature for electronically transmitted documents and that also provides the person’s public key for decrypting the digital signature. • Subscribers register with certification authorities to obtain digital signatures. Certificates may include additional information, including issuance and expiration dates, and recommended reliance limits for transactions relying on the certificate. The certificate also serves as an electronic notarization when attached to an electronic document by the sender.

digital fingerprinting. See steganography.

Digital Millennium Copyright Act. A 1998 federal law harmonizing United States copyright protection with international law, limiting copyright liability for Internet service providers, and expanding software owners’ ability to copy programs. • Among many other provisions, the statute extends copyright protection to computer programs, movies, and other audiovisual works worldwide; attempts to regulate cyberspace; forbids devices whose purpose is to evade digital antipiracy tools; and bars the production or distribution of falsified copyright-management information. 17 USC § 1201(a). — Abbr. DMCA. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C::> 34, 67.3.]} digital sampling. See sampling.

digital signature. See signature.

digital watermarking. See steganography.

dignitary, adj. Of or relating to one’s interest in personal dignity, as contrasted with one’s interest in freedom from physical injury and property damage. • Tort actions that compensate a plaintiff for a dignitary insult rather than physical injury or property damage include false-light privacy and negligent infliction of emotional distress.

dignitary, n. 1. A person who holds a high rank or honor. 2. Eccles. law. A person who, by virtue of holding a superior office stands above ordinary priests and canons.

dignitary tort. See tort.

dignity, n. 1. The state of being noble; the state of being dignified. 2. An elevated title or position. 3. A person holding an elevated title; a dignitary. 4. A right to hold a title of nobility, which may be hereditary or for life. “Dignities may be hereditary, such as peerages . . . or for life, such as life peerages and knighthoods. The dignities of peerages and baronetcies are created by writ or letters patent, that of knighthood by dubbing as knight. A dignity of inheritance may also exist by prescription. Dignities of inheritance are incorporeal hereditaments having been originally annexed to the possession of certain lands or created by a grant of those lands and are generally limited to the grantee and his heirs or his heirs of the body. If heirs are not mentioned, the grantee holds for life only. The heirs are determined by the rules which governed the descent of land prior to 1926.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 358 (1980).

dilapidation. (often pl.) Damage to a building resulting from acts of either commission or omission. • A dilapidation may give rise to liability if it constitutes an act of waste, a breach of contract, or a statutory violation. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C::> 55, 125, 154, 166.]

dilapidations, action for (di-lap-ah-day-shan). Hist. An action brought by a new incumbent of a benefice for damages rising from the disrepair of the houses or buildings on the benefice. • The incumbent — whether of a rectory, a vicarage, or a chapel — sued the executors or administrators of the incumbent’s deceased predecessor (who was not liable for the disrepairs while living). The incumbent of a benefice was bound to maintain the parsonage, farm buildings, and chancel in good and substantial repair, restoring and rebuilding when necessary, according to the original plan. But the incumbent did not have to supply or maintain anything in the nature of ornament.

dilatory (di-lah-tor-ee), adj. (15c) Tending to cause delay <the judge’s opinion criticized the lawyer’s persistent dilatory tactics>.

dilatory defense. See defense (1).

dilecto et fidei (di-lek-toh et fi-dee-ee). [Law Latin] To his beloved and faithful. • This phrase was used in various writings. — Abbr. dl. et fi.

diligence. (14c) 1. A continual effort to accomplish something. 2. Care; caution; the attention and care required from a person in a given situation. • The Roman-law equivalent is dilegentia. See DILEGENTIA.

"Care, or the absence of negligentia, is dilegentia. The use of the word diligence in this sense is obsolete in modern English, though it is still retained as an archaism of legal diction. In ordinary usage, diligence is opposed to idleness, diligence. 1. See due diligence (1). 2. See ordinary diligence.

due diligence. (18c) 1. The diligence reasonably expected from, and ordinarily exercised by, a person who seeks to satisfy a legal requirement or to discharge an obligation. — Also termed reasonable diligence; common diligence. 2. Corporations & securities. A prospective buyer's or broker's investigation and analysis of a target company, a piece of property, or a newly issued security. • A failure to exercise due diligence may sometimes result in liability, as when a broker recommends a security without first investigating it adequately. [Cases: Securities Regulation C=25.21(4), 25.62(2).] extraordinary diligence. Extreme care that a person of unusual prudence exercises to secure rights or property.
great diligence. The diligence that a very prudent person exercises in handling his or her own property like that at issue. — Also termed high diligence.
low diligence. See slight diligence. necessary diligence. The diligence that a person is required to exercise to be legally protected.
ordinary diligence. (18c) The diligence that a person of average prudence would exercise in handling his or her own property like that at issue. — Also termed common diligence. reasonable diligence. (18c) 1. A fair degree of diligence expected from someone of ordinary prudence under circumstances like those at issue. 2. See due diligence (1). slight diligence. (1836) The diligence that a person of less than common prudence takes with his or her own concerns. — Also termed low diligence. special diligence. The diligence expected from a person practicing in a particular field of specialty under circumstances like those at issue.
3. Patents. Speed and perseverance in perfecting an invention. • Diligence is one factor in deciding which of two or more independent inventors will be granted a patent: if the first inventor cannot prove reasonable diligence in reducing the invention to practice, a later inventor may take priority. [Cases: Patents C=90(3).] 4. Scots law. A court-issued warrant to compel something, such as the attendance of a witness or the enforcement of an unpaid judgment debt. 5. Scots law. Any legal process available to a creditor to seize a debtor's property to compel the debtor to answer an action for debt, to preserve the property as security for a judgment that the creditor may obtain, or to liquidate the property in satisfaction of a judgment already obtained. • Forms of diligence include adjudication, arrestment, inhibition, poining, and sequestration for rent. Until the mid-20th century, a debtor could also be imprisoned. The term diligence is also sometimes used to denote a warrant that may be granted to compel a witness's attendance or to compel production of documents. See execution (3).

generally diligence against the heritage. Scots law. A writ of execution allowing a creditor to proceed against a debtor's real property.
diligent, adj. Careful; attentive; persistent in doing something.
diligentia (dil-ə-jen-shee-ə). n. [Latin] Roman law. Carefulness; diligence. • The failure to exercise diligentia might make a person liable if contractually obliged to look after another's interests, or it might result in tort liability. See diligence. Cf. NEGLIGENTIA.

- The texts distinguish two standards of diligence, a higher and a lower. The higher is the diligence which the good father of a family habitually exhibits in his own affairs (diligentia exacta or exactissima — diligentia boni patris-familias). The lower is the diligence which the person in question exhibits in his own affairs (diligentia quam suis rebus). This may, in fact, reach a high degree of diligence or it may not. But, at least, where this standard is applied nothing extraordinary is expected. It is a concrete standard. It is enough that the person in question pursues his normal course. According to a traditional terminology, where the first standard is applied, there is said to be liability for culpa levis in abstracto — slight negligence in the abstract; in the second case there is liability for culpa levis in concreto — slight negligence in the concrete." R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 288 (4th ed. 1956).

diligentia media (dil-i-jen-shee-ə mee-dee-ə). [Law Latin] Scots law. Middle level of diligence; the level of diligence that a person of ordinary prudence exercises in his or her own affairs. — Also termed diligentia quam suis rebus (dil-ə-jen-shee-ə kwam s[i]y-oo-is ree-bas). See ordinary diligence under diligence.
diligentia quam suis rebus. See diligentia media.
diligent inquiry. A careful and good-faith probing to ascertain the truth of something.
Dillon's rule. The doctrine that a unit of local government may exercise only those powers that the state expressly grants to it, the powers necessarily and fairly implied from that grant, and the powers that are indispensable to the existence of the unit of local government. • For the origins of this rule, see 1 John F. Dillon, The Law of Municipal Corporations § 89, at 115 (3d ed. 1881). [Cases: Municipal Corporations C=57.]

A document that evidences a license or privilege to practice a profession, such as medicine.

diplomacy, n. Int’l law. 1. The art and practice of conducting negotiations between national governments. open diplomacy. Diplomacy carried on with free access to interested observers and members of the press. parliamentary diplomacy. The negotiations and discussions carried out in international organizations according to their rules of procedure. secret diplomacy. Diplomacy carried on behind closed doors. — Also termed quiet diplomacy. shuttle diplomacy. Diplomatic negotiations assisted by emissaries, who travel back and forth between negotiating countries. • In legal contexts, the term usu. refers to a similar approach used by a mediator in negotiating the settlement of a lawsuit. The mediator travels back and forth between different rooms, one of which is assigned to each side’s decision-makers and counsel. The mediator relays offers and demands between the rooms and, by conferring with the parties about their positions and about the uncertainty of litigation, seeks to reach an agreed resolution of the case. The mediator does not bring the parties together in the same room.

2. Loosely, foreign policy. 3. The collective functions performed by a diplomat. — diplomatic, adj. — diplomat, n.

diplomatic pouch. 1. A bag containing official correspondence, documents, or articles intended exclusively for official communications of a nation with its diplomatic protection. Protection given by one country's representatives to a person, usu. its citizen, against another country's alleged violation of international law.

"The term diplomatic protection is not altogether precise. First, not only diplomatic agents and missions and other foreign offices may and do exercise diplomatic protection, but also, at a different level, consuls, and, although very rarely, military forces. Secondly, the term diplomatic protection does not clearly denote the boundary line to other diplomatic activities for the benefit of individuals, such as mere promotion of interests in one's own nationals in a foreign State, or friendly intercessions with foreign authorities. Thus, diplomatic or consular actions to obtain concessions or other government contracts for nationals from the receiving State, or the arrangement of legal defense for a justly imprisoned national are not diplomatic protection in our sense; they are usually neither directed against the other State nor based on a real or alleged violation of international law. All these last-mentioned activities may be called diplomatic protection only if the term is taken in a very broad sense." William Karl Geck, "Diplomatic Protection," in 1 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 1046 (1992).

diplomatic relations. Int'l law. The customary form of permanent contact and communication between sovereign countries. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls C–3; International Law C–10–10.2.] diplomatic representation. See representation (5).

diplomatics. The science of deciphering and authenticating ancient writings. The principles were largely developed by the Benedictine Dom Mabillon in his 1681 work entitled De re diplomatica. — Also termed diplomatic (n.).

"Diplomatics, the science derived from the study of ancient diplomas, so called from being written on two leaves, or on double tablets. The Romans used the term more specially for the letters of license to use the public conveyances provided at the different stations, and generally for public grants. Subsequently it attained a more extended signification, and in more modern times has been used as a general term for ancient imperial and ecclesiastical acts and grants, public treaties, deeds of conveyance, letters, wills, and similar instruments, drawn up in forms and marked with peculiarities varying with their dates and countries. With the revival of literature, the importance of such documents in verifying facts and establishing public and ecclesiastical archives where the originals were still preserved. Then arose questions of authenticity, and doubts of the so-called originals: disputants defended or condemned them; and, in order to establish principles for distinguishing the genuine from the forged, treatises were written on the whole subject of these diplomas." 7 Encyclopaedia Britannica 223–24 (9th ed. 1907).

Directive Harmonizing the Term of Copyright and Certain Related Rights. Copyright. A 1993 European Commission initiative setting the term of most copyright protection at the life of the author plus 70 years. • The directive extended coverage in most member countries to match that of Germany, whose term was the longest on the Continent. In 2006, it was repealed. Its provisions were incorporated into the Directive on the Term of Protection of Copyright and Certain Related Rights. — Also termed Duration Directive.
Directive on Certain Aspects of Electronic Commerce in the Internal Market. Copyright. A 2000 European Commission initiative that harmonizes members' laws governing commercial use of the Internet, including electronic contracts, the liability of service providers, unsolicited commercial e-mail, and related issues. — Also termed Electronic Commerce Directive; E-Commerce Directive.
Directive on the Coordination of Certain Rules Concerning Copyright and Neighbouring Rights Applicable to Satellite Broadcasting and Cable Re-transmission. Copyright. A 1993 European Commission initiative requiring members among other things, to (1) recognize the right of a copyright owner to decide whether the work may be relayed by either cable or satellite, and (2) define the "place" of a satellite broadcast as the location where the signal originates. — Also termed Cable and Satellite Directive.
Directive on the Legal Protection of Computer Programs. Copyright. A 1991 European Commission initiative requiring members to protect computer software by copyright rather than by patent or some sui generis set of legal rights. • The purpose of the Directive was to harmonize copyright laws among the members of the European Commission. It standardized the degree of originality required for software to qualify for copyright protections. — Also termed Computer Programs Directive; Software Directive.
Directive on the Legal Protection of Databases. Copyright. A 1996 European Commission initiative that sets uniform copyright protection among members for databases of original content and requires a sui generis system of protection for databases that do not qualify for copyright protection because their content is not original. — Also termed Database Directive.

direct order of alienation. (1852) Real estate. The principle that a grantee who assumes the debt on a mortgaged property is required to pay the mortgage debt if the original mortgagor defaults. [Cases: Mortgages C-279.]

Director of Public Prosecutions. An officer (usu. a barrister or solicitor of ten years' standing) who advises the police and prosecutes criminal cases in England, Wales, and Northern Ireland under the supervision of the Attorney General. • This title, or a similar one, is used in various countries, including Australia, Canada, China, Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland, and South Africa. In Scotland, the equivalent officer is the procurator fiscal.

Director of the Mint. An officer appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to control and manage the U.S. Mint and its branches. [Cases: United States C-34.]

Director of the United States Patent and Trademark Office. The presidential appointee in charge of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. • Until a 2000 reorganization, the PTO chief was the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks. The Director is also the Under Secretary of Commerce for Intellectual Property. — Formerly termed Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks. [Cases: Patents C-111.]

directors' and officers' liability insurance. See INSURANCE.

directory, n. 1. A book containing an alphabetical list of names, addresses, and telephone numbers, esp. those of a city's or area's residents and businesses. [Cases: Telecommunications C-875.] 2. Any organization's publication containing information on its members or business, such as a legal directory. 3. Eccles. law. A church's book of directions for conducting worship. • One of the primary directories is the Directory for the Public Worship of God, prepared by the Assembly of Divines in England in 1644 to replace the Book of Common Prayer, which had been abolished by Parliament (and was later reinstated). The Directory was ratified by Parliament in 1645 and adopted by the Scottish Parliament and General Assembly of the Church of Scotland that same year. A directory in the Roman Catholic Church contains instructions for saying the Mass and offices each day of the year. 4. A small governing body; specif., the five-member executive body that governed France from 1795-1799 during the French Revolution until it was overthrown by Napoleon and succeeded by the consulate.

directory call. (1812) Property. In a land description, a general description of the areas in which landmarks or other calls are found. See CALL (5); LOCATIVE CALLS.

directory provision. A statutory or contractual sentence or paragraph in which a directory requirement appears. [Cases: Statutes C-227.]

directory requirement. (1865) A statutory or contractual instruction to act in a way that is advisable, but not absolutely essential — in contrast to a mandatory requirement. • A directory requirement is frequently introduced by the word should or, less frequently, shall (which is more typically a mandatory word). [Cases: Statutes C-227.]

dirt-for-debt transfer. A transaction in which a bankrupt debtor satisfies all or part of a secured debt by transferring the collateral to the creditor. [Cases: Bankruptcy C=3564.]

disability. (16c) 1. The inability to perform some function; esp., the inability of one person to alter a given relation with another person. 2. An objectively measurable condition of impairment, physical or mental <his disability entitled him to workers' compensation benefits>. — Also termed handicap; incapacity. [Cases: Civil Rights C=1019, 1218; Workers' Compensation C=802.]

"The Supreme Court has cautioned that [the Americans with Disabilities Act] requires that disabilities be evaluated 'with respect to an individual' and must be determined based on whether an impairment substantially limits the 'major life activities of such individual.' The Court conceded that 'some impairments may invariably cause a substantial limitation of a major life activity,' but '[t]he determination of whether an individual has a disability is not necessarily based on the name or diagnosis of the impairment the person has, but rather on the effect of that impairment on the life of the individual.' As a result, courts are reluctant to characterize any particular impairment as a per se disability under ADA. And the fact that an impairment is considered to be a disability under a different set of criteria for some purpose other than the ADA has no bearing on the determination of whether an individual is disabled within the meaning of ADA." Harold S. Lewis Jr. & Elizabeth J. Norman, Employment Discrimination Law and Practice 485-86 (2001).
developmental disability. (1973) An impairment of general intellectual functioning or adaptive behavior.

partial disability. A worker's inability to perform all the duties that he or she could do before an accident or illness, even though the worker can still engage in some gainful activity on the job. [Cases: Workers' Compensation C=856-862.]

permanent disability. (1804) A disability that will indefinitely prevent a worker from performing some or all of the duties that he or she could do before an accident or illness. [Cases: Workers' Compensation C=863, 864.]

physical disability. (1826) An incapacity caused by a physical defect or infirmity, or by bodily imperfection or mental weakness.
temporary disability. (18c) A disability that exists until an injured worker is as far restored as the nature of the injury will permit. [Cases: Workers' Compensation C=863, 864.] temporary total disability. Total disability that is not permanent. total disability. (18c) A worker's inability to perform employment-related duties because of a physical or mental impairment. [Cases: Workers' Compensation C=846-855.]

3. Incapacity in the eyes of the law <most of a minor's disabilities are removed when he or she turns 18>. — Also termed incapacity.
canonical disability. A canonical impediment (usu. impotence). See canonical impediment under IMPEDIMENT.
civil disability. (18c) The condition of a person who has had a legal right or privilege revoked as a result of a criminal conviction, as when a person's driver's license is revoked after a DWI conviction. Cf. civil death (2) under DEATH.
disaffirmance. A life-insurance-policy provision providing for a waiver of premiums during the policyholder’s period of disability, and sometimes providing for monthly payments equal to a percentage of the policy’s face value. [Cases: Insurance C=2035.]

disability clause. Insurance. A life-insurance-policy provision for the waiver of premiums during the policyholder’s period of disability, and sometimes providing for monthly payments equal to a percentage of the policy's face value. [Cases: Insurance C=2035.]

disability compensation. Payments from public or private funds to a disabled person who cannot work, such as social-security or workers’-compensation benefits. — Also termed disability benefits. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare C=140.5–140.85; Workers’ Compensation C=836–902.]

disadvocare (dis-ad-va-kair-ee), vb. [Law Latin] To deny; to disavow.

disaffirm (dis-a-firm), vb. (16c) 1. To repudiate; to revoke consent; to disclaimer the intent to be bound by an earlier transaction. 2. To declare (a voidable contract) to be void.

disaffirmance (dis-a-firm-ants). 1. An act of denial; a repudiation, as of an earlier transaction. [Cases: Contracts C=272.] 2. A declaration that a voidable contract (such as one entered into by a minor) is void. — Also termed disaffirmation. [Cases: Infants C=58(1).]

"Disaffirmance is an operative act whereby the legal relations created by an infant’s contract are terminated and discharged and other legal relations substituted. Inasmuch as the infant’s executory promise does not operate to create any legal duty in him (the infant being at all times at liberty or privileged not to perform), his disaffirmance is not the discharge of such a duty. A return promise by an adult, however, creates a legal duty and the infant has a correlative right in personam. A disaffirmance terminates these." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 181 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

disafforestation (dis-a-for-ast or fahr-ast), vb. [fr. French desaforester] Hist. To free lands from the restrictions of the forest laws and return them to the status of ordinary lands. — Also termed deforestation.

Disaster Relief Act. A federal statute that provides a means by which the federal government can help state and local governments to relieve suffering and damage resulting from disasters such as hurricanes, tornadoes, floods, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, landslides, mudslides, drought, fire, and explosions. A 1974 amendment established a process for the President to declare affected communities disaster areas. [Cases: United States C=82(5).]

disavow (dis-a-vow), vb. To disown; to disclaim knowledge of; to repudiate <the company disavowed the acts of its agent>. — disavowal, n.

disbarment, n. (1862) The action of expelling a lawyer from the bar or from the practice of law, usu. because of some disciplinary violation. One who has passed the bar, been called to the bar, or been admitted to the bar is privileged to stand inside the wooden barrier that separates the gallery from the actual courtroom, particularly the judge’s bench, and conduct business with the court. So this term literally describes the loss of the privilege. Although disbarment is typically a permanent removal from the practice of law, in some jurisdictions a disbarred attorney may (after a certain period) petition for readmission. In England and Wales, only a barrister is disbarred; a solicitor is struck off the roll, so the expulsion of a solicitor is termed striking off the roll. See struck off. [Cases: Attorney and Client C=59,14.] — disbar, vb.
disbocatio (dis-bo-kay-shee-oh), n. [fr. Law Latin dis- + bocus “wood”] Hist. The conversion of forest to pasture.

6. The relieving of a witness, juror, or jury from further responsibilities in a case. 7. The firing of an employee. [Cases: Labor and Employment ∑ 825.]

constructive discharge. (1830) A termination of employment brought about by making the employee’s working conditions so intolerable that the employee feels compelled to leave. [Cases: Civil Rights ∑ 1123; Labor and Employment ∑ 825.]

“Most constructive discharges fall into one of two basic fact patterns. First, the employer can cause a constructive discharge by breaching the employee’s contract of employment in some manner short of termination. Second, the employer can make working conditions so intolerable that the employee feels compelled to quit,” Mark A. Rothstein et al., Employment Law § 9.7, at 539 (1994).

retaliatory discharge. (1967) A discharge that is made in retaliation for the employee’s conduct (such as reporting unlawful activity by the employer to the government) and that clearly violates public policy. • Federal and state statutes may entitle an employee who is dismissed by retaliatory discharge to recover damages. [Cases: Civil Rights ∑ 1247, 1249(2); Labor and Employment ∑ 771.]

wrongful discharge. (1825) A discharge for reasons that are illegal or that violate public policy. [Cases: Civil Rights ∑ 1122; Labor and Employment ∑ 758.]

8. The dismissal of a member of the armed services from military service <the sergeant was honorably discharged>. [Cases: Armed Services ∑ 11, 22.]

administrative discharge. A military-service discharge given by administrative means and not by court-martial.

bad-conduct discharge. A punitive discharge that a court-martial can give to a member of the military, usu. as punishment for repeated minor offenses. — Abbr. BCD.

dishonorable discharge. The most severe punitive discharge that a court-martial can give to a member of the military. • A dishonorable discharge may result from conviction for an offense recognized in civilian law as a felony or of a military offense requiring severe punishment. Only a general court-martial can give a dishonorable discharge.

general discharge. One of the administrative discharges given to a member of the military who does not qualify for an honorable discharge.

honorable discharge. A formal final judgment passed by the government on a soldier’s entire military record, and an authoritative declaration that he or she has left the service in a status of honor. • Full veterans’ benefits are given only to a person honorably discharged.

undesirable discharge. One of the administrative discharges given to a member of the military who does not qualify for an honorable discharge.

9. Parliamentary law. A motion by which a deliberative assembly, having referred a matter to a committee, takes the matter’s further consideration out of the committee and back into its own hands. — Also termed discharge a committee; withdrawal. — discharge (dis-chahrj), vb.

dischargeability proceeding. Bankruptcy. A hearing to determine whether a debt is dischargeable or is subject to an exception to discharge. 11 USCA § 523. [Cases: Bankruptcy ∑ 3395.]

dischargeable claim. Bankruptcy. A claim that can be discharged in bankruptcy. [Cases: Bankruptcy ∑ 3341–3378.]

discharge hearing. Bankruptcy. A hearing at which the court informs the debtor either that a discharge has been granted or the reasons why a discharge has not been granted. See reaffirmation hearing. [Cases: Bankruptcy ∑ 3318.1.]

discharge in bankruptcy. (1820) 1. The release of a debtor from personal liability for prebankruptcy debts, specif., discharge under the United States Bankruptcy Code. [Cases: Bankruptcy ∑ 3251.] 2. A bankruptcy court’s decree releasing a debtor from that liability.

disciplinary proceeding. (1900) An action brought to reprimand, suspend, or expel a licensed professional or other person from a profession or other group because of unprofessional, unethical, improper, or illegal conduct. • A disciplinary proceeding against a lawyer disciplinary rule. (often cap.) (1890) A mandatory regulation stating the minimum level of professional conduct that a professional must sustain to avoid being subject to disciplinary action. For lawyers, the disciplinary rules are found chiefly in the Model Code of Professional Responsibility. Abbrev. DR. Cf. ETHICAL CONSIDERATION. [Cases: Licenses $\gg 38$.]

discipline, n. 1. Punishment intended to correct or instruct; esp., a sanction or penalty imposed after an official finding of misconduct. [Cases: Licenses $\gg 38$.]

2. The punishment or penalties (often termed “sanctions”) imposed by a disciplining agency on an attorney who has breached a rule of professional ethics. Three types of discipline are common: disbarment, suspension, and reprimand (public or private). 3. Control gained by enforcing compliance or order. 4. Military law. A state of mind inducing instant obedience to a lawful order, no matter how unpleasant or dangerous such compliance might be. — discipline, vb. — disciplinary, adj.

qualified disclaimer. (1889) 1. A disclaimer with a restriction or condition attached. In this sense it is qualified because it carries the restriction or condition. 2. A person’s refusal to accept an interest in property so that he or she can avoid having to pay estate or gift taxes. 3. To be effective under federal tax law, the refusal must be in writing and must be executed no later than nine months from the time when the interest was created. In this sense, it is qualified in the sense of being within the lawful exemption. IRC (26 USCA) § 2518. [Cases: Internal Revenue $\gg 4177.20, 4205.10$; Taxation $\gg 3319$.]

statutory disclaimer. Patents. A patent applicant’s amendment of a specification to relinquish one or more claims to the invention. 35 USCA § 253. Before the statute was enacted, a single invalid claim was grounds for denying a patent. Also termed patent disclaimer. See SPECIFICATION (3). [Cases: Patents $\gg 149, 154$.]

terminal disclaimer. A patent applicant’s statement shortening the term of the patent. To revive an abandoned application for a design application or for a utility or plant application filed before June 8, 1995, the applicant must disclaim a period equal to the duration of abandonment. A terminal disclaimer may also be required in an application for an obvious variation on an existing patent with a common inventor or owner: to avoid a double-patenting rejection the inventor agrees that both patents will expire on the same day. 37 CFR 1.321. [Cases: Patents $\gg 131$.]

"Rule 26(a) [of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure] reflects a shift away from the traditional method of obtaining discovery through the service of written demands toward requiring automatic disclosure by the parties of information that would invariably be requested. The goal of automatic disclosure is the creation of a more efficient and expeditious discovery process. . . . Rule 26(a)(1) provides for the initial disclosure of specified information relating to witnesses, documents, and insurance agreements. Rule 26(a)(2) provides for the disclosure of information regarding experts who may be used at trial. Rule 26(a)(3) provides for specified pretrial disclosures regarding witnesses, evidence, and objections." Jay E. Grenig & Jeffrey S. Kinsler, Handbook of Federal Civil Discovery and Disclosure § 1.15, at 65–66 (2d ed. 2002).

Compulsory disclosure, at a party's request, of information that relates to the litigation <the plaintiff filed a motion to compel discovery>. — Also termed discovering party. Cf. DISCOVEREE. 2. Patent law. See INVENTOR. See 35 USC § 101. [Cases: Patents ⊕ 1.] discovery rule. (1916) The rule that a party’s production of relevant evidence to a discovery request within the stated time limit, but also by engaging in discovery for an improper purpose. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⊕ 1278; Pretrial Procedure ⊕ 28.] The term ‘discovery abuse’ has been used as if it were a single concept, but it includes several different things. Thus, it is useful to subdivide ‘abuse’ into ‘misuse’ and ‘overuse.’ What is referred to as ‘misuse’ would include not only direct violation of the rules, as by failing to respond to a discovery request within the stated time limit, but also more subtle attempts to harass or obstruct an opponent, as by giving obviously inadequate answers or by requesting information that clearly is outside the scope of discovery. By ‘overuse’ is meant asking for more discovery than is necessary or appropriate to the particular case. ‘Overuse,’ in turn, can be subdivided into problems of ‘depth’ and of ‘breadth,’ with ‘depth’ referring to discovery that may be relevant but is simply excessive and ‘breadth’ referring to discovery requests that go into matters too far removed from the case.” Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 81, at 580 (5th ed. 1994).
2. The failure to respond adequately to proper discovery requests. — Also termed abuse of discovery. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⊕ 1278; Pretrial Procedure ⊕ 44.1.] discovery immunity. (1975) An exemption provided by statute, caselaw, or court rules to exclude certain documents and information from being disclosed during discovery.
discovery policy. See claims-made policy under INSURANCE POLICY. discovery rule. (1916) Civil procedure. The rule that a limitations period does not begin to run until the plaintiff discovers (or reasonably should have discovered) the injury giving rise to the claim. — The discovery rule usu. applies to injuries that are inherently difficult to detect, such as those resulting from medical malpractice. See STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. Cf. OCCURRENCE RULE. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ⊕ 95, 100.]

discretion statement. Hist. English law. In an action for divorce or judicial separation, a written request for the court to consider granting a judgment favorable to a spouse who has admittedly committed a matrimonial offense, esp. adultery.
"In a suit for divorce or judicial separation, the defendant's own adultery is a discretionary bar. The petitioner asking the court to exercise its discretion to grant a decree notwithstanding his own adultery must lodge in the Divorce Registry a statement, known as a 'discretion statement,' dated and signed by him or his solicitor, stating that the court will be asked to exercise its discretion on his behalf notwithstanding his own adultery, and setting forth particulars of his acts of adultery and of the facts which is it material for the court to know for the purpose of exercising its discretion." N. Simon Tessy, Is a Discretion Statement Really Necessary?, 21 Mod. L. Rev. 48, 48 (1958).
discriminant function (di-skrim-ə-nant). An IRS method of selecting tax returns to be audited. • The method consists of (1) using a computer program to identify returns with a high probability of error (such as those showing a disproportionate amount of deductible expenses), and (2) having examiners manually review the selected returns to determine which ones should be audited. — Also termed DIF system. [Cases: Internal Revenue C-4443.] discriminatee (di-skrim-ə-na-tee). A person unlawfully discriminated against. [Cases: Civil Rights C-1007.]
discrimination, n. (1866) 1. The effect of a law or established practice that confers privileges on a certain class or that denies privileges to a certain class because of race, age, sex, nationality, religion, or disability. • Federal law, including Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, prohibits employment discrimination based on any one of those characteristics. Other federal statutes, supplemented by court decisions, prohibit discrimination in voting rights, housing, credit extension, public education, and access to public facilities. State laws provide further protections against discrimination. [Cases: Civil Rights C-1001-1263.] 2. Differential treatment; esp., a failure to treat all persons equally when no reasonable distinction can be found between those favored and those not favored. [Cases: Civil Rights C-1033, 1138.]
"The dictionary sense of 'discrimination' is neutral while the current political use of the term is frequently non-neutral, pejorative. With both a neutral and a non-neutral use of the word having currency, the opportunity for confusion in arguments about racial discrimination is enormously multiplied. For some, it may be enough that a practice is called discriminatory for them to judge it wrong. Others may be mystified that the first group condemns the practice without further argument or inquiry. Many may be led to the false sense that they have actually made a moral argument by showing that the practice discriminates (distinguishes in favor of or against). The temptation is to move from 'X distinguishes in favor of or against' to 'X discriminates' to 'X is wrong' without being aware of the equivocation involved.” Robert K. Fuller, The Reverse Discrimination Controversy 11-12 (1986).

age discrimination. Discrimination based on age. • Federal law prohibits discrimination in employment against people who are age 40 or older. [Cases: Civil Rights (1014, 1199.)] content-based discrimination. A state-imposed restriction on the content of speech, esp. when the speech concerns something of slight social value and is vastly outweighed by the public interest in morality and order. • Types of speech subject to content-based discrimination include obscenity, fighting words, and defamation. R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377, 383–84, 112 S.Ct. 2538, 2543 (1992).

invidious discrimination (in-vid-ee-as). (1856) Discrimination that is offensive or objectionable, esp. because it involves prejudice or stereotyping.

racial discrimination. Discrimination based on race. [Cases: Civil Rights (1009, 1107.)] reverse discrimination. (1964) Preferential treatment of minorities, usu. through affirmative-action programs, in a way that adversely affects members of a majority group. See AFFIRMATIVE ACTION. [Cases: Civil Rights (1033(3), 1232.)] sex discrimination. Discrimination based on gender, esp. against women. • The Supreme Court has established an intermediate-scrutiny standard of review for gender-based classifications, which must serve an important governmental interest and be substantially related to the achievement of that objective. Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190, 97 S.Ct. 451 (1976). — Also termed gender discrimination. [Cases: Civil Rights (1011, 1164, 1236.)] viewpoint discrimination. Content-based discrimination in which the government targets not a particular subject, but instead certain views that speakers might express on the subject; discrimination based on the content of a communication. • If restrictions on the content of speech are reasonable and not calculated to suppress a particular set of views or ideas, a governmental body may limit speech in a nonpublic forum to expressions that serve a specific purpose. For example, an agency holding a workshop to inform state employees of laws related to the agency’s functions may reasonably prohibit the expression of opinions regarding the motives of the legislators. But if speech favorable to the legislators’ intent is allowed and opponents are denied the opportunity to respond, the restriction would constitute viewpoint discrimination. — Also termed viewpoint-based discrimination. [Cases: Constitutional Law (1507, 1516.)

3. The effect of state laws that favor local interests over out-of-state interests. • Such a discriminatory state law may still be upheld if it is narrowly tailored to achieve an important state interest. Cf. FAVORITISM. [Cases: Commerce (54.1.) — discriminate, vb. — discriminatory, adj.

discussion. 1. The act of exchanging views on something; a debate. 2. Civil law. A creditor's act of exhausting all remedies against the principal debtor before proceeding with a lawsuit against the guarantor. See BENEFIT OF DISCUSSION. [Cases: Guarantee (42, 77; Principal and Surety (138, 168.)] disease. 1. A deviation from the healthy and normal functioning of the body <the drug could not be linked to his disease>. 2. (pl.) Special classes of pathological conditions with similar traits, such as having similar causes and affecting similar organs <respiratory diseases> <occupational diseases>. 3. Any disorder; any deprived condition.

functional disease. A disease that prevents, obstructs, or interferes with an organ's special function, without anatomical defect or abnormality in the organ itself.

industrial disease. See OCCUPATIONAL DISEASE.

occupational disease. See OCCUPATIONAL DISEASE.

organic disease. A disease that is caused by an injury to, or lesion or malfunction in, an organ.

disembarrass, vb. To free from embarrassment; to extricate or disentangle one thing from another.

disgagement, n. (15c) The act of giving up something (such as profits illegally obtained) on demand or by legal compulsion. [Cases: Securities Regulation ⊆ 150.] — disgorge, vb.

disgrading. Hist. 1. The act of degrading. 2. The depriving of an order; the depriving of a dignity.

"Disgrading, or degrading, is when a man having taken upon him a dignity temporal or spiritual, is afterwards thereof deprived, be he knight, clerk or other. Whereof if a clerk be delivered to his ordinary, and cannot clear himself of the offence whereof he is convicted by the jury, he shall be disgraded for it, which is nothing else but the deprivation of him from those orders he hath taken upon him, as priesthood, deaconship, or otherwise. . . . In like manner there is disgrading of a knight. . . . And it is worthy the observation, that by the canon law there are two kinds of disgradings; the one summary, by word only, and the other solemn, by devesting the party disgraded from those ornaments and rites which are the ensigns of his order or degree." Termes de la Ley 175-76 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

dissim with prejudice. (1898) A dismissal, usu. after an adjudication on the merits, barring the plaintiff from prosecuting any later lawsuit on the same claim.

• If, after a dismissal with prejudice, the plaintiff files a later suit on the same claim, the defendant in the later suit can assert the defense of res judicata (claim preclusion). See res judicata; with prejudice. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure \( \approx 1713, 1837.1 \); Pretrial Procedure \( \approx 517, 690 \).]

involuntary dissim. (1911) A court's dismissal of a lawsuit because the plaintiff failed to prosecute or failed to comply with a procedural rule or court order. Fed. R. Civ. P. 41(b). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure \( \approx 1721-1842 \); Pretrial Procedure \( \approx 531-699 \).]

voluntary dissim. (1834) A plaintiff's dismissal of a lawsuit at the plaintiff's own request or by stipulation of all the parties. Fed. R. Civ. P. 41(a). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure \( \approx 1691-1715 \); Pretrial Procedure \( \approx 501-520 \).]

2. A release or discharge from employment. See discharge (7). [Cases: Labor and Employment \( \approx 825 \).]

dissim for cause. (1877) A dismissal of a contract employee for a reason that the law or public policy has recognized as sufficient to warrant the employee's removal. [Cases: Labor and Employment \( \approx 762 \).]

3. Military law. A court-martial punishment for an officer, commissioned warrant officer, cadet, or midshipman, consisting of separation from the armed services with dishonor. • A dismissal can be given only by a general court-martial and is considered the equivalent of a dishonorable discharge. [Cases: Military Justice \( \approx 1322.1 \).] — dissim, vb.

dissim compensation. See severance pay.

dissim order. See order (2).

dissim for want of equity. (Of a case) removed from the court's docket for substantive reasons, usu. because the plaintiff's allegations are found to be untrue or because the plaintiff's pleading does not state an adequate claim. See dissim for want of equity under dissim (1). [Cases: Pretrial Procedure \( \approx 552, 622 \).]

dissim for want of prosecution. (Of a case) removed from the court's docket because the plaintiff has failed to pursue the case diligently toward completion. See dissim for want of prosecution under dissim (1). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure \( \approx 1758 \); Pretrial Procedure \( \approx 581-602 \).]

dissim without prejudice. (Of a case) removed from the court's docket in such a way that the plaintiff may refile the same suit on the same claim. See dissim without prejudice under dissim (1); without prejudice. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure \( \approx 1713, 1837.1 \); Pretrial Procedure \( \approx 517.1, 690 \).]

disorderly house. (16c) 1. A dwelling where people carry on activities that are a nuisance to the neighborhood. [Cases: Disorderly House § 108-140.] 2. A dwelling where people conduct criminal or immoral activities. ● Examples are brothels and drug houses. — Also termed (more narrowly) bawdy house; house of prostitution; house of ill fame; house of ill repute; lewd house; assignation house; house of assignation.

“The keeping of one type of disorderly house — the bawdy house — is punished because it violates the social interest in maintaining proper standards of morality and decency. . . . As included here a house may be disorderly for other reasons. Any house in which disorderly persons are permitted to congregate, and to disturb the tranquility of the neighborhood by fighting, quarreling, swearing or any other type of disorder, is a disorderly house; and the keeping thereof is a misdemeanor at common law.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 487 (3d ed. 1982).

disorderly person. (18c) 1. A person guilty of disorderly conduct. [Cases: Disorderly Conduct § 108-140.] 2. A person who breaches the peace, order, decency, or safety of the public, as defined by statute. ● The offense of being a disorderly person is usu. a misdemeanor.

“Ordinarily, a person who is guilty of disorderly conduct is a ‘disorderly person,’ but where statutes define ‘a disorderly person’ and distinguish acts which may constitute the offense of disorderly conduct, the distinction is to be preserved and the different provisions relative to the different offenses particularly followed.” 27 C.J.S. Disorderly Conduct § 1(1), at 509 (1959).

2. To bring together unequal persons, as in a marriage between persons of unequal lineage. Cf. PARAGE.

2. To bring together unequal persons, as in a marriage between persons of unequal lineage. Cf. PARAGE.

2. To bring together unequal persons, as in a marriage between persons of unequal lineage. Cf. PARAGE.

disparate impact (dis-pa-rət). (1973) The adverse effect of a facially neutral practice (esp. an employment practice) that nonetheless discriminates against persons because of their race, sex, national origin, age, or disability and that is not justified by business necessity. ● Discriminatory intent is irrelevant in a disparate-impact claim. — Also termed adverse impact. [Cases: Civil Rights § 1033, 1138.]

disparate treatment. The practice, esp. in employment, of intentionally dealing with persons differently because of their race, sex, national origin, age, or disability. ● To succeed on a disparate-treatment claim, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant acted with discriminatory intent or motive. [Cases: Civil Rights § 1033, 1138.]

"Claims brought on behalf of a group of employees come in two varieties: claims of intentional discrimination (or disparate treatment) and claims of discriminatory impact (or disparate impact). The difference between these types of claims is significant, so much so that constitutional law only recognizes claims of disparate treatment, not disparate impact. Yet these two kinds of claims resemble one another, especially in the statistical evidence that the plaintiff must present in order to establish liability. . . . [C]lass claims of disparate treatment emphasize the historical perspective and its negative conception of equality as colorblindness, while class claims of disparate impact emphasize the remedial perspective and its goal of eliminating the effects of past discrimination.” George Rutherglen, Employment Discrimination Law 56 (2001).

disparity (di-spar-ə-tee). (16c) Inequality; a difference in quantity or quality between two or more things.

dispatch (di-spech also dis-pach), n. 1. A prompt sending off of something . 2. A prompt completion of something <dispatch of a business transaction>. 3. Something quickly sent <the dispatch was mailed>. 4. Maritime law. The required diligence in discharging cargo <dispatch is required on all charters>. [Cases: Shipping § 47, 49(6).]

custodial dispatch. Dispatch that follows the rules, customs, and usages of the port where cargo is discharged. [Cases: Shipping § 47, 49(6).]
quick dispatch. A speedy dispatch that does not strictly follow the customs of the port, esp. to avoid delays resulting from a crowded wharf. [Cases: Shipping <ref>47, 49(6)</ref>]

5. Maritime law. dispatch money.

dispatch money. Maritime law. An amount paid by a shipowner to a vessel's charterer if the vessel's cargo is unloaded at the port sooner than provided for in the agreement between the charterer and the shipowner. — Also termed dispatch. Cf. contract demurrage under demurrage. [Cases: Shipping <ref>49(6)</ref>]

"Some charters contain a provision for 'dispatch money,' which is in the nature of a reward to the charterer for loading or unloading more rapidly than provided for — i.e., in less time than the stipulated 'lay days.' Dispatch, where payable, is usually stated, just as is demurrage, in terms of a rate per day and pro rata part thereof." Grant Gilmore & Charles L. Black Jr., The Law of Admiralty § 4-8, at 212 (2d ed. 1975).

dispute-resolution procedure. Intellectual property. A mechanism for resolving international grievances over intellectual-property protection, conducted by the World Trade Organization under the TRIPs agreement. ● The procedure begins with a complaint by one nation against another, followed by consultations between the nations, a WTO panel report on the issue, and (potentially) trade sanctions against one of the nations.

disqualification, n. (18c) 1. Something that makes one ineligible; esp., a bias or conflict of interest that prevents a judge or juror from impartially hearing a case, or that prevents a lawyer from representing a party. [Cases: Judges – 39; Jury – 97.]

vicarious disqualification. (1949) Disqualification of all the lawyers in a firm or in an office because one of the lawyers is ethically disqualified from representing the client at issue. — Also termed imputed disqualification. [Cases: Attorney and Client – 21.15.]

In general, disqualification of a lawyer from representation, at least in multiple client-conflict scenarios, means disqualification of that lawyer’s entire firm from the same representation. When a lawyer has been exclusively or chiefly responsible for the representation of a client and that lawyer changes jobs, there is little question but that the imputed disqualification rule will apply to disqualify the new firm from representing the opponent of the first client. But because lawyers often work for large organizations, . . . a question may arise about the application of the imputation rule when a lawyer has left employment . . . . If the lawyer had little or no responsibility in the first organization for the representation or if the lawyer can be effectively shielded from the representation in the new organization, or both, there may be no useful purpose served by imputing the lawyer’s disqualification to the new organization . . . . James E. Molliterno & John M. Levy, Ethics of the Lawyer’s Work 151 (1993).

2. The act of making ineligible; the fact or condition of being ineligible. Cf. recusal. — disqualify, vb.

distributive clause. (1821) A will or trust provision governing the distribution of income and gifts.

distributive deviation. A trustee's authorized or unauthorized departure from the express distributional terms of a trust. • A trustee must apply to the court for authority to deviate from the terms of a trust. In American law, courts rarely authorize deviation unless all the beneficiaries consent and there is no material purpose of the settlor yet to be served. Some state statutes provide that deviation is permitted if the court finds that deviation would effectuate the settlor's intention, though the modification is not expressly authorized by the trust's provisions. The Pulitzer trust illustrates the possibility that extraordinary circumstances not anticipated by the settlor may justify deviation, despite an express prohibition within the trust. Joseph Pulitzer set up a testamentary trust with shares of World newspaper stock; his will directed that the sale of these shares was not authorized under any circumstances. Nonetheless, the court later approved the stock sale when given evidence that because of hemorrhaging losses, the trust's continuation was jeopardized. In re Pulitzer's Estate, 249 N.Y.S. 87 (Sur. Ct. 1931).

distributive finding. A jury's decision partly in favor of one party and partly in favor of another.

disturbance of a public meeting. The unlawful interference with the proceedings of a public assembly. [Cases: Breach of the Peace C 81(4).]

"Generally speaking, any conduct which, being contrary to the usages of the particular sort of meeting and class of persons assembled, interferes with its due progress and services, or is annoying to the congregation in whole or in part, is a disturbance; and a meeting may be said to be 'disturbed' when it is agitated, aroused from a state of repose, molested, interrupted, hindered, perplexed, disquieted, or diverted from the object of the assembly." 27 C.J.S. Disturbance of Public Meetings § 1, at 817 (1959).

disturbance of common. At common law, a wrongful interference with, or impediment to, another's right to commonable property, such as a wrongful fencing or surcharge on the common.

"The disturbance of common comes next to be considered; where any act is done, by which the right of another to his common is incommoded or diminished. This may happen, in the first place, where one who hath no right of common, puts his cattle into the land; and thereby robs the cattle of the commoners of their respective shares of the pasture. Or if one, who hath a right of common, puts in cattle which are not commonable, as hogs and goats; which amounts to the same inconvenience." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 237 (1768).

disturbance of franchise. At common law, a wrongful interference with a liberty or privilege.

"Disturbance of franchises happens when a man has the franchise of holding a court-leet, of keeping a fair or market, of free warren, of taking toll, of seizing waifs or estrays, or (in short) any other species of franchise whatsoever, and he is disturbed or incommoded in the lawful exercise thereof." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 236 (1768).

complete diversity. (1925) In a multiparty case, diversity between both sides to the lawsuit so that all plaintiffs have different citizenship from all defendants. ● Complete diversity must exist for a federal court to have diversity jurisdiction over the matter. The rule of complete diversity was first laid down by Chief Justice Marshall in Strawbridge v. Curtiss, 7 U.S. (3 Cranch) 267 (1806). [Cases: Federal Courts C–286.]

manufactured diversity. (1968) Improper or collusively created diversity of citizenship for the sole or primary purpose of creating federal jurisdiction. ● Manufactured diversity is prohibited by 28 USCA § 1359. [Cases: Federal Courts C–303.]
diveree. A defendant who participates in a diversion program. See DIVERSION PROGRAM.
dives costs (dI-veez), n. Ordinary court costs granted to a successful party, as distinguished from limited costs (such as out-of-pocket costs) allowed to a successful pauper who sued or defended in forma pauperis. ● The term derives from the name of Dives, the supposed fund shareholder. The payment is the shareholder's proportional share of the net capital gains realized by the company from the sale of securities in its portfolio. — Also termed capital-gain distribution. ● The principle that if the only provisions in a testamentary disposition are words ordering that payment be made at some time after the testator's death, time will be of the essence and the interest is future and contingent rather than vested and immediate. [Cases: Wills C–630(6).] divided court. (18c) An appellate court whose opinion or decision in a particular case is not unanimous, esp. when the majority is slim, as in a 5-to-4 decision of the U.S. Supreme Court. [Cases: Appeal and Error C–1123; Courts C–102(2); Federal Courts C–462, 928.]
divided-damages rule. Maritime law. The obsolete principle that when two parties are jointly liable to a third party for a tort, each party is liable for only half the damages. ● The courts now apply a comparative-negligence standard. [Cases: Collision C–143.]

“For over a hundred years admiralty law embraced the rule of ‘divided damages’ in collision cases. . . . In United States v. Reliable Transfer Co., 421 U.S. 397, 95 S.Ct. 1708, 44 L.Ed.2d 251 (1975), the Supreme Court jettisoned that inequitable and illogical rule in favor of proportionate allocation of fault among joint-tortfeasors in collision cases. Each vessel now is liable to the other offending vessel in contribution for that part of the total damages proportionate to its fault, and is liable for its per capita (vinline) share only when the respective faults of the vessels are equal, or when proportionate fault can not be ascertained.” Frank L. Maraist, Admiralty in a Nutshell 165 (2d ed. 1988).

dividend. (17c) A portion of a company's earnings or profits distributed pro rata to its shareholders, usu. in the form of cash or additional shares. [Cases: Corporations C–155(1).] accumulated dividend. A dividend that has been declared but not yet paid. — Also termed accrued dividend. [Cases: Corporations C–68, 151.]

accumulative dividend. See cumulative dividend.

asset dividend. A dividend paid in the form of property, usu. the company's product, rather than in cash or stock. — Also termed property dividend.

bond dividend. A dividend in which a shareholder receives a bond instead of scrip, property, or money.
capital-gain dividend. A taxable payment to a mutual-fund shareholder. ● The payment is the shareholder's proportional share of the net capital gains realized by the mutual fund's portfolio. — Also termed capital-gain distribution.
cash dividend. A dividend paid to shareholders in the form of money. [Cases: Corporations C–152.]

consent dividend. A dividend that is not actually paid to the shareholders, but is taxed to the shareholders and increases the basis in their stock investment. ● A corporation declares a consent dividend to avoid or reduce an accumulated-earnings or personal-holding-company penalty tax. constructive dividend. A taxable benefit derived by a shareholder from the corporation even though the benefit was not designated a dividend. ● Examples include excessive compensation, bargain purchases of corporate property, or shareholder use of corporate property for personal reasons. [Cases: Internal Revenue C=3750–3758.]

cumulative dividend. A dividend that grows from year to year when not paid. • A cumulative dividend is usu. on preferred shares, and it must be paid in full before common shareholders may receive any dividend. If the corporation does not pay a dividend in a particular year or period, it is carried over to the next year or period and must be paid before the common shareholders receive any payment. — Also termed accumulated dividend. Cf. noncumulative dividend. [Cases: Corporations C=68, 156.]

defered dividend. A dividend that is declared, but is payable at a future date.

deficiency dividend. A dividend paid to reduce or avoid personal-holding-company tax in a prior year.

disguised dividend. See informal dividend.

extraordinary dividend. A dividend paid in addition to a regular dividend, usu. because of exceptional corporate profits during the dividend period. — Also termed extra dividend; nonrecurring dividend; special dividend. [Cases: Corporations C=155(1).]

fixed-return dividend. A dividend that is constant throughout the investment’s life.

informal dividend. A payment of salary, rent, interest, or the like to or for a shareholder as a substitute for a dividend. — Also termed disguised dividend.

liability dividend. See scrip dividend.

liquidation dividend. A dividend paid to a dissolving corporation’s shareholders, usu. from the capital of the corporation, upon the decision to suspend all or part of its business operations. — Also termed liquidating dividend. [Cases: Corporations C=629.]

nimble dividend. A dividend paid out of current earnings when there is a deficit in the account from which dividends may be paid. • Some state statutes prohibit nimble dividends.

noncumulative dividend. A dividend that does not accrue for the benefit of a preferred shareholder if there is a passed dividend in a particular year or period. Cf. cumulative dividend. [Cases: Corporations C=152.]

nonrecurring dividend. See extraordinary dividend.

passed dividend. A dividend that is not paid when due by a company that has a history of paying regular dividends.

preferred dividend. A dividend paid to preferred shareholders, who are generally paid a fixed amount and take priority over common shareholders. [Cases: Corporations C=151, 156.]

property dividend. See asset dividend.

reinvested dividend. A dividend that is used to purchase additional shares in the corporation, instead of being taken in cash by the shareholder. See dividend-reinvestment plan.

scrip dividend. A dividend paid in certificates entitling the holder to ownership of capital stock to be issued in the future. • This type of dividend may signal that the corporation’s cash flow is poor. — Also termed liability dividend.

special dividend. See extraordinary dividend.

stock dividend. A dividend paid in stock expressed as a percentage of the number of shares already held by a shareholder. [Cases: Corporations C=157.]

unpaid dividend. A declared but unpaid dividend.

year-end dividend. An extra dividend paid at the end of the fiscal year depending on the amount of the profits.

dividenda (div-i-den-da), n. [fr. Latin dividere “to divide”] Hist. Something to be divided; an indenture.

dividend addition. An amount added to the face value of a life-insurance policy and purchased by using a dividend as a single premium payment. [Cases: Insurance C=2037.]

dividend-credit rule. The principle that a corporate reserve fund amassed from unpaid dividends on preferred stock must be used to pay subsequent dividends on preferred stock before dividend payments on common stock. — Also termed cast-iron-pipe doctrine.

dividend date. The date on which a corporation distributes dividends to record owners of stock shares. See record date under date. Cf. ex-dividend date.

dividend income. See income.

dividend-payout ratio. A profitability ratio computed by dividing annual dividends per share by earnings per share.

dividend preference. The right of a holder of preferred shares to receive a dividend before the company pays dividends to holders of common shares. See preferred stock under stock. [Cases: Corporations C=156.]

dividend-received deduction. (1957) A deduction allowed to a corporate shareholder for dividends received from a domestic corporation. IRC (26 USCA) §§ 243–247. [Cases: Internal Revenue C=3777.]

dividend-reinvestment plan. (1969) A stock-purchase program that allows investors to reinvest their dividends, and perhaps convert additional voluntary payments, into shares of the entity’s common stock, usu. with no sales charge, and sometimes at a discount from the stock’s market price. • Although the investor never receives the cash, it is still treated as income to the investor. An investor may be allowed to make optional cash purchases of additional stock. — Abbr. DRIP; DRP.

brokerage-run dividend-reinvestment plan. A formal or informal program managed by a brokerage and allowing shareholders to reinvest dividends in a portdivisible offense. See offense (1).

divisible promises. See promise.

divisum imperium (di-vi-zam-im-peer ee-am), n. [Latin "a divided empire"] Divided jurisdiction; alternate jurisdiction, as of courts.

"This main sea begins at the low-water-mark. But between the high-water-mark and the low-water-mark, where the sea ebbs and flows, the common law and admiralty have divisum imperium, an alternate jurisdiction; one upon the water, when it is full sea; the other upon the land, when it is an ebb." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 107 (1765).

divorce. (14c) The legal dissolution of a marriage by a court. — Also termed marriage dissolution; dissolution of marriage. Cf. annulment. [Cases: Divorce C=1.] — divorce, vb.

"When used without qualification, the term [divorce] imports a dissolution of the marriage relation between husband and wife, that is, a complete severance of the tie by which the parties were united. However, in its common and wider use, the term includes the dissolution of a valid marriage, a formal separation of married persons, and the annulment of a marriage void from the beginning.

“So, while the term ‘divorce’ has sometimes been broadly defined or applied to include both decrees of nullity and decrees of dissolution of marriage, especially where the marriage was not void but only voidable at the option of the injured party, this has been declared to be not in accord with modern usage, and generally, the term denotes only dissolution or suspension of a marital relation, and does not include annulment of an invalid marriage.” 27A C.J.S. Divorce § 2, at 31-32 (1985).

absolute divorce. See divorce a vinculo matrimonii.

bifurcated divorce. See divisible divorce.

collaborative divorce. A divorce negotiated in a non-adversarial forum, usu. between spouses who, with or without a lawyer, are assisted as needed by a team of experts in law, mental health, and financial matters (such as taxes and real estate).

conditional divorce. See conversion divorce.

contested divorce. 1. A divorce that one spouse opposes in court. 2. A divorce in which the spouses litigate.

- In this sense, although both spouses may want the divorce, they disagree on the terms of the divorce decree. Cf. uncontested divorce.

conversion divorce. A divorce granted after (1) a legal separation has been granted or the parties have signed a separation agreement, and (2) the parties have lived separately for a statutorily prescribed period. — Also termed convertible divorce; conditional divorce. [Cases: Divorce ☑️ 1360] (1943) A divorce whereby the marriage itself is dissolved but the issues incident to the divorce, such as alimony, child custody, and visitation, are reserved until a later proceeding. — In this sense, although both spouses may want the divorce, they disagree on the terms of the divorce decree. Cf. uncontested divorce.

divisible divorce. A divorce whereby the marriage itself is dissolved but the issues incident to the divorce, such as alimony, child custody, and visitation, are reserved until a later proceeding. — In this sense, although both spouses may want the divorce, they disagree on the terms of the divorce decree. Cf. uncontested divorce.

divorce a mensa et thoro. [Latin “(divorce) from board and hearth”] (18c) Hist. A partial or qualified divorce by which the parties were separated and allowed or ordered to live apart, but remained technically married. — This type of divorce, abolished in England in 1857, was the forerunner of modern judicial separation. — Also termed separation a mensa et thoro; separation from bed and board; limited divorce; legal separation; judicial separation. [Cases: Divorce ☑️ 155, 350-420] (1831) A divorce obtained outside the state or country in which one spouse resides. [Cases: Divorce ☑️ 350-420]

ex parte divorce. (eks pahr-tee). (1870) A divorce proceeding in which only one spouse participates or appears in court. [Cases: Divorce ☑️ 146] (1943) A divorce whereby the marriage itself is dissolved but the issues incident to the divorce, such as alimony, child custody, and visitation, are reserved until a later proceeding. — In this sense, although both spouses may want the divorce, they disagree on the terms of the divorce decree. Cf. uncontested divorce.

fault divorce. A divorce granted to one spouse on the basis of some proven wrong or act (grounds for divorce) by the other spouse. — Although all states now have some form of no-fault divorce, some jurisdictions still consider a spouse's fault in precipitating the divorce, esp. when dividing marital property or when awarding alimony. Traditionally, the common grounds for a fault divorce were adultery, abandonment, imprisonment, and physical or mental cruelty; the defenses to alleged fault in a petition for divorce were condonation, connivance, collusion, recrimination, and insanity. Section 303(e) of the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act has abolished the defenses to divorce. Cf. no-fault divorce.

foreign divorce. (1831) A divorce obtained outside the state or country in which one spouse resides. [_cases: Divorce ☑️ 350-420]

hotel divorce. Slang. A form of collusive divorce — occurring before widespread passage of no-fault divorce laws — in which the spouses agree to fake an adultery scene to create "fault." Cf. no-fault divorce.

“Clearly a lawyer may not originate or participate in a scheme to make it appear to the court that a ground for divorce has occurred when this is not the fact. Such is the case in the so-called ‘hotel divorces,’ prevalent in jurisdictions where adultery is the only ground for divorce, and based on the principle that intercourse will be presumed from apparently uninhibited opportunity.” Henry S. Drinker, Legal Ethics 123-24 (1953).

legislative divorce. Hist. The legal termination of a particular marriage, through a statute enacted by the legislature rather than by a court's decree. — In the 18th century, Colonial American legislatures granted these special statutes. In 1816, the House of Burgesses of Virginia granted a divorce to Rachel Robards Jackson, the wife of then President Andrew Jackson, from a former spouse. Mrs. Jackson's untimely death was attributed to her reaction to the scandal that she had married Jackson before the divorce was procured. Now only state courts have authority to grant decrees of divorce. — Also termed parliamentary divorce. [Cases: Divorce ☑️ 5] limited divorce. (1831) 1. A divorce that ends the legal relationship of marriage by court order but does not address financial support, property distribution, or care and custody of children. • In the days before no-fault divorce, a spouse might seek a quick divorce in a state with a short residency requirement (such as Nevada). Then courts in the home state would give full faith and credit only to the dissolution of the marital res, while maintaining sole jurisdiction over property-division, support, and custody issues. [Cases: Divorce C–155.] 2. Loosely, a legal separation. 3. See divorce a mensa et thoro. Cf. divorce a vinculo matrimonii.

mail-order divorce. (1922) Slang. A divorce obtained by parties who are not physically present or domiciled in the jurisdiction purporting to grant the divorce. Such a divorce is not recognized in the United States because of the absence of the usual bases for jurisdiction.

Mexican divorce. A divorce obtained in Mexico by mail order or by the appearance of one spouse who does not have a Mexican domicile. • Neither type is recognized in the United States. — Also termed Dominican divorce (if granted in the Dominican Republic); Haitian divorce (if granted in Haiti).

migratory divorce. (1911) A divorce obtained in a jurisdiction other than the marital domicile; esp., a divorce obtained by a spouse who moves to, or temporarily resides in, another state or country to get the divorce.

no-fault divorce. (1969) A divorce in which the parties are not required to prove fault or grounds beyond a showing of the irretrievable breakdown of the marriage or irreconcilable differences. • The system of no-fault divorce has been adopted throughout the United States. By 1974, 45 states had adopted no-fault divorce; by 1985, every state but New York had adopted some form of it. In New York — one of the last bastions of fault grounds for divorce — the closest equivalent is a conversion divorce one year after legal separation or a legal-separation agreement. Cf. fault divorce; hotel divorce. [Cases: Divorce C–12.] parliamentarian divorce. See legislative divorce.

pro-con divorce. Slang. An uncontested divorce granted after only the plaintiff appears at the proceeding (since the defendant contests nothing).

quickie divorce. Slang. A fast divorce granted with minimal paperwork. — Also termed quick divorce.

rabbinical divorce. A divorce granted under the authority of a rabbi. • This type of divorce affects the relationship of the parties under the tenets of Judaism. It affects particularly a Jewish woman's ability to remarry in accordance with Judaic law. In the United States, it is not generally a divorce recognized in civil courts. — Also termed get.

uncontested divorce. A divorce that is unopposed by the spouse who did not initiate it. Cf. contested divorce.

divorce agreement. A contractual agreement that sets out divorcing spouses' rights and responsibilities regarding property, alimony, custody, visitation, and child support. • The divorce agreement usu. becomes incorporated by court order as a part of the divorce decree and thus is enforceable by contempt, among other remedies. — Also termed agreement incident to divorce; marital settlement agreement; separation agreement. Cf. property settlement. [Cases: Husband and Wife C–277.]

divorce decree. See decree.

divorce proctor. A person (such as a guardian) who is appointed to protect the interest of the state or children in a divorce action. — Sometimes shortened to proctor. [Cases: Infants C–76.]

divortium (di-vor-shé-əm). n. [Latin] 1. Roman law. Divorce: a severance of the marriage tie. • In classical law, no grounds were required. Cf. repudium. 2. Ecclesiastical law. A decree allowing spouses to separate or declaring their marriage invalid.

“Owing to the fact that the church had but slowly made up her mind to know no such thing as a divorce in our acceptation of that term (i.e., the dissolution of a valid marriage) the term divortium is currently used to signify two very different things, namely (1) the divortium quod torum, which is the equivalent of our 'judicial separation,' and (2) what is very often called the divortium quod vinculum but is really a declaration of nullity. The persistence of the word divortium in the latter case is a trace of an older state of affairs, but in medieval practice the decree of nullity often served the purpose of a true divorce: spouses who had quarrelled began to investigate their pedigrees and were unlucky if they could discover no impedimentum dirimens." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 393 n.5 (2d ed. 1899; repr. 1959).

DMCA. abbr. DIGITAL MILLENNIUM COPYRIGHT ACT.

DNA. abbr. Deoxyribonucleic acid; the double-helix structure in cell nuclei that carries the genetic information of most living organisms.

DNA Identification. (1987) A method of scientific identification based on a person's unique genetic makeup; specif., the comparison of a person's deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) — a patterned chemical structure of genetic information — with the DNA in a biological specimen (such as blood, tissue, or hair) to determine whether the person is the source of the specimen. • DNA evidence is used in criminal cases for purposes such as identifying a victim's remains, linking a suspect to a crime, and exonerating an innocent suspect. — Also termed DNA dock, n. 1. A structure that encloses water, often between two piers, in which ships are received for loading, unloading, safekeeping, or repair. [Cases: Wharves C=4.] 2. The part of a warehouse or other building (usu. elevated with oversized doors) at which trucks are received for loading and unloading. 3. English law. In a criminal court, the enclosure in which the prisoner is placed during trial <it was through his own deliberate choice that Mr. Bourne found himself in the dock at the Old Bailey, charged with a felony>. See BAIL DOCK.

dockage. A charge for the use of a dock, esp. while a vessel is undergoing repairs.

docket, n. (15c) 1. A formal record in which a judge or court clerk briefly notes all the proceedings and filings in a court case <review the docket to determine the filing date>. — Also termed judicial record; bench docket; docket sheet. [Cases: Appeal and Error C=493–543; Criminal Law C=1086.1–1088.20.] 2. A schedule of pending cases <the case is third on Monday's trial docket>. Also termed court calendar; cause list; trial calendar. [Cases: Criminal Law C=632(2); Federal Civil Procedure C=1991; Trial C=9(1).]

appearance docket. (18c) A list of the parties and lawyers participating in an action, together with a brief abstract of the successive steps in the action. [Cases: Appearance C=5; Federal Civil Procedure C=561.]

judgment docket. (1826) A book that a court clerk keeps for the entry or recordation of judgments, giving official notice of existing judgment liens to interested parties. — Also termed judgment book; judgment file; judgment record; judgment roll. [Cases: Judgment C=277, 284.]

2. A schedule of pending cases <the case is third on Monday's trial docket>. — Also termed court calendar; cause list; trial calendar. [Cases: Criminal Law C=632(2); Federal Civil Procedure C=1991; Trial C=9(1).]

DWOP docket. A list of cases that the court has set for possible dismissal for want of prosecution. — Also termed doorwop docket; DLOP docket. See dismissal for want of prosecution under DISMISSAL (1).

preferred docket. (1993) A list of cases set for trial, arranged in order of priority. — Criminal cases are, for example, generally given precedence over civil cases on the preferred docket because of the constitutional right to a speedy trial. [Cases: Criminal Law C=632(2); Trial C=13.]

3. DOCKET CALL <the agreed judgment was signed at the court's uncontested docket call on May 24>. 4. Parliamentary law. A list of each motion, report, election, and other business that awaits a deliberative assembly's consideration, from which a board or officer prepares and circulates an agenda for each meeting or for a series of upcoming meetings <in planning the meeting, the chair worked from an exhaustive docket>. See AGENDA. 5. A written abstract that provides specific information (usu. about something attached); esp., a label <check the docket to determine the goods' destination and value>. 6. Hist. A notary's attestation at the end of a deed or other instrument; esp., the attestation at the end of an instrument of seisin. — Also spelled docquet. See MANUS ALIENA.

docket, vb. (17c) 1. To make a brief entry in the docket of the proceedings and filings in a court case <to docket the filing date>. 2. To abstract and enter in a book <to docket a judgment>. 3. To schedule (a case) for trial or some other event <the case was docketed for a May trial>.

docket call. (1899) A court session in which attorneys (and sometimes parties) appear in court to report the status of their cases. — Often shortened to docket.

docket entry. A note made in the court's formal record of proceedings and filings. See DOCKET (1).

docket fee. See FEE (1).

docket number. (1866) A number that the court clerk assigns to a case on the court's docket.

docket order. See ORDER (2).

docket sheet. See DOCKET (1).

dockmaster. English law. An officer who directs the mooring and removal of ships to avoid the obstruction of commerce.

dock receipt. Maritime law. An interim document issued by a maritime carrier to evidence the delivery of goods at the dock. — Generally, a dock receipt entitles the designated person to receive a bill of lading, waybill, or other transport document. — Also termed dock warrant. See DOCUMENT OF TITLE. [Cases: Shipping C=106(6).]

dock sale. See SALE.

dock warrant. See DOCK RECEIPT.

doctor. 1. Hist. In Roman Catholic canon law, an honorary title for a scholar. 2. A title of a person who has acquired an advanced degree in academics, or has achieved an honorable distinction. 3. A physician. — Abbr. Dr. [Cases: Health C=110.]

Doctor of Jurisprudence. See JURIS DOCTOR.

Doctor of Law. See JURIS DOCTOR.

Doctors’ Commons. Hist. informal. The College of Advocates and Doctors of Law, which trained specialists in admiralty and ecclesiastical law and housed admiralty and ecclesiastical courts from the 16th century to the 19th. • The College was dissolved in the 1860s after its functions were absorbed by the High Court. — Sometimes written Doctors’ Common.

doctrine. (14c) 1. A principle, esp. a legal principle, that is widely adhered to. 2. Archaic holding (1). doctrine of acquired rights. See acquired-rights doctrine.

doctrine of adverse domination. See adverse-domination doctrine.

doctrine of approximation. (1845) A doctrine that authorizes a court to vary the details of a trust’s administration to preserve the trust and to carry out the donor’s intentions. — Also termed equitable doctrine of approximation. Cf. cy pres.

doctrine of capture. See rule of capture.

doctrine of claim differentiation. See claim differentiation.

doctrine of coercion. See coercion (3).

doctrine of completeness. See rule of optional completeness.

doctrine of constructive service. 1. See constructive service under service (2). 2. Employment law. The principle that a person who contracts to work for a definite period and is wrongfully discharged after beginning work may wait until the contract period expires and then sue on the contract for the wages that the person would have earned between the time of the discharge and the expiration of the contract. • In a jurisdiction that has adopted this principle, it is an exception to the mitigation-of-damages doctrine. — Often shortened to constructive service. Cf. mitigation-of-damages doctrine. [Cases: Labor and Employment C= 171, 239.] doctrine of contagion. See contagion.

doctrine of continuity. See continuity (2).

doctrine of contra non valentem: (kon tra non va-len-te-m). (1938) The rule that a limitations or prescriptive period does not begin to run against a plaintiff who is unable to act, usu. because of the defendant’s culpable act, such as concealing material information that would give rise to the plaintiff’s claim. — Often shortened to contra non valentem. [Cases: Limitation of Actions C= 43, 95.]

doctrine of contra proferentem. See contra proferentem.

doctrine of curative admissibility. A rule allowing a party to introduce otherwise inadmissible evidence to remove the prejudice caused by the improper admission of evidence that was offered by the opposing party. • The doctrine applies when a motion to strike cannot cure the prejudice created by the adverse party. — Also termed curative-admissibility doctrine. [Cases: Criminal Law C= 396; Evidence C= 155.]

doctrine of discovered peril. See last-clear-chance doctrine.

doctrine of election (18c). A doctrine holding that when a person has contracted with an agent without knowing of the agency and later learns the principal’s identity, the person may enforce the contract against either the agent or the principal, but not both. See election (1); election of remedies.

doctrine of entireties (en-ti-ar-teez). In customs law, the rule that when an entry consists of parts that assemble to form an article different from any of the parts, the proper classification will be of the whole article, rather than the individual components. • For example, an unassembled product consisting of an empty decorative glass, powdered wax in a cellophane bag, wicks, and fragrance, boxed together and sold as one product may be properly classified as a candle.

doctrine of equitable indemnity. See equitable indemnity under indemnity.

doctrine of equivalents. (1856) Patents. A judicially created theory for finding patent infringement when the accused process or product falls outside the literal scope of the patent claims. • The doctrine evolved to prevent parties from evading liability for patent infringement by making trivial changes to avoid the literal language of the patent claims. Graver Tank & Mfg. Co. v. Linde Air Prods. Co., 339 U.S. 605, 70 S.Ct. 854 (1950). In determining whether infringement exists under the doctrine, the court must first determine whether “the accused product or process contain[s] an element identical or equivalent to each claimed element of the patented invention.” Warner-Jenkinson Co. v. Hilton Davis Chem. Co., 520 U.S. 17, 39–40, 117 S.Ct. 1040, 1054 (1997). If it does, it infringes on the patent if the differing element performs substantially the same function in substantially the same way to get the same result as the patented product or process. Prosecution-history estoppel is not an absolute bar to a patentee who seeks to invoke the doctrine of equivalents to prove infringement on a claim that was voluntarily amended. Festo v. Shoketsu Kinzoku Kogyo Kabushiki Co., 535 U.S. 722, 122 S.Ct. 1831 (2002). — Also termed equivalents doctrine; doctrine of equivalence; doctrine of equivalency; doctrine of substantial equivalents; nonliteral infringement. Cf. literal infringement under infringement. [Cases: Patents C= 237.]

reverse doctrine of equivalents. The doctrine preventing infringement liability when the invention is substantially described by the claims of another's patent but performs the same or a similar function in a substantially different way.
doctrine of estates. Hist. The rule that a person cannot own land, but can merely own an estate in it, authorizing the person to hold it for some period of time. This doctrine answers the question of the duration of an estate. Cf. doctrine of tenures.

document of finality. See finality doctrine.

document of general average. Maritime law. A rule allowing a carrier to require cargo owners and the shipowner to contribute pro rata to the cost of protecting the ship and its cargo. [Cases: Shipping 1861-1862.

document of identification. Hist. English law. The rule that if a person traveling in a conveyance is injured in an accident that occurs because of someone else's negligence, and the driver of the conveyance is contributorily negligent, the passenger cannot claim damages against the tortfeasor since the passenger is "identified" with the contributorily negligent driver. The leading authority for this doctrine was Thorogood v. Bryan, 8 C.B. 115 (1849), but the Court of Appeal repudiated the doctrine as unsound in The Bernina [1887], 13 App. Cas. 1 (1888).

document of illusory coverage. A rule requiring an insurance policy to be interpreted so that it is not merely a delusion to the insured. Courts avoid interpreting insurance policies in such a way that an insured's coverage is never triggered and the insurer bears no risk. [Cases: Insurance 1901.

document of ineffective revocation. See physical-facts rule.

document of ineffectiveness. See relative revocation.

document of inherency. See inherency doctrine.

document of necessaries. (1870) 1. The rule holding a parent or spouse liable to anyone who sells goods or provides medical services to that person's child or spouse if the goods or services are required for sustenance, support, or healthcare. 2. Archaic. The common-law rule holding a husband or father liable to anyone who sells goods to his wife or child if the goods are required for sustenance or support. See necessaries. [Cases: Husband and Wife 19.

document of notice. See notice doctrine.

document of obligation. English law. The rule that if a foreign court of competent jurisdiction has adjudicated a certain sum to be due from one person to another, the liability to pay that sum becomes a legal obligation enforceable domestically by a debt action. Once the plaintiff proves the judgment, the burden shifts to the defendant to show why the obligation should not be performed. The doctrine was established by Baron Parke in Russell v. Smyth, 9 M. & W. 810, 819 (1842). — Often shortened to obligation.

Doe, John. See John Doe.

D'Oench Duhme doctrine (dench doom). The rule that estops a borrower from asserting a claim or defense against a federal successor to a failed financial institution — if the claim or defense is based on a side or secret agreement or representation — unless the agreements or representations have been (1) put into writing, (2) executed by the financial institution and borrower when the loan was issued, (3) approved by the financial institution's board of directors or loan committee, and (4) made a permanent part of the financial institution's records. D'Oench Duhme & Co. v. FDIC, 315 U.S. 447, 62 S.Ct. 676 (1942) (now partially codified at 12 USCA § 1823(e), and otherwise of questionable standing in light of O'Melveny & Myers v. FDIC, 512 U.S. 79, 114 S.Ct. 2048 (1994)). [Cases: Banks and Banking C= 505.]

do equity. (Of one who seeks equity must do equity.” See UNCLEAN-HANDS DOCTRINE. [Cases: Equity C= 66.]

d'office (daw-fee). [Law French] Of office; officially. • This is similar to the Latin phrase ex officio.

dog. Slang. 1. Something undesirable, esp. a lawsuit <the cases assigned to the new lawyer were all dogs>. 2. Securities. A stock or other investment that suffers public disdain and repeated price declines or poor performance.

dog-draw. Hist. The apprehension of someone chasing a deer in a forest with a dog.

"Dog-draw is an apparent apprehension of an offender against venison in the forest. There are four kinds of them observed by Manwood, part. 2, cap. 18, num. 9, of his Forest Laws, that is, dog-draw, stable-stand, back-bear, and bloody-hand. Dog-draw is, when one is found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound led in his hand." Termes de la Ley 181 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

dogma (dawg ma or dahg). n. A philosophy, opinion, or tenet that is strongly held, is believed to be authoritative, and is followed steadfastly, usu. to the exclusion of other approaches to the same subject matter; a formally stated and proclaimed doctrine of faith. Pl. dogmas, dogmata (-ma-ta).

DOHSA (doh-sha). abbr. DEATH ON THE HIGH SEAS ACT.

doing business. The act of engaging in business activities; specif., the carrying out of a series of similar acts for the purpose of realizing a pecuniary benefit, or otherwise accomplishing a goal, or doing a single act with the intention of starting a series of such acts; esp., a nonresident's participation in sufficient business activities in a foreign state to allow the state's courts to exercise personal jurisdiction over the nonresident. See business (1); doing-business statute; MINIMUM CONTACTS; LONG-ARM STATUTE. [Cases: Courts C= 12(2.15).]

doing-business statute. A state law defining the acts that constitute undertaking business there, usu. for the purpose of establishing the circumstances under which the state's courts may exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident. See MINIMUM CONTACTS; LONG-ARM STATUTE. [Cases: Courts C= 12(2.15).]

DOJ. abbr. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

DOL. abbr. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

dol (dohl or do). n. [French “deceit; fraud”] Civil law. Fraud committed in inducing another to enter into a contract. See fraud in the inducement under FRAUD. Cf. fraude.

dole, n. 1. A share of something that is jointly owned but divisible. 2. Slang. Welfare benefits received from a governmental agency. 3. Scots law. Criminal intent; the equivalent of mens rea.

do, lego (doh, lee-goh). [Latin] I give and bequeath. • In Roman law, this was the phrase used to make a bequest.

do-land. Hist. Jointly owned land in which each owner or user has an assigned portion with distinct landmarks. • The share may be allotted annually on a rotating basis or permanently. — Also termed dole-meadow; dole-moor.

do-meadow. See dole-land.

do-moor. See dole-land.

Dole test. A four-part test used to determine the constitutionality of a condition attached by Congress under its Spending Clause power to the receipt of federal money. • The spending must be in pursuit of the general welfare, and the condition must be unambiguous, related to some federal interest, and not barred by any other provision of the Constitution. South Dakota v. Dole, 483 U.S. 203, 107 S.Ct. 2793 (1987). [Cases: United States C= 82(2).]

doli capax (doh·li kay-paks), adj. [Latin “capable of wrong”] Roman law. Capable of committing a crime or tort; esp., old enough to determine right from wrong. — Also termed capax dolii. Cf. DOLI INCAPAX.

and fourteen is subject to much uncertainty: for the infant shall, generally speaking, be judged prima facie innocent; yet if he was dolus capax, and could discern between good and evil at the time of the offence committed, he may be convicted and undergo judgment and execution of death, though he hath not attained to years of puberty or discretion. 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 452-53 (1765).

doli incapax (doh-lit-in-ke-a-paks), adj. [Latin "incapable of wrong"] Roman law. Incapable of committing a crime or tort. — Also termed incapax doli. Cf. DOLI CAPAX.

dolo (doh-lah), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. Fraud or deceit; bad or mischievous design.

dolose (doh-lohs or doh-lohs), [Latin] Hist. Fraudulent; deceitful; malicious.

dolus (doh-lahs). [Latin "device; artifice"] Roman & civil law. 1. Fraud or deceit; conduct intended to deceive someone; bad faith. • Although there may be dolus without fraud, fraud always includes dolus. Cf. cases (1); culpa (1). 2. Intentional aggression; willful injury, esp. to another's property. — Also termed dolus malus; fraus.

"In the twelfth century the resuscitated Roman law introduced some new ideas. Men began to contrast, as Glanvill does, civil with criminal causes, to speak of dolus and culpa and casus, and to lay stress on the psychical element in crime." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 477 (2d ed. 1899).

"Although the word malitia is not unknown to the Roman lawyers, the usual and technical name for wrongful intent is dolus, or more specifically dolus malus. Dolus and culpa are two forms of mens rea. In a narrower sense, however, dolus includes merely that particular variety of wrongful intent which we term fraud — that is to say, the intent to deceive. From this limited sense it was extended to cover all forms of willful wrongdoing. The English term fraud has never received an equally wide extension." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 385 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

dolus bonus (doh-lahs boh-nas), [Latin "good deceit"] Shrewdness or justifiable deceit, as when a person lies to an attacker to prevent an assault. • Dolus bonus does not produce any legal consequences.

dolus dans locum contractui (doh-lahs danz-loh-kam kon-trak-choo-tee), [Latin] Fraud (or deceit) giving rise to the contract; specif., a fraudulent misrepresentation that, having been made by one of the parties to the contract and relied on by the other, was actually instrumental in inducing the latter to enter into the contract.

dolus incidens (doh-lahs in-si-den-s). [Law Latin] Hist. Fraud incidental; fraud that does not affect the essential terms of an agreement.

dolus malus (doh-las mal-as). [Latin "bad or evil deceit"] Evil or fraudulent design or intent; an unjustifiable deceit.

DOMA. abbr. DEFENSE OF MARriage ACT.

domain (doh-mayn), n. (15c) 1. The territory over which sovereignty is exercised <the 19th-century domains of the British Empire>. 2. An estate in land <the family domain is more than 6,000 acres>. 3. The complete and absolute ownership of land <his domain over this land has now been settled>. See EMINENT DOMAIN; PUBLIC DOMAIN.

domain name. The words and characters that website owners designate for their registered Internet addresses.

• All domain names have at least two levels. The first-level domain name identifies the registrant's category as, e.g., a commercial site (.com), a governmental institution (.gov), an educational institution (.edu), a nonprofit group (.org), or a discussion group (.net). The second-level domain name is the unique identifier for the user in a particular category <rhapsangel.com> <rhapsangel.org>. A second-level domain name may be protected under trademark law but first-level domain names are not. In some circumstances, the entire domain name may be validly registered as a trademark. But trademark rights are not automatically created by registering a domain name. See INTERNET-PROTOCOL ADDRESS. [Cases: Telecommunications <> 1330.] domain-name infringement. See INFRINGEMENT.

domboc. See DOOMBOOK.

• The doctrine was greatly cut back six years after it was announced, when the Supreme Court ruled that a speculative First Amendment chilling effect does not justify federal-court intervention in state affairs. Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 91 S.Ct. 746 (1971). [Cases: Courts <> 508.]

domebook. See DOOMBOOK.

Doomesday Book. (doomz-day). The census or survey, ordered by William the Conqueror and substantially completed in 1086, of England's landholdings, buildings, people, and livestock. — Abbr. D.B. — Also spelled Doomsday Book.

"Domesday Book had several variant names — Liber de Wintonia, Rotulius Wintoniae, Scriptura Thesauri Regis, Liber Regis, Liber Judicarius, Censualis Angliae, Anglae Notitia et Lustratio, Rotulus Regius, Liber de Thesaurio, Exchequer Domesday... Domesday Book had as its main object a fiscal one, and a limited fiscal one at that. Beyond that it does not profess to go, and if we get any further information from it as to contemporary law and society, we get it as an indirect consequence." Percy H. Winfield, The Chief Sources of English Legal History 110-11 (1925).

domestic partnership. 1. A nonmarital relationship between two persons of the same or opposite sex who live together as a couple for a significant period of time. 2. A relationship that an employer or governmental entity recognizes as equivalent to marriage for the purpose of extending employee-partner benefits otherwise reserved for the spouses of employees. Cf. CIVIL UNION; same-sex marriage under MARRIAGE (i). [Cases: Marriage ⊑ 13, 17.5, 22, 54.] — domestic partner, n.

domestic partnership law. A legislative enactment, often a municipal ordinance, that grants unmarried adults living in economically or emotionally based relationships, regardless of their sexual preference, some of the rights of a civil marriage without attempting to change the traditional definition of marriage. [Cases: Marriage ⊑ 54.]

domestic-partnership period. The period beginning when domestic partners begin living together and ending when the partners stop sharing a primary residence. See DOMESTIC PARTNERSHIP.

domestic-partnership property. See PROPERTY.

Domestic Policy Council. See OFFICE OF POLICY DEVELOPMENT.

domestic relations. See FAMILY LAW (1).

domestic-relations court. See family court under COURT.

domestic-relations exception. The exclusion of suits regarding the granting of divorce, alimony, and child custody from federal diversity jurisdiction. • The domestic-relations exemption to federal diversity jurisdiction originated as dictum in Barber v. Barber, 62 U.S. (21 How.) 582 (1858). Federal courts do not have jurisdiction to grant divorces, award alimony, or determine child custody. In general, matters of domestic relations are left to the states. But the federal courts may hear other diversity matters involving family members, such as tort claims or suits seeking to enforce alimony orders. Ankenbrand v. Richards, 504 U.S. 689, 112 S.Ct. 2206 (1992). [Cases: Federal Courts ⊑ 8.]

domicellus (dom-a-sel-us), n. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A king’s natural son in France. 2. A young lord. • Domicellus, is an old obsolete ... Word, anciently given as an Appellation or Addition to the King’s natural Sons in France, and sometimes to the eldest Sons of Noblemen there; from whence we borrowed these Additions: As several natural Children of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, are stiled Domicelli by the Charter of Legitimation. ... But according to Thorn, the Domicelli were only the better Sort of Servants in Monasteries.” Giles Jacob, A New Law-Dictionary (8th ed. 1762).

domicile (dom-a-sil), n. (15c) 1. The place at which a person has been physically present and that the person regards as home; a person’s true, fixed, principal, and permanent home, to which that person intends to return and remain even though currently residing elsewhere. • A person has a settled connection with his or her domicile for legal purposes, either because that place is home or because the law has so designated that place. — Also termed permanent abode; habitancy. [Cases: Domicile ⊑ 1; Federal Courts ⊑ 282.]

“By domicile we mean home, the permanent home; and if you do not understand your permanent home, I am afraid that no illustration drawn from foreign writers or foreign languages will very much help you to it.” Whicker v. Hume (1858) 7 H.L.C. 124, 160 (per Lord Cranworth).

“it is difficult to give a definition of domicile that will cover at once domicile by operation of law and domicile by choice. The idea of domicile certainly includes the idea of place and the idea of settled connection with the place. Domicile of
2. The residence of a person or corporation for legal purposes. — Also termed (in sense 2) legal residence; domicile by operation of law. Cf. residence; place of business. — Also spelled (in BrE) domicile.

“Tax statutes frequently speak in terms of residence, intending it to be the equivalent of domicile. For example, the New York estate tax speaks in terms of residence and non-residence. Similarly ... the United States imposes an estate tax on any resident or citizen of the U.S. Although both statutes use the term ‘residence,’ its usage has been construed to mean ‘domicile.’” Robert C. Lawrence III, International Tax and Estate Planning § 1.03(a)(3), at 8-9 (1989).

After-acquired domicile. (1858) A domicile established after the facts relevant to an issue arose. • An after-acquired domicile cannot be used to establish jurisdiction or choice of law.

Commercial domicile. (1839) 1. A domicile acquired by a nonresident corporation conducting enough activities to permit taxation of the corporation’s property or activities located outside the bounds of the taxing state. 2. A domicile acquired by a person or company freely residing or carrying on business in enemy territory or enemy-occupied territory. — Also termed quasi-domicile.

Corporate domicile. (1890) The place considered by law as the center of corporate affairs, where the corporation’s functions are discharged; the legal home of a corporation, usu. its state of incorporation or the state in which it maintains its principal place of business. • For purposes of determining whether diversity jurisdiction exists in federal court, a corporation is considered a citizen of both its state of incorporation and the state of its principal place of business. See Diversity of Citizenship. [Cases: Corporations C=52, 503(1); Federal Courts C=296; Taxation C=2562, 3486.]

domicile of choice. (1878) 1. A domicile established by physical presence within a state or territory, coupled with the intention to make it home. [Cases: Domicile C=4.] 2. The domicile that a person chooses after reaching majority or being emancipated.

domicile of origin. (1831) The domicile of a person at birth, derived from the custodial parent or imposed by law. — Also termed natural domicile; domicile of birth; original domicile. See necessary domicile. [Cases: Domicile C=3.] “Domicil is sometimes divided into domicil of birth, that by operation of law, and that of choice. Domicil of origin in modern times is domicil in the place where his parents at his birth were domiciled.” Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 71, at 105 n.2 (5th ed. 1878).

Domicile of origin is the domicile the law assigns to each person at birth, usually the domicile of the father in the case of a legitimate child and of the mother in the case of an illegitimate child. Domicile of origin has particular significance in English law. If one abandons one’s domicile of choice without attaining a new one, the domicile of origin “revives” until a new domicile of choice is attained. In contrast, U.S. jurisdictions generally will not find a domicile abandoned until a new one has been adopted.” Robert C. Lawrence III, International Tax and Estate Planning § 1.03(a)(1), at 4 (1989).

domicile of succession. (1874) The domicile that determines the succession of a person’s estate.

domicile of trustee. The domicile where a trustee is appointed. [Cases: Trusts C=113.]

elected domicile. A contractually agreed domicile between parties for purposes of the contract.

Foreign domicile. A domicile established by a citizen or subject of one sovereignty within the territory of another.

Matrimonial domicile. A domicile that a husband and wife, as a married couple, have established as their home. — Also termed marital domicile; matrimonial home. [Cases: Divorce C=62; Husband and Wife C=3(1).]

Municipal domicile. A person’s residence in a county or municipality, as distinguished from the person’s state or national domicile.

National domicile. A domicile considered in terms of a particular nation rather than a locality or subdivision of a nation.

Natural domicile. See domicile of origin.

Necessary domicile. A domicile legally fixed and independent of choice, as in the domicile of origin. See domicile of origin.

Original domicile. See domicile of origin.

Quasi-domicile. See commercial domicile.

Quasi-national domicile. A person’s state of residence, as distinguished from the person’s national or local domicile.

domiciliary (dom-er-sil-ee-er-ee), adj. (18c) Of or relating to domicile <domiciliary jurisdiction>.

domiciliary (dom-er-sil-ee-er-ee), n. (1845) A person who resides in a particular place with the intention of making it a principal place of abode; one who is domiciled in a particular jurisdiction. Cf. resident; citizen (1).

dominant estate. See estate (4). dominant-jurisdiction principle. (1995) The rule that the court in which a case is first filed maintains the suit, to the exclusion of all other courts that would also have jurisdiction. [Cases: Courts 1145.] dominant-property. See dominant estate under estate (4). dominant tenant. See tenant. dominant tenement. See dominant estate under estate (4). dominate, vb. (17c) 1. To master (someone or something); to control (someone or something). 2. Predominate. dominating patent. See fencing patent under patent (3). domination. Patents. The effect that an earlier patent (usu. a basic one) has on a later patent (esp. one for improvements on the patented device) because the earlier patent's claims are so broad or generic that the later patent's invention will always read on the earlier patent's claims, resulting in infringement. • Because the patent system is based on exclusion of others from an invention's subject matter, the earlier, basic patent's claims "dominate" the later-invented improvement. If the improvement is patented and worked, it infringes the basic patent. But the basic patent's owner cannot practice the improvement without infringing on the improvement's patent. This stand-off effect encourages improvement and basic-patentees to seek licenses or cross-licenses with each other. See blocking patent. dominical (do-min-a-kal), adj. Of or relating to a Sunday; of or relating to the Lord's day.
Dominican divorce. See Mexican divorce under divorce. dominicide (do-min-a-sid), n. [fr. Latin dominus "master" + caedo "to kill"] Hist. 1. The crime of killing one's master. 2. A person who kills his or her master.
dominicum (da-min-a-kam), n. [Latin "domain"] 1. Hist. Domain; lordship. 2. Hist. Land ownership, esp. that retained by a lord for his own possession, as distinguished from the rights given to a tenant. 3. Eccles. law. A church or other religious building. domination. (14c) 1. Control: possession <dominion over the car>. 2. Sovereignty <dominion over the nation>. 3. Foreign dominion.
dominium (do-min-ee-um), n. [fr. Latin dominus "lord"] 1. Roman & civil law. Absolute ownership including the right to possession and use; a right of control over property that the holder might retain or transfer at pleasure. • Dominium was subject to any servitudes, planning restrictions, etc. This term gradually came to also mean merely ownership of property, as distinguished from the right to possession or use.

"Dominium is the Roman term for the rights of an owner against all the world: and the contrast of dominium and obligatio is the nearest approach that can be made, in classical Roman language, to the distinction marked by the modern terms in rem and in personam." Frederick Pollock, A First Book of Jurisprudence 83 (1896).

"The one word dominium has to assume so many shades of meaning. The tenant qui tenet terram in dominio, is dominus rei and has dominium rei; but then he has above him one who is his dominus, and for the rights of this lord over him and over his land there is no other name than dominium." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 4 (2d ed. 1899).
dominium directum et utile (da-min-ee-um di-rek-tam et yoo-ta-lee), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. Complete ownership of property, including both title and exclusive use.
dominium eminentem (da-min-ee-um em-a-nenz), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. Eminent domain. See eminent domain.
dominium ex jure quiritium (da-min-ee-um eks joor-ee kwii-rish ee-um), Roman law. Ownership exercised by Roman citizens in the most complete manner (plena jure), the property being domestic (not foreign) and having been acquired according to all the forms of law. — Also termed dominium quiritarium; dominium legitimum.
dominium legifim (la-jit-i-nam), See dominium ex jure quiritium.
dominium plenum (da-min-ee-um plee-nam), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. Full ownership combining dominium directum and dominium utile. — Also termed plenum dominium.
dominium quiritium (kwii-ra-tair ee-um). See dominium ex jure quiritium.

dominium utile (da-min-ee-am yoo-ta-lee), n. [Law Latin] Civil law. Equitable ownership: a beneficial right to use property; the right of a tenant to use the soil and its profits.

“The special characteristic of Feudal land was that ownership in it was split into two kinds, the dominium directum of the superior (lord) and the dominium utile of the vassal. The feudalists correctly insisted that this was not a form of joint ownership, not yet of ownership burdened with an easement or a ‘usufruct’, but that two kinds of ownership were present, and that each of these persons, the lord and the vassal, was properly called ‘owner’ or dominus. The lord’s dominium directum gave him a reversion in the case of forfeititure of failure of issue and the enjoyment of whatever the naturalia and accidens were. The vassal’s dominium utile gave him the immediate enjoyment of the land itself.” Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 148 (1936).

nudum dominium (da-min-ee-am n’yoo-dam). [Latin “bare ownership”] Roman Law. Ownership divorced from present possession or use.

plenum dominium. See dominium plenum.

“The Latin word for ownership, dominium, is particularly confusing, since in medieval times it is also the word for lordship.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 255 (3d ed. 1990).

domino volente (da-min-oo-voo-len-tay), [Law Latin “the owner being willing”] With the owner’s consent.

dominus (do-min-iss), n. [Latin “lord”]. 1. Roman law. An owner of a thing or inheritance. 2. Roman law. The title of the emperor in the later empire. 3. Hist. A lord; a feudal superior, as in dominus rex (“the lord of the king”), dominus capitalis (“a chief lord”), dominus medius (“an intermediate lord”), and dominus ligius (“a liege lord”). 4. Hist. donum (doh-nam), n. [Latin “a gift”] Roman law. A gift.

donum gratuitum. See gratuitous gift under gift.

doom, n. [Hist. 1. A statute or law. 2. A judgment; esp., a sentence in a criminal matter. 3. Justice; fairness. 4. A trial; the process of adjudicating.

“The word ‘doom’ is, perhaps, best translated as ‘judgment.’ It survived in occasional use until the fourteenth century. Wyclif’s translation of the Bible, rendering the verse, ‘For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged.’ as ‘For in what doom ye demen, ye shuln be demed.’ The distinction which we make to-day between the legislator, who makes the law, and the judge, who interprets, declares and applies it, was not known to our Anglo-Saxon ancestors. The dooms were judgments in the sense that they were declarations of the law of the people.” W.J.V. Windeyer, Lectures on Legal History 1 (2d ed. 1949).

doombook, n. [fr. Saxon dombeoc] Hist. A code, compiled under Alfred, containing maxims of common law, judicial forms, and criminal penalties. • The code existed until the reign of Edward IV, when it was lost. — Also termed domebook (doom buk), dombooc; liber judicallis of Alfred.

dorsum (dor-som). [Latin] Hist. The back. • This term usu. appeared as part of the phrase in dorso to indicate that an instrument had been signed on the back. In dorso recordi, for example, meant “on the back of the record.”

“in the first place when the payee, or person to whom or whose order such bill of exchange or promissory note is payable, may by endorsement, or writing his name in dorso or on the back of it, assign over his whole property to the bearer, or else to another person by name ...” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 468 (1766).

“Dos was a gift made to the husband on the part of the wife as her contribution towards the expenses of the joint establishment. It was made by the wife or by another person on her behalf, usually before marriage and conditionally on the marriage taking place; but it might also be made or increased after marriage.” R.W. Lee, The Elements of Roman Law 150 (4th ed. 1956).

dos adventitia (dos ad-ven-tish ee-ə). [Latin] Roman law. A dowry brought by a bride to her husband when furnished by someone other than the bride or her father.

dot (dot or dawt), n. [French fr. Latin dos] Civil law. Dowry: the property that a woman brings to the marriage to help with marriage expenses. • The income is usu. controlled by the husband, while the principal remains the wife’s separate property.
dotage (doh-tij). 1. Senility; feebleness of a person’s mind in old age. 2. Foolish affection; excessive fondness. dotal (doht-al), adj. Of or relating to dowry. See dowry.

“[S]ome have ascribed the introduction of dower to the Normans, as a branch of their local tenures; though we cannot expect any feudal reason for its invention, since it was not a part of the pure, primitive, simple law of feuds, but was first of all introduced into that system (wherein it was called ... dotalitium) by the emperor Frederick the second; who was contemporary with our king Henry III. It is possible therefore that it might be with us the relic of a Danish custom: since, according to the historians of that country, dower was introduced into Denmark by Swein, the father of our Canute the great, out of gratitude to the Danish ladies, who sold all their jewels to ransom him when taken prisoner by the Vandals.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 129-30 (1766). dotal property. See property.
dotation (doht-tay-shan), n. 1. The act of giving a dowry.

double jeopardy. (1847) The fact of being prosecuted or sentenced twice for substantially the same offense. • Double jeopardy is prohibited by the Fifth Amendment. In 2005, the United Kingdom abolished the rule for certain serious offenses, such as murder and hijacking. A court may quash an acquittal and order a retrial if new and compelling evidence of the defendant’s guilt is discovered, and the evidence was not available before the acquittal. Only one retrial is allowed. Cf. former jeopardy. [Cases: Double Jeopardy ☑132.1.]

Double Jeopardy Clause. (1928) The Fifth Amendment provision stating, "nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb." • The clause, which was ratified in 1791, does not prevent postacquittal appeals by the government if those appeals could not result in the defendant’s being subjected to a second trial for substantially the same offense before a second fact-trier. See United States v. Wilson, 420 U.S. 332, 95 S.Ct. 1013 (1975). [Cases: Double Jeopardy ☑2.] double patenting. 1. Obtaining two patents covering the same invention. • An inventor is not allowed to receive more than one patent on one invention. 37 CFR 1.56. • Also termed same-invention double patenting. [Cases: Patents ☑120.] 2. The issuance or obtaining of a patent for an invention that differs from an already patented invention only in some unpatentable detail. • Also termed obviousness double patenting. [Cases: Patents ☑120.]

judicially created double patenting. Attempting to patent an invention that is an obvious variation of another invention by the same inventor when the first invention has already been patented or has a pending application. • Double patenting is grounds for rejecting a patent application, limiting the term of a patent through a terminal disclaimer, or invalidating a patent. In re Longi, 225 U.S.P.Q. 645 (Fed. Cir. 1985). A double-patenting challenge can be overcome by filing a terminal disclaimer. 37 CFR 1.321. • Also termed obviousness-type double patenting. [Cases: Patents ☑120.]

same-invention double patenting. See statutory double patenting.

statutory double patenting. Attempting to patent an invention that is the same subject matter as another invention by the same inventor, when the first invention has already been patented or has a pending patent application. • Any double patenting is grounds for invalidating a patent claim or rejecting a claim in a patent application. 35 USCA § 101. • Also termed same-invention double patenting.

double value. Twice the value of something; specif., a penalty payable by a tenant to a landlord of twice the yearly value of lands held by the tenant, who refused to leave when the landlord provided written notice of intent to possess the property. • The penalty was provided under the Landlord and Tenant Act (1730). St. 4 Geo. 2. ch. 28, s. 1. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant $216.]

double voucher. In a common-recovery suit, a voucher first by the fictitious tenant to the real tenant, and then by the real tenant to the common vouchee. • The use of a fictitious tenant was necessary because if the recovery had been obtained directly against the real tenant, it would be effective only to the limited extent that the real tenant actually possessed an interest in the estate. But if recovery was obtained against another party, it would be effective against any latent interest that the real tenant might assert in the estate. See common recovery.

The recovery, here described, is with a single voucher only; but sometimes it is with double . . . or farther voucher, as the exigency of the case may require. And indeed it is now usual always to have a recovery with double voucher at the least; by first conveying an estate of freehold to any indifferent person, against whom the praecipe is brought, and then he vouches the tenant in tail, who vouches over the common vouchee. For, if a recovery be had immediately against tenant in tail, it bars only such estate in the premises of which he is then actually seized; whereas if the recovery be had against another person, and the tenant in tail be vouched, it bars every latent right and interest which he may have in the lands recovered. 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 359 (1766).

dowager (dow-ah-jar). A widow holding property or title — esp. a life estate in real property — received from her deceased husband.

dowager-queen. The widow of the king of England. • If she is also the mother of the reigning monarch, she may also by known as a queen mother. — Also written dowager queen. — Also termed queen dowager; queen mother.

“A queen dowager is the widow of the king, and as such enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as queen consort. But it is not high treason to conspire her death, or to violate her chastity because the succession to the crown is not thereby endangered. Yet still, no man can marry a queen dowager without special licence from the king, on pain of forfeiting his lands and goods. . . . A queen dowager, when married again to a subject, doth not lose her regal dignity, as peeresses dowager do their peerage when they marry commoners.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 217 (1765).

dower (dow-ar). (1c) At common law, a wife’s right, upon her husband’s death, to a life estate in one-third of the land that he owned in fee. • With few exceptions, the wife could not be deprived of dower by any transfer made by her husband during his lifetime. Although most states have abolished dower, many states retaining the concept have expanded the wife’s share to a life estate in all the land that her husband owned in fee. — Also termed downment, maritagium. Cf. curtesy. [Cases: Dower and Curtesy $1–118.]

consummuate dower (kan-som-it or kahn-s-so-mit). A widow’s interest in her deceased husband’s estate until that interest is legally assigned to her. — Also termed dower consummuate. [Cases: Dower and Curtesy $54.]

dower ad ostium ecclesiae (ad ahs-tee-ahm ee-klee-zah). A endowment of dower made by a man to his wife at the church door or porch, usu. as part of the marriage ceremony.

“Dower ad ostium ecclesiae . . . . This appears to have been the original English dower . . . . It was formerly the most usual species of dower, and, though latterly fallen into disuse, was not abolished until the statute of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 105, s. 13 . . . . The wife might be endowed of personality or goods as well as of lands, and a trace of this ancient kind of dower is still distinctly preserved in the marriage ritual of the church of England, in the expression ‘with all my worldly goods I thee endow.’” 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Dictionary 520 (2d ed. 1867).

dower by custom. Hist. Dower that is determined by custom rather than the general law. — Also termed dower by particular custom.

drago doctrine. The principle asserted by Luis Drago, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Argentine Republic, in a December 29, 1902 letter to the Argentine Minister in Washington, in which Drago, responding to the forcible coercion of Venezuela's unpaid loans by Great Britain and others, argued that no public debt should be collected from a sovereign state by force or through the occupation of American territory by a foreign power. The subject was presented at the Hague Conference of 1907, when a modified version of the Drago doctrine was adopted.

Drain, n. 1. The act of drawing a liquid off gradually; the act of emptying. 2. The act of gradually exhausting. 3. A conduit for draining liquid, as a ditch or a pipe.

drain, vb. 1. To draw (a liquid) off gradually <the farmer drained water from the property>. 2. To exhaust gradually <the facility has drained the area's natural resources>. 3. To empty gradually <the water drained>.

Drainage district. A political subdivision authorized to levy assessments for making drainage improvements within its area. [Cases: Drains $\rightarrow$ 12.] "In the United States there are numerous special districts that administer drainage projects. They are typically formed under state law after a local election or petition showing consent of a majority of affected landowners. The projects are usually publicly financed, and assessments are made against all property benefited, whether or not all individual landowners have consented. Such projects can increase the agricultural capacity of drained lands and provide 'new' land for buildings and other improvements ... . Special statutes governing drainage districts generally exempt them from restraints ... But if private property rights are taken or if others are damaged, compensation must be paid." David H. Getches, Water Law in a Nutshell 301 (3d ed. 1997).

drainage rights. The interest that a property owner has in the natural drainage and flow of water on the land. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses $\rightarrow$ 119.]
dram (dram). 1. An apothecary measurement of fluid equal to an eighth of an ounce. [Cases: Weights and Measures $\rightarrow$ 3.] 2. A small amount of anything, esp. liquor.

drama, n. 1. A presentation of a story portrayed by words and actions or actions alone; a play. Cf. dramatic composition.

"The term [dram] is applied to compositions which imitate action by representing the personages introduced in them as real and as employed in the action itself. The varieties of the drama differ more or less widely, both as to the objects of imitation and as to the means used in the imitation. But they all agree as to the method or manner which is essential to the dramatic art, viz., imitation in the way of action." 7 Encyclopaedia Britannica 338 (9th ed. 1907).

2. An event or series of events having conflicting and exciting elements that capture people's attention.

drama-pricing. A seller's tactic of dramatically dropping the price of something, esp. real estate, to attract a buyer. — Also termed trauma-pricing.

dramatic composition. Copyright. A literary work setting forth a story, incident, or scene intended to be performed by actors, often with a musical accompaniment. Cf. drama (1). [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property $\rightarrow$ 7.] dramatic work. See work (2).

dram shop. Archaic. A place where alcoholic beverages are sold; a bar or saloon. — Also spelled dram-shop; drams shop. — Also termed grog-shop; drinking shop.

dram-shop act. (1859) A statute allowing a plaintiff to recover damages from a commercial seller of alcoholic beverages for the plaintiff's injuries caused by a customer's intoxication. — Also termed civil-liability act; civil-damage law. [Cases: Intoxicating Liquors $\rightarrow$ 282–324.]

"Largely at the behest of the temperance movement, statutes (called 'dram shop acts') were enacted in many states which imposed some form of civil liability on those engaged in the business of selling such beverages in favor of third persons injured thereby ... . At one time, almost half the states had such laws; today, that number seems to be declining. ... A growing minority of states have overthrown the common law rule and have created a common law dram shop action. In most of these jurisdictions, liability is predicated on statutes which regulate the liquor business and prohibit certain sales by liquor licensees (to minors, intoxicated persons, etc.) thus, where the sale is unlawful, it is negligence per se ... ." Edward J. Kionka, Torts in a Nutshell 293–94 (2d ed. 1992).
dram-shop liability. (1995) Civil liability of a commercial seller of alcoholic beverages for personal injury caused by an intoxicated customer. • Claims based on a similar type of liability have been brought against private citizens for personal injury caused by an intoxicated social guest. [Cases: Intoxicating Liquors ⊝ 282-324.]

draw, vb. (13c) 1. To create and sign (a draft) <draw a check to purchase goods>. 2. To prepare or frame (a legal document) <draw up a will>. 3. To take out (money) from a bank, treasury, or depository <she drew $6,000 from her account>. 4. To select (a jury) <the lawyers began voir dire and had soon drawn a jury>.

drawback. A government allowance or refund on import duties when the importer reexports imported products rather than selling them domestically. 19 USCA § 1313. [Cases: Customs Duties ⊝ 100.]

drawee (draw-ee). (18c) The person or entity that a draft is directed to and that is requested to pay the amount stated on it. • The drawee is usu. a bank that is directed to pay a sum of money on an instrument. — Also termed payor. [Cases: Banks and Banking ⊝ 137; Bills and Notes ⊝ 24.]

drawee bank. See payor bank under BANK.

drawer. (17c) One who directs a person or entity, usu. a bank, to pay a sum of money stated in an instrument — for example, a person who writes a check; the maker of a note or draft. See MAKER. [Cases: Banks and Banking ⊝ 137; Bills and Notes ⊝ 23.]

drawing. 1. Patents. A specially prepared figure included with a patent application to explain and describe the invention. • A drawing is required when necessary to understand the invention. 35 USCA § 113. [Cases: Patents ⊝ 100.] 2. Trademarks. A graphic or textual depiction of a trademark, filed as part of an application for the mark to be placed on the primary register. • The drawing serves as the element that is published in the Official Gazette. It must include the applicant’s name and address, the type of goods or services it will identify, and the date of first use or a statement of intent to use it in commerce. [Cases: Trademarks ⊝ 1282.]

formal drawing. A drawing that complies with the formatting requirements of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, as set forth in 37 CFR 1.84, and is stamped “Approved” by the PTO Drafter. Cf. informal drawing. [Cases: Patents ⊝ 100.]

front-page drawing. A drawing submitted with the patent application and selected by the examiner as the application’s representative drawing. • The drawing is reproduced on the front page of the published application or patent. [Cases: Patents ⊝ 100.]

informal drawing. A drawing that does not comply with the formatting requirements of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office. • A drawing may be submitted as informal by the patent applicant, or declared informal by the PTO Drafter. Cf. formal drawing.

original drawing. A drawing submitted with the original application.

special-form drawing. A drawing of a trademark that contains some graphical element, such as a logo, a picture, or a special type style. • A stylized or special-form drawing must be submitted in black-and-white, with a description of the colors to be used on the final mark. — Also termed stylized drawing.

substitute drawing. A drawing submitted after the original application has been filed. • A substitute drawing is often a formal drawing filed to replace an informal drawing. [Cases: Patents ⊝ 100.]

typed drawing. A drawing of a trademark that is purely textual, with no graphical component. • A typed drawing consists solely of the words, letters, and numbers that make up the mark, typed in all-caps. — Also termed typed-form drawing.

drawing account. See ACCOUNT.

drawing lots. (13c) An act of selection or decision-making based on pure chance, with the result depending on the particular lot drawn. • Jurors are usu. instructed by the court not to base their verdict on drawing lots or similar methods of chance.

drawlatch. Hist. A thief; a robber who waits until homes are empty, then draws the homes’ door latches to steal what is inside.

drayage. A charge for transporting property.

DRE. abbr. DRUG-RECOGNITION EXPERT.

dread-disease insurance. See INSURANCE.

dreit dreit. See DROIT-DROIT.

D reorganization. See REORGANIZATION (2).

drift of the forest. Hist. A periodic examination of forest cattle by officers who drive them to an enclosed place to determine their ownership or common status.

“Drift of the forest is nothing else but an exact view or examination taken once, twice, or oftener in a year as occasion shall require, what beasts there are in the forest, to the end that the common in the forest be not overcharged, that the beasts of foreigners that have no common there be not permitted, and that beasts not commingable may be put out.” Termes de la Ley 185–87 (1st Am. ed. 1812).

drift-stuff. Any material floating at random in water without a discoverable source. • Drift-stuff is usu. the property of the riparian owner.

drilling contract. Oil & gas. A well-drilling agreement between a drilling contractor, who owns drilling rigs and associated equipment, and the owner or lessor of the mineral rights. • The contract spells out the rights and duties of the parties. In general, the more control the interest-owner retains over the contractor, the more liability the owner is exposed to for damages the drilling causes. See DAYWORK DRILLING CONTRACT; FOOTAGE DRILLING CONTRACT. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ⊝ 109.]

turnkey drilling contract. Oil & gas. A drilling contract under which the drilling contractor promises to perform specified functions for an agreed price. • The lease operator has little or no discretion to control the drilling contractor, and so assumes little or no liability for damages the drilling may cause. [Cases: Mines and Minerals C-109, 120.]

drilling-delay rental clause. Oil & gas. A provision in an oil-and-gas lease giving the lessee the right to maintain the lease from period to period during the primary term by paying delay rentals instead of starting drilling operations. • Lessees use drilling-delay rental clauses because courts have said that they obviate any implied covenant to drill a test well on the premises. They are accepted by lessors because they provide for periodic income from the lease. See "or" lease, "unless" lease under LEASE. [Cases: Mines and Minerals C-78.1(3.)]

"The purpose of the lease drilling-delay rental clause is to ensure that the lessee has no obligation to drill during the primary term by negating any implied obligation to test the premises. Before drilling-delay rental clauses became common in oil and gas leases, many courts held that lessors had an implied duty to drill a test well on the leased premises within a reasonable time after grant of the lease. The rationale for the implied covenant was that the major consideration for the grant of the lease by the lessor was the expectation that the property would be tested within a reasonable time. The courts' determination of what was a reasonable time ranged from a few months to several years, depending upon the circumstances. Lessees found that they could not rely upon a long stated term alone to preserve their rights." John S. Lowe, Oil and Gas Law in a Nutshell 195-96 (3d ed. 1995).

drinking age. See AGE.

drinking shop. See DRAM SHOP.

DRIP. abbr. DIVIDEND-REINVESTMENT PLAN.

drip rights. A servitude allowing water dripping off a person's roof to fall on a neighbor's land. Waters and Water Courses 121.

driver. 1. A person who steers and propels a vehicle. 2. A person who herds animals; a drover.

driver's license. The state-issued certificate authorizing a person to operate a motor vehicle. • It is also often used as a form of identification. [Cases: Automobiles C-136.]

driving, n. The act of directing the course of something, such as an automobile or a herd of animals.

driving under the influence. (1924) 1. The offense of operating a motor vehicle in a physically or mentally impaired condition after consuming enough alcohol to raise one's blood alcohol content above the statutory limit (.08% in many states), or after consuming drugs. • Penalties vary widely; for example, the maximum penalty in Missouri and Louisiana is a $500 fine and six months in jail, while the penalties in New York range from $500 to $5,000 in fines and up to four years in jail. 2. driving under the influence. — Abbr. DWI. — Also termed drunk driving. Cf. DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE. [Cases: Automobiles C-332.]

droit coutumier. See DROIT COMMON.

droit d'accession (droyt dak-ses-syawn), n. [French] "right of accession" Civil law. The right of the owner of a thing to whatever is produced by it or is united with it, either naturally or artificially. La. Civ. Code arts. 483, 490, 507. • The equivalent of the Roman specificatio, the right includes, for example, the right of a landowner to new land deposited on a riverbank and the right of an orchard owner to the fruit of the trees in the orchard. See accession (4).

"DROIT D'ACCESSION . . . The civil law rule is that if the thing can be reduced to the former matter it belongs to the owner of the matter, e.g. a statue made of gold; but if it cannot so be reduced it belongs to the person who made it, e.g. a statue made of marble." l John Bouvier, Bouvier's Law Dictionary 941 (8th ed. 1914).

droit d'accroissement (droyt da-krwas-mawn), n. [French] French law. A right of survivorship by which an heir's interest is combined with the interest of a coheir who either has refused or is unable to accept the interest.

droit d'aubaine (droyt doh-ben), n. [Law French "right of alienage"] Hist. With certain exceptions, a sovereign's right to a deceased alien's property, regardless of whether the alien had a will. • This right was primarily exercised in France where it was revived in some form by Napoleon after its initial abolishment in 1790. It was ultimately abolished in 1819. — Also spelled droit d'aubaigne; droit d'aubange. — Also termed jus albanagit; jus albinitus. droit d'auteur (drwah doh-tar), n. [French "author's right"] The copyright system used in France and other civil-law nations and differing from common-law copyright by giving more protection to an author's moral right. See AUTHOR'S RIGHT.

droit de bris (drwah da bree), n. [Law French "right of a wreck"] Hist. A right claimed by lords of the coasts of France to fragments of shipwrecks, including persons or property that had washed ashore. • The right was exercised primarily in Bretagne but was abrogated by Henry III as duke of Normandy, Aquitaine, and Guinnen, in a charter granted in A.D. 1226. — Also termed droit debris sur le naufrage. Cf. DROIT DE NAUFRAGE.

droit de détraction (drwah da day-trak-syawn), n. [French "right of withdrawal"] Int'l law. A tax on property acquired by succession or by will and then removed to another state or country.

droit de garde (drwah da gahrd), n. [French "right of ward"] Hist. French law. A king's right to wardship of a noble vassal who has not reached majority.

droit de quint (drwah da kant), n. [French "the right of a fifth"] Hist. French law. A required payment made by a noble vassal to the king each time ownership of the vassal's fief changed.

droit de suite (drwah da sweet), n. [French "right to follow"] 1. A creditor's right to recover a debtor's property after it passes to a third party. 2. Copyright. An artist's resale royalty; the right of a work's creator to benefit from appreciation in the value of the work by receiving a portion of the profit from its later resales. • A droit de suite is recognized in some European nations.

"The droit de suite (literally translated as the right to follow the work) enables artists to claim a portion of the price for which a work is resold. The idea is that an artist may sell a painting for a low price at a time when they are unknown and have little bargaining power. In due course, as the artist's reputation develops, the painting may be resold for continually increasing sums. . . . The right is seen to be justified not only because it encourages creation, but also because the artist is conceived (through the authorial link) as being responsible for the increase in value (economic success of their works)." Lionel Bently & Brad Sherman, Intellectual Property Law 281 (2001).

droit d'exécution (drwah dek-say-kyoo-syawn), n. [French "right of execution"] French law. 1. A stockbroker's right to sell the stock bought for a client who later refuses it. 2. A stockbroker's right to sell deposited securities to secure the broker against a loss in buying for a client.

droit-droit (drwah-drwah), n. [Law French "double right"] Hist. The unification of the right of possession with the right of property. — Also termed jus duplicatum; droit droit.

"A complete title to lands, tenements, and hereditaments. For it is an ancient maxim of the law, that no title is completely good, unless the right of possession be joined with the right of property; which right is then denominated a double right, jus duplicatum, or droit droit. And when to this double right the actual possession is also united . . . then, and then only, is the title completely legal." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 199 (1766).

droit du seigneur (drwah da sen-yuur). [French "right of the lord"] Hist. 1. A supposed customary right of a feudal lord to have sexual intercourse with a tenant's bride on her wedding night. 2. A supposed custom requiring sexual abstinence by a couple on their wedding night. — Also spelled droit de seigneur. — Also termed jus primae noctis.

droit écrit (drwah ay-kree), n. [French "the written law"] French law. The civil law; the corpus juris civilis.

droit international (drwah an-tair-nah-syoh-nahl), n. [French] International law.

droit moral (drwah maw-ral). [French] The doctrine of moral right, which entitles artists to prevent others from altering their works. • The basic rights protected by this doctrine are (1) the right to create, (2) the right to disclose or publish, (3) the right to withdraw from publication, (4) the right to be identified with the work, and (5) the right to ensure the integrity of the work, including the right to object to any mutilation or distortion of the work. These rights are sometimes called moral rights. See moral right. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property § 6.]

droit naturel (drwah na-tu-rel), n. [French] Natural law.

droits civils (drwah see-veel), n. [French] French law. Private rights not connected to a person’s civil status. • Foreigners had certain rights that could be enforced when there was reciprocity with the foreigner’s home country.

droits of admiralty (droyts), n. The Lord High Admiral’s rights in connection with the sea, such as the right to recover proceeds from shipwrecks, enemy goods confiscated at the beginning of hostilities, jetsam, flotsam, treasure, deodand, fines, forfeitures, sturgeons, whales, and other large fishes. • The droit proceeds are paid to the Exchequer’s office for the public’s use. See prizé (2).

"The crown had originally certain rights to property found upon the sea, or stranded upon the shore. The chief kinds of property to which the crown was thus entitled were, great fish such as whales or porpoises, deodands, wreck of the sea, flotsam, jetsam, and lagan, ships or goods of the enemy found in English ports or captured by uncommissioned vessels, and goods taken or retaken from pirates . . . . After the rise of the court of Admiralty the Lord High Admiral became entitled to these droits by royal grant . . . . The right to droits carried with it a certain jurisdiction. Inquisitions were held into these droits at the ports, or the Vice-Admirals or droit gatherers reported them to the Admiral. The large terms of the Admiral’s Patents incited them, or their grantees, to frequent litigation with private persons or other grantees of the crown . . . . The Admiralty droits . . . are now transferred to the consolidated fund." I William Holdsworth, A History of English Law 559–61 (7th ed. 1956).

droitlural (droy-cha-ral), adj. [fr. Old French droiture “right”] Of or relating to an interest in property, as distinguished from actual possession.

duarchy (d'yoo-ahr-kee), n. [fr. Greek duo "two" + archia "rule"] See diarchy.

dubii juris (d'yoo-bee-1 joor-is). [Latin] Of doubtful law. • The phrase appeared in reference to an unsettled legal point.

dubitante (d'yoo-bi-tan-tee). [Latin] Doubting. • This term was usu. placed in a law report next to a judge's name, indicating that the judge doubted a legal point but was unwilling to state that it was wrong. — Also termed dubitiates.

"[E]xpressing the epitome of the common law spirit, there is the opinion entered dubitante — the judge is unhappy about some aspect of the decision rendered, but cannot quite bring himself to record an open dissent." Lon L. Fuller, Anatomy of the Law 147 (1968).

dubitatur (d'yoo-bi-tay-tor). [Latin] It is doubted. • This phrase indicates that a point of law is doubtful. — Also termed dubitativit.

ducat (d'ak-it). A gold coin used as currency, primarily in Europe and first appearing in Venice in the early 1100s, with the motto sit tibi, Christe, dato, quem tu regis, iste Ducatus ("let this ducat which thou rules be dedicated to thee, O Christ"). • It survived into the 20th century in several countries, including Austria and the Netherlands.

ducatus (d'yoo-kay-tus), n. [Law Latin] A duchy; a dukedom.

duces tecum (d'yoo-sas tee-kam also tay-kam). [Latin] (17c) Bring with you. See subpoena duces tecum under subpoena.

duces tecum licet languidus (d'yoo-sas tee-kam li-set lang-gwa-dus), n. [Law Latin "bring with you, although sick"] Hist. A habeas corpus writ ordering a sheriff to bring someone into court despite a return by the sheriff noting that the person was too ill to come.

Duchy Court of Lancaster (dach-ee kort av lang-ka-star). Hist English law. A court with special equity jurisdiction, similar to the equity courts of chancery, in which the Duchy of Lancaster's chancellor or deputy presides over issues primarily relating to land held by the Crown in right of the Duchy.

Duchy of Lancaster (dach-ee av lang-ka-star). Land, in the county of Lancaster, the Savoy in London, and around Westminster, that originally belonged to the Duke of Lancaster and later belonged to the Crown in right of the Duchy.

ducking stool. See castigatory.

due, adj. (14c) 1. Just, proper, regular, and reasonable <due care> <due notice>. 2. Immediately enforceable <payment is due on delivery>. 3. Owing or payable; constituting a debt <the tax refund is due from the IRS>.

due-bill. See IOU.

due care. See reasonable care under CARE.

due compensation. See just compensation under compensation.

due consideration. 1. The degree of attention properly paid to something, as the circumstances merit. 2. See sufficient consideration under consideration (1).

due course, payment in. See PAYMENT IN DUE COURSE.

due-course holder. See HOLDER IN DUE COURSE.

due course of law. See DUE PROCESS.

due day. See SOON DAY.

due deference. The appropriate degree of respect with which a reviewing authority must consider the decision of a primary decision-maker.

due diligence. See DILIGENCE.

due-diligence information. Securities. Information that a broker-dealer is required to have on file and make available to potential customers before submitting quotations for over-the-counter securities. • The informational requirements are set out in SEC Rule 15c2-11 (17 CFR § 240.15c2-11).

due influence. (17c) The sway that one person has over another, esp. as a result of temperate persuasion, argument, or appeal to the person's affections. Cf. undue influence.

duel. (15c) 1. TRIAL BY COMBAT. 2. A Single combat; specif., a prearranged combat with deadly weapons fought between two or more persons under prescribed rules, usu. in the presence of at least two witnesses, to resolve a previous quarrel or avenge a deed. • In England and the United States, death resulting from a duel is treated as murder, and seconds may be liable as accessories. — Also termed monomachy; single combat. Cf. MUTUAL COMBAT. [Cases: Homicide C-537.]

"[A] duel which did not end in death was only a misdemeanor, till the passing of Lord Ellenborough's Act, 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, passed in 1803 ... A duel which did end fatally might be either murder or manslaughter, according to the following distinctions: — If the duel was on a sudden falling out, if the parties fought in hot blood and on the spot and one was killed, the offence was only manslaughter, however aggravated the case might be .... If a fatal duel took place when the parties were in cool blood, it was held to be murder, and of this there has never been any doubt whatever in this country, though juries not infrequently acquitted in such cases if they sympathized with the prisoner." 3 James Fitzjames Stephen, A History of the Criminal Law of England 100 (1883).

"Dueling is distinguished from other offenses in that it has none of the elements of sudden heat and passion, and is usually carried out with some formality. A duel has been distinguished from an 'affray' in that an affray occurs on a sudden quarrel while a duel is always the result of design." 28A C.J.S. DUELING § 2, at 154 (1996).

dueling, n. The common-law offense of fighting at an appointed time and place after an earlier disagreement. • If one of the participants is killed, the other is guilty of murder, and all who are present,abetting the crime, are guilty as principals in the second degree. [Cases: Criminal Law C-45.30.]

"Dueling is prearranged fighting with deadly weapons, usually under certain agreed or prescribed rules ... . It is a misdemeanor at common law to fight a duel, even though due to provoke such a challenge, or knowingly to be the bearer of such a challenge." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 243 (3d ed. 1962).

due negotiation. See NEGOTIATION.

due notice. See notice.

due-on-encumbrance clause. (1971) A mortgage provision giving the lender the option to accelerate the debt if the borrower further mortgages the real estate without the lender's consent. • All state laws on the enforcement of due-on-sale clauses have been preempted, and the subject is now governed exclusively by the Garn Act. 12 USC A § 1704-1-3. [Cases: Mortgages 380-403.]

due-on-sale clause. (1967) A mortgage provision that gives the lender the option to accelerate the debt if the borrower transfers or conveys any part of the mortgaged real estate without the lender's consent. [Cases: Mortgages 3-403.]

due posting. (1893) 1. The stamping and placing of letters or packages in the U.S. mail. [Cases: Postal Service 3840-4841.]

due process. (16c) The conduct of legal proceedings according to established rules and principles for the protection and enforcement of private rights, including notice and the right to a fair hearing before a tribunal with the power to decide the case. — Also termed due process of law; due course of law. See FUNDAMENTAL FAIRNESS DOCTRINE. [Cases: Constitutional Law 3840-4841.]

"The words 'due process' have a precise technical import, and are only applicable to the process and proceedings of the courts of justice; they can never be referred to an act of legislature." Alexander Hamilton, Remarks on an Act for Regulating Elections, New York Assembly, 6 Feb. 1787, in 4 Papers of Alexander Hamilton 34, 35 (Harold C. Syrett ed., 1962).

"The words, 'due process of law,' were undoubtedly intended to convey the same meaning as the words, 'by the law of the land,' in Magna Charta." Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 59 U.S. (18 How.) 272, 276 (1856) (Curtis, J.).

"Due process of law in each particular case means, such an exaction of the powers of government as the settled maxims of law sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs." Thomas M. Cooley, A Treatise on the Constitutional Limitations 356 (1868).

"An elementary and fundamental requirement of due process in any proceeding which is to be accorded finality is notice reasonably calculated, under all the circumstances, to apprise interested parties of the pendency of the action and afford them an opportunity to present their objections... The notice must be of such nature as reasonably to convey the required information." Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 606, 614, 70 S.Ct. 652, 657 (1950) (Jackson, J.).

economic substantive due process. (1957) The doctrine that certain social policies, such as the freedom of contract or the right to enjoy property without interference by government regulation, exist in the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment, particularly in the words "liberty" and "property."

procedural due process. (1934) The minimal requirements of notice and a hearing guaranteed by the Due Process Clauses of the 5th and 14th Amendments, esp. if the deprivation of a significant life, liberty, or property interest may occur. • The Supreme Court has ruled that the fundamental guarantees of due process apply to children as well as to adults and that they apply in situations in which a juvenile may be deprived of liberty even though the juvenile proceedings may be labeled civil rather than criminal. In re Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1428 (1967). In that case, the Court held that an accused child was entitled to notice of the charges, the privilege against self-incrimination, the right to confront witnesses, and the right to summon witnesses on his or her own behalf. Justice Abe Fortas wrote the majority opinion in Gault, and Chief Justice Earl Warren predicted that it would come to be called the "Magna Carta for juveniles." [Cases: Constitutional Law 3867.]

substantive due process. (1933) The doctrine that the Due Process Clauses of the 5th and 14th Amendments require legislation to be fair and reasonable in content and to further a legitimate governmental objective. [Cases: Constitutional Law 3892.]

Due Process Clause. (1890) The constitutional provision that prohibits the government from unfairly or arbitrarily depriving a person of life, liberty, or property. • There are two Due Process Clauses in the U.S. Constitution, one in the 5th Amendment applying to the federal government, and one in the 14th Amendment applying to the states (although the 5th Amendment's Due Process Clause also applies to the states under the incorporation doctrine). Cf. EQUAL PROTECTION CLAUSE. [Cases: Constitutional Law 3840-4841.] due process of law. See DUE PROCESS.

due-process rights. (1930) The rights (as to life, liberty, and property) so fundamentally important as to require compliance with due-process standards of fairness and justice. See DUE PROCESS; DUE PROCESS CLAUSE; FUNDAMENTAL FAIRNESS DOCTRINE.

due proof. Sufficient and properly submitted evidence to produce a result or support a conclusion, such as an entitlement to benefits supported by an insurance policy. • The evidence need not be the best proof possible. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Frisch, 65 N.E. 2d 852, 855 (ind. App. 1946).

Duhig rule. Oil & gas. A rule of title interpretation developed to deal with the common problem of overconveyance of fractional interests by giving priority to the granted interest over the reserved interest. Duhig v. Peavy Moore Lumber Co., Inc., 144 S.W.2d 878 (Tex. 1940). • The rule is not accepted in all states and is dumb bidding. An auction bidding process in which the dum fervet opus (dam for-vet oh-pas). [Latin] While the action is fresh; in the heat of action. • This term usu.

referred to matters of testimony.

dum fuit infra aetatem (dom fyoo-it in-fra ee-tay-tam), n. [Law Latin "while he was within age"] Hist. A writ allowing a person of full age to recover lands feoffed while the person was an infant. • The remedy was also available to the person's heirs. It was later replaced by the action of ejectment. See EJECTMENT. dum fuit in prigiona (dam fyoo-it in priz-oh-na), n. [Law Latin "while he was in prison"] Hist. A writ restoring a man to his estate after he transferred the estate under duress of imprisonment. See DURESS OF IMPRISONment.
dummindo (dam-oh-doh). [Latin] So that; provided that.
• This term was used as a limitation in conveyances, as in dummindo solverit tam reddidum (dam-oh-doh sol-va-rit tay-lem red-i-tam), meaning "provided he shall pay such a rent." dummindo conste de persona (dam-oh-doh kon-stet dee par-soh-na). [Latin] Hist. Provided it be evident who is the person meant. See CONSTAT DE PERSONA. dummindo vassalli conditio non sit deterior (dam-ohdoh vas-oh-l kon-dish ee-oh non sit di-teer ee-or). [Law Latin] Hist. Provided the vassal's condition be not made worse. • The phrase was used as a limitation in a conveyance. See DUMMODO.

mind"] Hist. A writ allowing heirs to recover an estate transferred by someone of unsound mind. dump, vb. 1. To drop (something) down, esp. in a heap; to unload. 2. To sell (products) at an extremely low price; specific, to sell (products) in a foreign market at a lower price than at home.
dumping. (1857) 1. The act of selling a large quantity of goods at less than fair value. 2. Selling goods abroad below the market price at home. See ANTIDUMPING LAW. [Cases: Environmental Law C=353, 354.]
"Dumping involves selling abroad at a price that is less than the price used to sell the same goods at home (the 'normal' or 'fair' value). To be unlawful, dumping must threaten or cause material injury to an industry in the export market, the market where prices are lower. Dumping is recognized by most of the trading world as an unfair practice (akin to price discrimination as an antitrust offense)." Ralph H.
Folsom & Michael W. Gordon, International Business Trans-

Dumping Act. A federal antidumping law requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to notify the U.S.
International Trade Commission (USITC) whenever the Secretary determines that goods are likely to be sold abroad at less than their fair value, so that the USITC can take appropriate action. 19 USCA § 1673. [Cases: Customs Duties (dBD 21-5.]

dump-truck lawyer. Slang. A public defender who spends little time or effort and exhibits little skill mounting a defense on behalf of an indigent defendant. • This derogatory term arises from criminal defendants' common perception (typically a misperception) that public defenders prefer to dump cases by making plea bargains rather than spend time preparing for trial. People v. Clark, 833 P.2d 561, 590 (Cal. 1992); People v. Huffman, 139 Cal. Rptr. 264, 267 n.2 (Cal. App. 1977).

duum se bene gesserit (dum see bee-nee jes-ar-it). [Latin] “while he behaves himself properly” Hist. During good conduct. Cf. QUAMDIU BENE SE GESSERINT.

dum sola (dum soh-lah). [Latin] While single. • This phrase was used to limit conveyances, esp. to women, as in dum sola fuerit (“while she remains single”), dum sola et casta vixerit (“while she remains single and chaste”), and dum sola et casta (“while she is unmarried and lives chastely”).

dun (dun), vb. (17c) To demand payment from (a delinquent debtor) <his creditors are dunning him daily>. — dun, n.

dungeon. 1. The bottom part of a fortress or tower, often used as a prison. — Also termed dungeon-keep. 2. A dark underground prison.

dunnage (dun-nij). Anything, esp. pieces of wood, that are put underneath or between cargo on a vessel to prevent the cargo from bruising or getting wet from water leaking into the hold. [Cases: Shipping & Insurance 110.J 21.5.]

“The manner of waging and making law is this. He that has waged, or given security, to make his law, brings with him into court eleven of his neighbours . . . for by the old Saxon constitution every man’s credit in courts of law depended upon the opinion which his neighbours had of his veracity. The defendant then, standing at the end of the bar, is admonished by the judges of the nature and danger of a false oath. . . . And thereupon his eleven neighbours or compurgators shall avow upon their oaths that they believe in their consciences that he saith the truth. . . . It is held indeed by later authorities . . . that fewer than eleven compurgators will do; but Sir Edward Coke is positive that there must be this number . . . for as wager of law is equivalent to a verdict in the defendant’s favor, it ought to be established by the same or equal testimony, namely, by the oath of twelve men. And so indeed Glanvil expresses it, . . . ‘jurabit duodecima manus’ . . . .” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 343 (1768).

duopoly (dye oo-op-ah-lee). A market in which there are only two sellers of a product.

dupsony (dye oo-s-nay). A market in which there are only two buyers of a product.

duvoiri (dye oo-oh-va-ree). An appeal to a person's immediate superior, as when a bishop appeals to an archbishop. — Also termed double quarrel; double complaint.

duplex querela (dye oo-pleks kwa-ree-la). 1. Hist. Eccles. law. An appeal by a clerk to the archbishop in response to the bishop’s delaying or wrongfully refusing to do justice. 2. Eccles. law. An appeal to a person’s immediate superior, as when a bishop appeals to an archbishop. — Also termed double quarrel; double complaint.

duplex valor maritagi (dye oo-pleks val-ar mar-ah-tay-lee-ee). n. [Law Latin “double the value of a marriage”] Hist. A ward’s forfeiture of double the value of a marriage made without the guardian’s consent. • In the quotation that follows, Blackstone uses the accusative form (duplicem valorem maritagi) because the phrase follows the verb forfeited.

“For, while the infant was in ward, the guardian had the power of tendering him or her a suitable match, without disparagement, or inequality: which if the infants refused, they forfeited the value of the marriage . . . to their guardian; that is, so much as a jury would assess, or any one would bona fide give to the guardian for such an alliance: . . . and, if the infants married themselves without the guardian’s consent, they forfeited double the value, duplicem valorem maritagi. This seems to have been one of the greatest hardships of our ancient tenures.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 70 (1766).

duplicate (dye oo-pli-kit), n. (16c) 1. A reproduction of an original document having the same particulars and effect as the original. See Fed. R. Evid. 101(4). 2. A new original, made to replace an instrument that has been lost or destroyed. — Also termed (in sense 2) duplicate original. [Cases: Criminal Law 399. Evidence (C & C) 173.] — duplicate (dye oo-pli-kit), adj.

“A ‘duplicate’ is defined for purposes of the best evidence rule as a counterpart produced by the same impression as the original, or from the same matrix, or by means of photography including enlargements and miniatures, by mechanical or electronic recording, by chemical reproduction, or by other equivalent techniques which accurately reproduce the original; copies subsequently produced manually, either handwritten or typed, are not within this definition.” 29A Am. Jur. 2d Evidence § 1085 (1994).

duplicate (dye oo-pli-kayt), vb. 1. To copy exactly <he duplicated the original document>. 2. To double; to repeat <she duplicated the performance>. See REJECTION duplicate claiming rejection. See REJECTION.

duplicate taxation. See double taxation under TAXATION.

duplicate will. See will.

duplicatio (dye oo-pli-kay-shoo-oh), n. [fr. Latin duplicare “to double”] 1. Roman & civil law. A defendant’s answer to the plaintiff’s replication, similar to a rejoinder in common law. — Also termed (in Scots law) duply. See replication. 2. The fourth in a series. 3. A duplication of a transaction.

duplicative (doo-plik-ə-tiv also doo-pli-kay-tiv), adj. 1. Having or characterized by having overlapping content, intentions, or effect <duplicative sources> <duplicative evidence> <duplicative regulations>. 2. Duplicate; having or characterized by having identical content <duplicative database> <duplicative backup>.

duplicatum jus (d[y]oo-pli-kay-əm jeu), n. [Law Latin “double right”] A double right, such as droit droit (both the “right of possession and right of property”).

duplicis (d[y]oo-plis-i-tas), adj. 1. (Of a person) deceitful; double-dealing. 2. (Of a pleading, esp. an indictment) alleging two or more matters in one plea; characterized by double pleading.

duplicitous appeal. See appeal.

duplicitous indictment. See indictment.

duplicitious information. See information.

duplicity (d[y]oo-plis-i-tee), n. (15c) 1. Deceitfulness; double-dealing. 2. The charging of the same offense in more than one count of an indictment. 3. The pleading of two or more distinct grounds of complaint or defense for the same issue. • In criminal procedure, this takes the form of joining two or more offenses in the same count of an indictment. — Also termed double pleading. Cf. alternative pleading under pleading (2); double plea under plea (3). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=675; Indictment and Information C=125; Pleading C=64.]

duplum (d[y]oo-plam). [Latin] Roman civil law. Double the price of something; esp., a measure of damages equal to double a thing's value. • This measure was used for certain delicts. Cf. simpulum.

duply. See duplicatio (1).

durable goods. See goods.

durable lease. See lease.

durable power of attorney. See power of attorney.

duration. (14c) 1. The length of time something lasts <the duration of the lawsuit>.

duration of interest. The length of time a property interest lasts.

duration of trust. The length of time a trust exists. [Cases: Trusts C=60.]

2. A length of time; a continuance in time <an hour’s duration>.

durational-residency requirement. (1970) The requirement that one be a state resident for a certain time, such as one year, as a precondition to the exercise of a specified right or privilege. • When applied to voting, this requirement has been held to be an unconstitutional denial of equal protection because it burdens voting rights and impairs the fundamental personal right of travel.

duration Directive. See directive harmonizing the term of copyright and certain related rights.

durent test. (1980) Constitutional law. A test to determine whether a jury’s composition violates the fair-cross-section requirement and a criminal defendant's Sixth Amendment right to an impartial jury. • Under the test, a constitutional violation occurs if (1) a distinctive group is not fairly and reasonably represented in the jury pool in relation to its population in the community, (2) the underrepresentation is the result of a systematic exclusion of the group from the jury-selection process, and (3) the government cannot reasonably justify the discrepancy. Duren v. Missouri, 439 U.S. 357, 99 S.Ct. 664 (1979). See fair-cross-section requirement; statistical decision theory; absolute disparity; comparative disparity. [Cases: Jury C=33(L.1)].

duress (d[y]uu-res). (13c) 1. Strictly, the physical confinement of a person or the detention of a contracting party's property. • In the field of torts, duress is considered a species of fraud in which compulsion takes the place of deceit in causing injury.

"Duress consists in actual or threatened violence or imprisonment; the subject of it must be the contracting party himself, or his wife, parent, or child; and it must be inflicted or threatened by the other party to the contract, or else by one acting with his knowledge and for his advantage." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 261-62 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

"Few areas of the law of contracts have undergone such radical changes in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries as has the law governing duress. In Blackstone's time relief from an agreement on grounds of duress was a possibility only if it was coerced by actual (not threatened) imprisonment or fear of loss of life or limb. 'A fear of battery . . . is no duress; neither is the fear of having one's house burned, or one's goods taken away or destroyed': he wrote, 'because in these cases, should the threat be performed, a man may have satisfaction by recovering equivalent damages; but no suitable atonement can be made for the loss of life, or limb.' Today the general rule is that any wrongful act or threat which overcomes the free will of a party constitutes duress. This simple statement of the law conceals a number of questions, particularly as to the meaning of ‘free will’ and ‘wrongful.’” John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 9-2, at 337 (3d ed. 1987).

2. Broadly, a threat of harm made to compel a person to do something against his or her will or judgment; esp., a wrongful threat made by one person to compel a manifestation of seeming assent by another person to a transaction without real volition. • A marriage that is induced by duress is generally voidable. 3. The use or threatened use of unlawful force — usu. that a reasonable person cannot resist — to compel someone to commit an unlawful act. • Duress is a recognized defense to a crime, contractual breach, or tort. See Model Penal Code § 2.09. See COERCION.

“In most states, the age-old rule of duress — that the doing of a prohibited act is not a crime if reasonably believed to be necessary to save from death or great bodily injury — together with the equally ancient exception in the form of the ‘inexcusable choice,’ are as firm today as ever except for the realization that they cover only part of the field.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 1064 (3d ed. 1982).

“Among defenses, necessity needs to be distinguished from duress. Necessity is generally regarded as a justification, while duress is held to be an excuse. This means that the person who acts under necessity chooses to act in a way that the law ultimately approves. The person who acts under duress acts in a way that the law disapproves and seeks to discourage, but he acts under circumstances which make conviction and punishment inappropriate and unfair. This is so because to act under duress is to act under pressures that a person of reasonable firmness would not be able to resist. Thus, both the theory of necessity and the theory of duress refer to the pressure of exigent and extraordinary situations, but they do so in different ways.” Thomas Morawetz, “Necessity,” in 3 Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice 957, 959 (Sanford H. Kadish ed., 1983).

duess of goods. 1. The act of seizing personal property by force, or withholding it from an entitled party, and then exerting something as the condition for its release. 2. Demanding and taking personal property under color of legal authority that either is void or for some other reason does not justify the demand.

duess of imprisonment. The wrongful confining of a person to force the person to do something.

duess of the person. Compulsion of a person by imprisonment, by threat, or by a show of force that cannot be resisted.

duess per minas (par mi-nas). [Law Latin] Duress by threat of loss of life, loss of limb, mayhem, or other harm to a person.

“Duress per minas is either for fear of loss of life, or else for fear of mayhem, or loss of limb. And this fear must be upon sufficient reason ... A fear of battery, or being beaten, though never so well grounded, is no duress; neither is the fear of having one’s house burned, or one’s goods taken away and destroyed; because in these cases, should the threat be performed, a man may have satisfaction by recovering equivalent damages: but no suitable atonement can be made for the loss of life, or limb.” 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 127 (1765).

“Duress per minas is a very rare defence, so rare that Sir James Stephen, in his long forensic experience, never saw a case in which it was raised. It has, however, been thought that threats of the immediate infliction of death, or even of grievous bodily harm, will excuse some crimes that have been committed under the influence of such threats.” J.W. Cecil Turner, Kenny’s Outlines of Criminal Law 58 (16th ed. 1952).

economic duress. (1929) An unlawful coercion to perform by threatening financial injury at a time when one cannot exercise free will. — Also termed business compulsion.

“Courts have shown a willingness to recognize the concept of ‘economic duress.’ For instance it has been held that a defence on these grounds may be available to the purchaser of a ship from a shipbuilder, if the latter extracts a promise of extra payment as a condition of delivery of the ship.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 230 (3d ed. 1981).

moral duress. An unlawful coercion to perform by unduly influencing or taking advantage of the weak financial position of another. • Moral duress focuses on the inequities of a situation while economic duress focuses on the lack of will or capacity of the person being influenced.

Durham (dar-um). One of the three remaining county palatines in England, the others being Chester and Lancaster. • Its jurisdiction was vested in the Bishop of Durham until the statute 6 & 7 Will. 4, ch. 19 vested it as a separate franchise and royalty in the Crown. The jurisdiction of the Durham Court of Pleas was transferred to the Supreme Court of Judicature in 1873, but Durham continued to maintain a Chancery Court according to the Palatine Court of Durham Act of 1889. See COUNTY PALATINE.

Durham rule. Criminal law. A test for the insanity defense, holding that a defendant is not criminally responsible for an act that was the product of mental disease or defect (Durham v. United States, 214 F.2d 862 (D.C. Cir. 1954)). • Formerly used in New Hampshire and the District of Columbia, the Durham rule has been criticized as being too broad and is no longer accepted in any American jurisdiction. — Also termed product test. See INSANITY DEFENSE. [Cases: Criminal Law  48.]

Durrett rule. Bankruptcy. The principle that a transfer of property in exchange for less than 70% of the property’s value should be invalidated as a preferential transfer. Durrett v. Washington Nat’l Ins. Co., 621 F.2d 201 (5th Cir. 1980); 11 USCA § 548. • This rule has been applied most frequently to foreclosure sales. But it has essentially been overruled by the U.S. Supreme Court, which has held that, at least for mortgage foreclosure sales, the price received at a regularly conducted, noncollusive sale represents a reasonably equivalent value of the property, and the transfer is presumed valid. BFP v. Resolution Trust Corp., 511 U.S. 531, 114 S.Ct. 1757 (1994). [Cases: Bankruptcy  2650.]

duty. (13c) 1. A legal obligation that is owed or due to another and that needs to be satisfied; an obligation for which somebody else has a corresponding right.

   "There is a duty if the court says there is a duty; the law, like the Constitution, is what we make it. Duty is only a word with which we state our conclusion that there is or is not to be liability; it necessarily begs the essential question.... Many factors interplay: the hand of history, our ideas of morals and justice, the convenience of administration of the rule, and our social ideas as to where loss should fall." William L. Prosser, Palpsgraf Revisited, 52 Mich. L. Rev. 1, 15 (1953).

   "A classic English definition [of duty] from the late nineteenth century holds that, when circumstances place one individual in such a position with regard to another that thinking persons of ordinary sense would recognize the danger of injury to the other if ordinary skill and care were not used, a duty arises to use ordinary skill and care to avoid the injury. A much quoted American judicial definition of duty emphasizes its relational aspects, with a focus on the foreseeability of risk to those 'within the range of apprehension.' At about the same time, one of the most creative of American law teachers defined duty as a complex of factors, including administrative, economic, and moral ones, to be applied by judges in their analyses of the legal strength of personal injury cases." Marshall S. Shapo, The Duty to Act xi-xii (1977).

   "While courts frequently say that establishing 'duty' is the first prerequisite in an individual tort case, courts commonly go on to say that there is a 'general duty' to exercise reasonable care, to avoid subjecting others to 'an unreasonable risk of harm,' or to comply with the 'legal standard of reasonable conduct.' Though cast in the language of duty, these formulations merely give the expression to the point that negligence is the standard of liability." Restatement (Third) of Torts § 6 cmt. a (Discussion Draft 1999).

absolute duty. 1. A duty to which no corresponding right attaches. • According to John Austin's legal philosophy, there are four kinds of absolute duties: (1) duties not regarding persons (such as those owed to God and to lower animals), (2) duties owed to persons indefinitely (i.e., to the community as a whole), (3) self-regarding duties (such as the duty not to commit suicide), and (4) duties owed to the sovereign. 1 John Austin, The Providence of Jurisprudence Determined 400 (Sarah Austin ed., 2d ed. 1861). 2. A duty as to which nothing but lapse of time remains necessary to make immediate performance by the promisor obligatory.

active duty. See positive duty.

affirmative duty. A duty to take a positive step to do something.

conditional duty. A duty that is conditioned on the occurrence of an event other than the lapse of time.

contractual duty. 1. A duty arising under a particular contract. [Cases: Contracts C-1.] 2. A duty imposed by the law of contracts.

delegable duty. (1908) A duty that may be transferred to another to perform. See assignment.

duty to act. (17c) A duty to take some action to prevent harm to another, and for the failure of which one may be liable depending on the relationship of the parties and the circumstances. [Cases: Negligence C-210.]

duty to defend. Insurance. The obligation of an insurer to provide an insured with a legal defense against claims of liability, within the terms of the policy. • The duty to defend applies if the terms of the policy and the facts of the claim allow an ambiguity about whether the insurer will have a duty to indemnify the insured. It does not apply if no such ambiguity exists. [Cases: Insurance C-2911.]

duty to indemnify. An obligation to compensate another for the other's loss. • The duty arises under the terms of an agreement, which governs the extent of the duty. An insurance policy is fundamentally an indemnification agreement, but the duty is often made a part of other contracts as well. [Cases: Indemnity C-25, 31-39; Insurance C-2092, 2268.]

duty to settle. Insurance. The obligation of an insurer to negotiate and settle third-party claims against an insured in good faith.

duty to speak. (16c) A requirement (not strictly a duty) to say something to correct another's false impression. • For example, a duty to speak may arise when a person has, during the course of negotiations, said something that was true at the time but that has ceased to be true before the contract is signed. [Cases: Fraud C-17.]

equitable duty. A duty enforceable in a court of chancery or in a court having the powers of a court in chancery.

imperfect duty. 1. A duty that, though recognized by law, is not enforceable against the person who owes it. 2. A duty that is not fit for enforcement but should be left to the discretion and conscience of the person whose duty it is.

implied duty of cooperation. A duty existing in every contract, obligating each party to cooperate with, or at least not to wrongfully hinder, the other party's performance. • Breach of this implied duty excuses performance. [Cases: Contracts C-168.]

legal duty. (17c) A duty arising by contract or by operation of law; an obligation the breach of which would give a legal remedy <the legal duty of parents to support their children>.

moral duty. A duty the breach of which would be a moral wrong. — Also termed natural duty.

negative duty. A duty that forbids someone to do something; a duty that requires someone to abstain from something. — Also termed passive duty.

noncontractual duty. A duty that arises independently of any contract.

nondelegable duty (non-del-a-ga-bal). (1902) 1. Contracts. A duty that cannot be delegated by a contracting party to a third party. • If a contracting party purports to delegate the duty, the other party can duty of loyalty. A person’s duty not to engage in self-dealing or otherwise use his or her position to further personal interests rather than those of the beneficiary.
• For example, directors have a duty not to engage in self-dealing to further their own personal interests rather than the interests of the corporation.

fiduciary duty (fi-d[i]oo-sheer-ee). A duty of utmost good faith, trust, confidence, and candor owed by a fiduciary (such as a lawyer or corporate officer) to the beneficiary (such as a lawyer’s client or a shareholder): a duty to act with the highest degree of honesty and loyalty toward another person and in the best interests of the other person (such as the duty that one partner owes to another). See fiduciary; fiduciary relationship under relationship. [Cases: Fraud C= 7.] ministerial duty. A duty that requires neither the exercise of official discretion nor judgment. Cf. discretionary duty.

proprietary duty. A duty owed by a governmental entity while engaged in a proprietary, rather than governmental, activity. [Cases: Municipal Corporations C= 725.]

account duty. An inheritance tax payable by a decedent’s beneficiary.

ad valorem duty. A tax calculated as a percentage of an imported product’s value. Cf. compound duty; specific duty.

antidumping duty. See antidumping tariff under tariff (3).

compound duty. A tax based on a combination of imported goods’ weight, volume, or item count, plus a percentage of their value. Cf. ad valorem duty; specific duty.

countervailing duty. A tax imposed on manufacturers of imported goods to protect domestic industry by offsetting subsidies given by foreign governments to those manufacturers. [Cases: Customs Duties C= 21.5.]

customs duty. A tax levied on an imported or exported commodity; esp., the federal tax levied on goods shipped into the United States.

death duty. An estate tax or inheritance tax. — Also termed estate duty.

duty of detraction. A tax on property acquired by succession or will and then removed from one state to another.

estate duty. Hist. English law. A tax imposed on the principal value of all property that passed on death.
• Estate duties were first imposed in 1889. A capital transfer tax replaced it in 1975. Since 1986, an inheritance tax has applied instead, with exceptions for... duty-bound certain transactions entered into before then. See death duty.

import duty. A tax on the importation of a product. — Also termed duty on import.

legacy duty. See legacy tax under tax.

probate duty. A tax assessed by the government either on every will admitted to probate or on the gross value of the decedent’s personal property.

specific duty. A tax calculated on an import’s weight, volume, or item count. Cf. ad valorem duty; compound duty.

succession duty. A tax payable by the successor to real property, esp. when the successor has not purchased the property for value but has succeeded to the property in some other way.

tonnage duty. A charge imposed on a commercial vessel for entering, remaining in, or leaving a port, usu. assessed on the basis of the ship’s weight. • U.S. Const. art. I, § 10, cl. 3 prohibits the states from levying tonnage duties. — Also termed tonnage tax; tonnage. [Cases: Commerce C=78; Shipping C=7] unascertained duty. A preliminary, estimated payment to a customs collector of the duty that will be due on final accounting. • An importer pays this duty to receive permission to land and sell the goods.

duty-bound, adj. Required by legal or moral obligation to do something <Jones is duty-bound to deliver the goods by Friday>.

duty-free, adj. Of or relating to products of foreign origin that are not subject to import or export taxes.

duty judge. See judge.

duty of care. See DUTY (3).

duty of the flag. Hist. A maritime ceremony by which a foreign vessel struck her flag and lowered her topsail upon meeting the British flag. • The ceremony was an acknowledgment of British sovereignty over the British seas.

duty of tonnage (tən-ij). See tonnage duty under DUTY (4).

duty of water. The amount of water necessary to irrigate a given tract.

duty on import. See import duty under DUTY (4).

duty-to-defend clause. Insurance. A liability-insurance provision obligating the insurer to take over the defense of any lawsuit brought by a third party against the insured on a claim that falls within the policy’s coverage. See duty to defend under DUTY (1). [Cases: Insurance C≈2911.]

duty to mitigate (mit-i-gayt). (1891) A nonbreaching party’s or tort victim’s duty to make reasonable efforts to limit losses resulting from the other party’s breach or tort. • Not doing so precludes the party from collecting damages that might have been avoided. See MITIGATION-OF-DAMAGES DOCTRINE. [Cases: Damages C≈62.]

duumviri (d[y]oo-əm-və-rī), n. pl. [fr. Latin due “two” + viri “men”] 1. Roman law. Magistrates elected or appointed in pairs to hold an office or perform a function.

2. Two peers in authority. — Also termed duoviri.

dux (doks), n. [fr. Latin ducere “to lead”] 1. Roman law. An army commander. 2. Roman law. A military governor of a province. • This term was eventually used also as a title of distinction. 3. Hist. Duke; a title of nobility. See duke.

DWAI. abbr. Driving while ability-impaired. See DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE.

dwell, vb. (13c) 1. To remain; to linger <the case dwelled in her memory>. 2. To reside in a place permanently or for some period <he dwelled in California for nine years>.

dwelling-house. (15c) 1. The house or other structure in which a person lives; a residence or abode. 2. Real estate. The house and all buildings attached to or connected with the house. 3. Criminal law. A building, a part of a building, a tent, a mobile home, or another enclosed space that is used or intended for use as a human habitation. • The term has referred to connected buildings in the same curtilage but now typically includes only the structures connected either directly with the house or by an enclosed passageway. — Often shortened to dwelling. — Also termed (archaically) mansion house; (more broadly) dwelling place. [Cases: Burglary C=4.] quasi-dwelling-house. Hist. Any outbuilding, such as a barn, that is in proximity to the building used as a residence. See BURGLARY (1).

‘A ‘dwelling house’ or ‘dwelling’ has been defined in connection with the crime of arson by any house intended to be occupied as a residence, or an enclosed space, permanent or temporary, in which human beings usually stay, lodge, or reside. If a building is not used exclusively as dwelling, it is characterized as a dwelling if there is internal communication between the two parts of the building. Dwellings include mobile homes and a boat, if the person resides on it.” 5 Am. Jur. 2d Arson and Related Offenses § 13, at 789 (1995).

DWI. abbr. DRIVING WHILE INTOXICATED.

DWOP (dee-wop or doo-wop). abbr. See dismissal for want of prosecution under DISMISSAL (1).

DWOP docket. See docket (2).

dyarchy (dī-ahr-kee), n. [fr. Greek dy “two” + archein “rule”] A government jointly ruled by two people, such as William and Mary of England. — Also termed diarchy.
“Dyarchy. A term applied by Mommsen to the Roman principate . . . a period in which he held that sovereignty was shared between the princes and the senate. The term has also been given to a system of government, promoted as a constitutional reform in India by Montagu and Chelmsford and introduced by the Government of India Act, 1919. It marked the introduction of democracy into the executive of the British administration of India by dividing the provincial executives into authoritarian and popularly responsible sections composed respectively of councillors appointed by the Crown and ministers appointed by the governor and responsible to the provincial legislative councils . . . . The system ended when full provincial autonomy was granted in 1935.” David M. Walker, The Oxford Companion to Law 386 (1980).

dyathanasia, (di-th-a-nay-zha), n. The act of permitting death to occur naturally by withholding, terminating, or not offering life-prolonging treatments or intervention. — Also termed passive mercy killing. See EUTHANASIA.

Dyer Act. A federal law, enacted in 1919, making it unlawful either (1) to transport a stolen motor vehicle across state lines, knowing it to be stolen, or (2) to receive, conceal, or sell such a vehicle, knowing it to be stolen. 18 USCA §§ 2311–2313. — Also termed National Motor Vehicle Theft Act. [Cases: Automobiles 386–391.]

dyet. See DIET.

dying declaration. See DECLARATION (6).

dying without issue. See FAILURE OF ISSUE.

dynamite charge. See ALLEN CHARGE.

dynamite instruction. See ALLEN CHARGE.

dynasty. 1. A powerful family line that continues for a long time (an Egyptian dynasty). 2. A powerful group of individuals who control a particular industry or field and who control their successors (a literary dynasty) (a banking dynasty).

dynasty trust. See TRUST.

dysnomy (dis-na-mee), n. [fr. Greek dys “bad” + nomos “law”] The enactment of bad legislation. Cf. EUOMONY.

dyvour (di-var). Scots law. A person who is heavily in debt or bankrupt.
earmark, vb. 1. To mark with an earmark. 2. To set aside for a specific purpose or recipient.

earmarking doctrine. Bankruptcy. An equitable principle that when a new lender makes a loan to enable a debtor to pay off a specified creditor, the funds are specifically set aside for that creditor so that, if the debtor lacks control over the disposition of the funds, they do not become part of the debtor's estate and thus subject to a preference. [Cases: Bankruptcy C=2610.]

earn, vb. (bef. 12c) 1. To acquire by labor, service, or performance. 2. To do something that entitles one to a reward or result. 2. To do something that entitles one to a reward or result.

earned income. See INCOME.

earned-income credit. See TAX CREDIT.

earned land. See LAND.

earned premium. See PREMIUM (1).

earned surplus. See retained earnings under EARNINGS.

earned time. See TIME.

earner. 1. One who produces income through personal efforts or property or both. 2. Property or an asset that produces income for its owner.

earnest, n. (13c) 1. A nominal payment or token act that serves as a pledge or a sign of good faith, esp. as the partial purchase price of property. • Though not legally necessary, an earnest may help the parties come to an agreement. 2. EARNED MONEY.

earnest money. (16c) A deposit paid (often in escrow) by a prospective buyer (esp. of real estate) to show a good-faith intention to complete the transaction, and ordinarily forfeited if the buyer defaults. • Although earnest money has traditionally been a nominal sum (such as a nickel or a dollar) used in the sale of goods, it is not a mere token in the real-estate context: it is generally a percentage of the purchase price and may be a substantial sum. — Also termed earnest; bargain money; caution money; hand money. Cf. BINDER (2); down payment under PAYMENT. [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser C=691, 182.]

earnings. (16c) Revenue gained from labor or services, from the investment of capital, or from assets. See INCOME.

appropriated retained earnings. Retained earnings that a company's board designates for a distinct use, and that are therefore unavailable to pay dividends or for other uses. — Also termed appropriated surplus; surplus revenue; suspense reserve.

earnings before interest and taxes. Corporations. A company's income calculated without deductions for interest expenses and taxes, used as a measure of the company's ability to generate cash flow from ongoing operations. — Abbr. EBIT.

earnings before interest, taxes, and depreciation. Corporations. A company's income without deductions for interest expenses, taxes, depreciation expenses, or amortization expenses, used as an indicator of a company's profitability and ability to service its debt. — Abbr. EBITDA.

future earnings. See lost earnings.

gross earnings. See gross income under INCOME.

lost earnings. Wages, salary, or other income that a person could have earned if he or she had not lost a job, suffered a disabling injury, or died. • Lost earnings are typically awarded as damages in personal-injury and wrongful-termination cases. There can be past lost earnings and future lost earnings. Both are subsets of this category, though legal writers sometimes loosely use future earnings as a synonym for lost earnings. Cf. LOST EARNING CAPACITY. [Cases: Damages C=37.]

normalized earnings. Corporations. Earnings adjusted for inflation and to remove elements that are extraordinary, nonrecurring, nonoperating, or otherwise unusual.

ongoing earnings. See operating earnings.

operating earnings. Business income calculated in violation of generally accepted accounting principles by including income items and excluding various business expenses. • Many companies use operating earnings to favorably skew their price-earnings (P/E) ratios. Because the rationales for the underlying calculations vary from company to company, and from period to period within a company, operating earnings are almost always artificially inflated and unreliable. The term operating earnings is meaningless under generally accepted accounting principles. — Also termed pro forma earnings; economic earnings; core earnings; ongoing earnings; earnings excluding special items. See PRICE-EARNINGS RATIO.

pretax earnings. Net earnings before income taxes.

pro forma earnings. See operating earnings.

real earnings. Earnings that are adjusted for inflation so that they reflect actual purchasing power.

retained earnings. A corporation's accumulated income after dividends have been distributed. — Also termed earned surplus; undistributed profit. [Cases: Corporations C=151.]

surplus earnings. The excess of corporate assets over liabilities within a given period, usu. a year. [Cases: Corporations C=152.]

earnings and profits. Corporations. In corporate taxation, the measure of a corporation's economic capacity to make a shareholder distribution that is not a return of capital. • The distribution will be dividend income to the shareholders to the extent of the corporation's current and accumulated earnings and profits. Cf. accumulated-earnings tax under tax; accumulated taxable income under INCOME. [Cases: Internal Revenue C=3830.1–3845.]

earnings before interest and taxes. See earnings.

earnings before interest, taxes, and depreciation. See EARNINGS.

earnings excluding special items. See operating earnings under EARNINGS.

earnings per share. Corporations. A measure of corporate value by which the corporation's net income is divided by the number of outstanding shares of common stock. • Investors benefit from calculating a corporation's earnings per share, because it helps the investors determine the fair market value of the corporation's stock. — Abbr. EPS.

fully diluted earnings per share. A corporation's net income — assuming that all convertible securities had been transferred to common equity and all stock options had been exercised — divided by the number of shares of the corporation's outstanding common stock.

earnings-price ratio. See earnings yield under YIELD.

earnings report. See INCOME STATEMENT.

earnings yield. See YIELD.

earnout agreement. (1977) An agreement for the sale of a business whereby the buyer first pays an agreed amount up front, leaving the final purchase price to be determined by the business's future profits. • The seller usu. helps manage the business for a period after the sale. — Sometimes shortened to earnout.

earwitness. (16c) A witness who testifies about something that he or she heard but did not see. Cf. EYEWITNESS.

easement (eez-mant). (14c) An interest in land owned by another person, consisting in the right to use or control the land, or an area above or below it, for a specific limited purpose (such as to cross it for access to a public road). • The land benefiting from an easement is called the dominant estate; the land burdened by an easement is called the servient estate. Unlike a lease or license, an easement may last forever, but it does not give the holder the right to possess, take from, improve, or sell the land. The primary recognized easements are (1) a right-of-way, (2) a right of entry for any purpose relating to the dominant estate, (3) a right to the support of land and buildings, (4) a right of light and air, (5) a right to water, (6) a right to do some act that would otherwise amount to a nuisance, and (7) a right to place or keep something on the servient estate. See servitude (1). Cf. profit à prendre. — Also termed private right-of-way.

access easement. (1933) An easement allowing one or more persons to travel across another's land to get to a nearby location, such as a road. • The access easement is a common type of easement by necessity. — Also termed easement of access; easement of way; easement of passage.

adverse easement. See prescriptive easement.

affirmative easement. (1881) An easement that forces the servient-estate owner to permit certain actions by the easement holder, such as discharging water onto the servient estate. — Also termed positive easement. Cf. negative easement.

“Positive easements give rights of entry upon the land of another, not amounting to profits, to enable something to be done on that land. Some are commonplace, examples being rights of way across the land of another and rights to discharge water on to the land of another. Others are more rare, such as the right to occupy a pew in a church, the right to use a kitchen situated on the land of another for the purpose of washing and drying clothes, and the right to use a toilet situated on the land of another.” Peter Butt, Land Law 305 (2d ed. 1988).

apparent easement. (1851) A visually evident easement, such as a paved trail or a sidewalk. [Cases: Easements 22.]

appendant easement. See easement appurtenant.

appurtenant easement. See easement appurtenant.

avigational easement. An easement permitting unimpeded aircraft flights over the servient estate. — Also termed avigation easement; aviation easement; flight easement; navigation easement. [Cases: Aviation 3.]

common easement. (18c) An easement allowing the servient landowner to share in the benefit of the easement. — Also termed nonexclusive easement. [Cases: Easements 38.]

continuous easement. (1863) An easement that may be enjoyed without a deliberate act by the party claiming it, such as an easement for drains, sewer pipes, lateral support of a wall, or light and air. — Also termed (in Louisiana) continuous servitude. Cf. discontinuous easement. [Cases: Easements 38.]

conservation easement. Property. A recorded, perpetual, nonpossessory interest in real property held by a government entity or by a qualified nonprofit entity that imposes restrictions or affirmative obligations on the property's owner or lessee to retain or protect natural, scenic, or open-space values of real property, ensure its availability for agricultural, forest, recreational, or open-space use, protect natural resources and habitat, maintain or enhance air or water quality, or preserve the historical, architectural, archeological, or cultural aspects of the real property. — Also termed conservation restriction; conservation servitude.

determinable easement. An easement that terminates on the happening of a specific event.

discontinuous easement. (1867) An easement that can be enjoyed only if the party claiming it deliberately acts in some way with regard to the servient estate. • Examples are a right-of-way and the right to draw water. — Also termed discontinuing easement; noncontinuous easement; nonapparent easement; (in Louisiana) discontinuous servitude. Cf. continuous easement. [Cases: Easements 38.]

easement appurtenant. (1810) An easement created to benefit another tract of land, the use of easement being incident to the ownership of that other tract. — Also termed appurtenant easement; appendant easement; pure easement; easement proper. Cf. easement in gross. [Cases: Easements 3.]

easement by estoppel. (1907) A court-ordered easement created from a voluntary servitude after a person, mistakenly believing the servitude to be permanent, acted in reasonable reliance on the mistaken belief. [Cases: Estoppel 83(1), 87.]

easement by implication. See implied easement.

easement by necessity. (1865) An easement created by operation of law because the easement is indispensable to the reasonable use of nearby property, such as an easement connecting a parcel of land to a road. — Also termed easement of necessity; necessary way. [Cases: Easements 18.]

easement in prescription. See prescriptive easement.

easement in gross. (1866) An easement benefiting a particular person and not a particular piece of land. • The beneficiary need not, and usu. does not, own any land adjoining the servient estate. Cf. easement appurtenant. [Cases: Easements 3.]

easement of access. See access easement.

easement of convenience. An easement that increases the facility, comfort, or convenience of enjoying the dominant estate or some right connected with it.

easement of natural support. See lateral support under support (4).

easement of necessity. See easement by necessity.

easement of passage. See access easement.

easement of way. See access easement.

easement proper. See easement appurtenant.
equitable easement. (1869) 1. An implied easement created by equity when adjacent lands have been created out of a larger tract. • Such an easement is usu. created to allow implied privileges to continue. [Cases: Easements C=>16.] 2. See restrictive covenant (1) under covenant (4).

exclusive easement. An easement that the holder has the sole right to use. Cf. common easement. [Cases: Easements C=>52.]

flight easement. See avigational easement.

floating easement. An easement that, when created, is not limited to any specific part of the servient estate. [Cases: Easements C=>46.]

flowage easement. A common-law easement that gives the dominant-estate owner the right to flood a servient estate, as when land near a dam is flooded to maintain the dam or to control the water level in a reservoir. [Cases: Waters and Water Courses C=>165.]

implied easement. (1867) An easement created by law after an owner of two parcels of land uses one parcel to benefit the other to such a degree that, upon the sale of the benefited parcel, the purchaser could reasonably expect the use to be included in the sale. — Also termed easement by implication, way of necessity. [Cases: Easements C=>15–19.]

intermittent easement. An easement that is usable or used only from time to time, not regularly or continuously.

land-conservation easement. Property. An easement arising from an agreement between a landowner and a land trust to provide for the protection of the land in its natural state while perhaps also allowing the property to be used for agricultural or low impact recreational activities. • The easement runs with the land. — Also termed land-conservation agreement; land-preservation easement.

light-and-air easement. (1940) A negative easement preventing an adjoining landowner from constructing a building that would prevent light or air from reaching the dominant estate. See negative easement. Cf. solar easement. [Cases: Easements C=>11, 19, 45.]

mineral easement. An easement that permits the holder to enter the property to remove minerals from it. [Cases: Mines and Minerals C=>55(6).]

navigation easement. 1. An easement giving the federal government the right to regulate navigable waters, even when the regulation interferes with private water rights. [Cases: Navigable Waters C=>16.] 2. See avigational easement.

negative easement. (1861) An easement that prohibits the servient-estate owner from doing something, such as building an obstruction. Cf. affirmative easement. [Cases: Covenants C=>20; Easements C=>13.]

"Negative easements ... confer no right of entry, but consist essentially of the right to prevent something being done; examples are the right to the flow of air through defined aperture, the right to receive light for a building, the right to the support of a building, and (possibly) the right to require a neighboring landowner to repair fences." Peter Butt, Land Law 305 (2d ed. 1988).

nonapparent easement. See discontinuous easement.

noncontinuous easement. See discontinuous easement.

nonexclusive easement. See common easement.

eject, vb. (15c) 1. To cast or throw out. 2. To oust or dispossess; to put or turn out of possession. 3. To expel or thrust out forcibly (e.g., disorderly patrons). — ejector, vb.

ejection, n. (16c) 1. An expulsion by action of law or by actual or threatened physical force. See ouster. 2. ejectment (2).

ejectione custodiae. See de ejectione custodiae.

ejectione firmae. See de ejectione firmae.

ejectment. (16c) 1. The ejection of an owner or occupier from property. 2. A legal action by which a person wrongfully ejected from property seeks to recover possession, damages, and costs. 3. The writ by which such an action is begun. • The essential allegations in an action for ejectment are that (1) the plaintiff has title to the land, (2) the plaintiff has been wrongfully dispossessed or ousted, and (3) the plaintiff has suffered damages. — Also termed action of ejectment; action for the recovery of land; ejection. See forcible entry and detainer. Cf. eviction; ouster. [Cases: Ejectment C=46.]

“...the evolution of the action of ejectment from its primitive form as a mere action of trespass, enabling a lessee of lands to recover damages when ousted of his possession, through a series of most ingenious fictions, which were afterwards added to enable him to recover possession as well, until its final establishment as the proper method of trying all disputed titles to real property, presents to the student of legal science one of the most interesting studies that the history of the law affords. Few remedies have passed through so many changes of form, both in pleading and practice, and yet retained the same distinctive character that marked their origin.” George W. Warville, A Treatise on the Principles and Practice of the Action of Ejectment § 4, at 4-5 (1905).

“...Any person wrongfully dispossessed of land may sue for the specific restitution of it in an action of ejectment. Originally this action was a special variety of trespass and available only to leaseholders. But in time and by the aid of the most elaborate fictions it came to be used by freeholders also. All these fictions have now been swept away; in theory even the term ejectment has been replaced by the term action for the recovery of land. The older term is, however, replaced in practice.” R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 41 (17th ed. 1977).

equitable ejectment. (1820) A proceeding brought to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land and for other purposes. • Though in the form of an ejectment action, this proceeding is in reality a substitute for a bill in equity. [Cases: Ejectment C=156.]

justice ejectment. (1900) A statutory proceeding to evict a tenant who has held over after termination of the lease or breach of its conditions.

ejectment bill. (18c) Equity practice. A bill in equity brought to recover real property and an accounting of rents and profits, without setting out a distinct ground of equity jurisdiction (and thus demurrable). [Cases: Ejectment C=62.]

ejectment de garde. See de ejectione custodiae.

ejector, n. (17c) One who ejects, puts out, or dispossesses another.

casual ejector. The nominal defendant in an ejectment action who, under a legal fiction, is supposed to come casually or by accident upon the premises and to eject the lawful possessor. [Cases: Ejectment C=46.]

ejectum (i-jek-tum), n. Something that is cast out, esp. by the sea. See flotsam. Cf. jetsam; lagan (1); waveson.

ejectus (ee-jek-tas), n. [Latin] Hist. A whoremonger; a pimp.

ejercitoria (ay-hair-see-tor-ee-a), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. An action lying against a shipowner upon the contracts or obligations made by the master for repairs or supplies. • This action corresponds to the actio exercitoria of Roman law. See action exercitoria under actio.

ejido (ay-hee-doh), n. [fr. Latin exitus “a going out”] (19c) Spanish law. Common land or pasture; esp., land used in common by inhabitants of a city, pueblo, or town for such things as pasture, wood, and threshing-ground; commons. — Also termed exidos; exedos. See common (2).

ejuration (ej-o-ray-shun). The renouncing or resigning of one’s place.

ejusdem generis (ee-jos-dam jen-aris also ee-joos- or ee-yos-). [Latin “of the same kind or class”] (17c) 1. A canon of construction holding that when a general word or phrase follows a list of specifics, the general word or phrase will be interpreted to include only items of the same class as those listed. • For example, in the phrase horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, goats, or any other farm animals, the general language or any other farm animals — despite its seeming breadth — would probably be held to include only four-legged, hoofed mammals typically found on farms, and thus would exclude chickens. — Also termed Lord Tenterden’s rule. Cf. expressio unius est exclusio alterius; noscitur a sociis; rule of rank. [Cases: Contracts C=156; Statutes C=194.] 2. Loosely, noscitur a sociis.

elaborare (i-lab-ar-ee), vb. [Latin] Hist. To gain, acquire, or purchase, as by labor and industry.

Elastic Clause. See necessary and proper clause.

elbow clerk. See clerk (5).

Elder Brethren. A distinguished body of men elected as masters of Trinity House, an institution incorporated in the reign of Henry VIII and charged with many duties in marine affairs, such as superintending lighthouses. • The full title of the corporation is Elder Brethren of the Holy and Undivided Trinity.

elder law. (1986) The field of law dealing with the elderly, including such issues as estate planning, retirement benefits, social security, age discrimination, and healthcare.

elder title. A title of earlier date but one that becomes operative simultaneously with, and prevails over, a title of newer origin.

lected domicile. See domicile.

lected. 1. A person chosen or elected. 2. A person to whom the law gives a choice about status.

lected small-business trust. See Trust (3).

electio est debitoris (i-lek-shee-oh est kred-i-tor-iss). [Law Latin] Scots law. The debtor has the election or choice. • The phrase appeared in reference to the creditor's right to apply payments to one debt or another. Cf. ELECTIO EST DEBITORIS.

"Electio est creditoris . . . . This has reference to a creditor's right to apply indefinite payments, made by his debtor, to that debt or obligation which is least secured; but where the debtor at the time of payment appropriates the sum paid, towards extinction of a particular debt, it must be so applied." John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 184 (4th ed. 1894).

electio est debitoris (i-lek-shee-oh est deb-i-tor-is). [Law Latin] Scots law. The debtor has the election or choice. • If the law provided alternative methods of fulfilling an obligation, the debtor could choose the method of payment. Cf. ELECTIO EST CREDITORIS.

election, n. (13c) 1. The exercise of a choice; esp., the act of choosing from several possible rights or remedies in a way that precludes the use of other rights or remedies <the taxpayers' election to file jointly instead of separately>. See ELECTION OF REMEDIES. 2. The doctrine by which a person is compelled to choose between accepting a benefit under a legal instrument and retaining some property right to which the person is already entitled; an obligation imposed on a party to choose between alternative rights or claims, so that the party is entitled to enjoy only one <the prevailing plaintiff was put to an election between out-of-pocket damages and lost profits>. — Also termed equitable election. See RIGHT OF ELECTION. [Cases: Election of Remedies C==1.] 3. The process of selecting a person to occupy an office (usu. a public office), membership, award, or other title or status <the 2004 congressional election>. Cf. two-round voting under VOTING. [Cases: Elections C==1.] — elect, vb. — elective, adj.

by-election. An election specially held to fill a vacant post. — Also spelled bye-election. Cf. general election.

election at large. An election in which a public official is selected from a major election district rather than from a subdivision of the larger unit. — Also termed at-large election. [Cases: Elections C==12(7).]

free election. An election in which the political system and processes guarantee that each voter will be allowed to vote according to conscience.

general election. 1. An election that occurs at a regular interval of time. — Also termed regular election. 2. An election for all seats, as contrasted with a by-election. Cf. by-election. [Cases: Elections C==215.]

municipal election. The election of municipal officers. [Cases: Municipal Corporations C==129.]

off-year election. An election conducted at a time other than the presidential election year.

popular election. An election by people as a whole, rather than by a select group.

primary election. A preliminary election in which a political party's registered voters nominate the candidate who will run in the general election. — Often shortened to primary. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees C==70.7.]

recall election. An election in which voters have the opportunity to remove a public official from office.

regular election. See general election.

representation election. An election held by the National Labor Relations Board to decide whether a certain union will represent employees in a bargaining unit. See BARGAINING UNIT. [Cases: Labor and Employment C==1187.]

runoff election. An election held after a general election, in which the two candidates who received the most votes — neither of whom received a majority — run against each other so that the winner can be determined. Cf. two-round voting under VOTING.

special election. An election that occurs in an interim between general elections, usu. to fill a sudden vacancy in office. Cf. by-election.

4. Patents. A patent applicant's choice of one invention to continue prosecuting under the original application, after an examiner has required a restriction. See RESTRICTION (4). [Cases: Patents C==104.]

election of species. A patent applicant's choice of one alternative over others after an examiner determines that a generic claim is not allowable. [Cases: Patents C==104.]

election, doctrine of. A doctrine holding that when a person has contracted with an agent without knowing of the agency and later learns of the principal's identity, the person may enforce the contract against either the agent or the principal, but not both. See ELECTION (1). [Cases: Principal and Agent C==145(4).] election, estoppel by. See estoppel by election under ESTOPPEL.

election board. 1. A board of inspectors or commissioners appointed for each election precinct to determine voter qualification, to supervise the polling, and often to ascertain and report the results. 2. A local agency charged with the conduct of elections. [Cases: Elections C==49–58.]
election by spouse. See right of election.

election contest. A challenge by an election's loser against the winner, calling for an analysis of the election returns, which may include reviewing voter qualifications or re-counting the ballots. [Cases: Elections 148, 269–306.]

election district. See district.

election dower. See dower.

election fraud. (18c) Illegal conduct committed in an election, usu. in the form of fraudulent voting. Examples include voting twice, voting under another person's name (usu. a deceased person), or voting while ineligible. [Cases: Elections 318.]

election judge. 1. A person appointed to supervise an election at the precinct level; a local representative of an election board. [Cases: Elections 49. 2. English law. One of two puisne judges of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court selected to try election petitions.

election of remedies. (18c) 1. A claimant's act of choosing between two or more concurrent but inconsistent remedies based on a single set of facts. [Cases: Election of Remedies 1. 2. The affirmative defense barring a litigant from pursuing a remedy inconsistent with another remedy already pursued, when that other remedy has given the litigant an advantage over, or has damaged, the opposing party. This doctrine has largely fallen into disrepute and is now rarely applied. 3. The affirmative defense that a claimant cannot simultaneously recover damages based on two different liability findings if the injury is the same for both claims, thus creating a double recovery. Cf. alternative relief under relief (3).

election of species. See election (4).

election petition. English law. A petition for inquiry into the validity of a Parliament member's election, when the member's return is allegedly invalid for bribery or other reason.

election returns. The report made to the board of canvassers or the election board, by those charged with tallying votes, of the number of votes cast for a particular candidate or proposition. [Cases: Elections 126(7), 246.] elective franchise. See franchise (1).

elective office. An office that is filled by popular election rather than by appointment.

elective share. (1931) Wills 6 estates. The percentage of a deceased spouse's estate, set by statute, that a surviving spouse (or sometimes a child) may choose to receive instead of taking under a will or in the event of being unjustifiably disinherited. — Also termed forced share; statutory share; statutory forced share. See right of election. [Cases: Wills 778–803.]

"In many states today, common-law dower and curtesy have been wholly replaced by statutes that make the surviving spouse an 'heir' of the deceased spouse and fix a minimum percentage of the decedent's estate (real and personal) to which the survivor will be entitled regardless of efforts of the deceased spouse to prevent it by will. This statutory minimum — called the statutory forced share — is typically an estate in fee simple, not merely a life estate. A serious disadvantage to the surviving spouse under many of these statutes, however, is that the minimum percentage applies only to property owned by the decedent at death. Both husbands and wives can, under such statutes, defeat their spouses' forced shares by inter vivos transfers." — Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 37–38 (2d ed. 1984).

elector. (15c) 1. A member of the electoral college chosen to elect the U.S. President and Vice President. — Also termed presidential elector. [Cases: United States 59. 2. A voter. [Cases: Elections 59.]

qualified elector. A legal voter; a person who meets the voting requirements for age, residency, and registration and who has the present right to vote in an election. See voter. [Cases: Elections 59–87.]

3. A person who chooses between alternative rights or claims. 4. Hist. The title of certain German princes who had a voice in electing the Holy Roman Emperors. This office sometimes became hereditary and was connected with territorial possessions.

electoral college. (often cap.) (17c) The body of electors chosen from each state to formally elect the U.S. President and Vice President by casting votes based on the popular vote. [Cases: United States 25.]

electoral process. (1851) 1. The method by which a person is elected to public office in a democratic society. 2. The taking and counting of votes.

elegit (a-lee-jit). [Latin “he has chosen”] (16c) Hist. A writ of execution (first given by 13 Edw., ch. 18) either upon a judgment for a debt or damages or upon the forfeiture of a recognizance taken in the king’s court.

- Under it, the defendant’s goods and chattels were appraised and, except for plow beasts, delivered to the plaintiff to satisfy the debt. If the goods were not sufficient to pay the debt, then the portion of the defendant’s freehold lands held at the time of judgment was also delivered to the plaintiff, to hold until the debt was satisfied out of rents and profits or until the defendant’s interest expired. During this period the plaintiff was called tenant by elegit, and the estate an estate by elegit. The writ was abolished in England in 1956, and it is no longer used anywhere in the United States.

element. (13c) 1. A constituent part of a claim that must be proved for the claim to succeed <Burke failed to prove the element of proximate cause in prosecuting his negligence claim>. 2. Patents. A discretely claimed component of a patent claim. - For a prior-art reference to anticipate a claim, it must teach each and every claim element. To recover for patent infringement, the plaintiff must prove that the accused product infringes every element of at least one claim, either literally or under the doctrine of equivalents. - Also termed (in sense 2) limitation. See DOCTRINE OF EQUIVALENTS. [Cases: Patents C=>101(I).]

elements of crime. (1909) The constituent parts of a crime — usu. consisting of the actus reus, mens rea, and causation — that the prosecution must prove to sustain a conviction. - The term is more broadly defined by the Model Penal Code in § 1.13(9) to refer to each component of the actus reus, causation, the mens rea, any grading factors, and the negative of any defense.

Eleventh Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1795, prohibiting a federal court from hearing an action against a state by a person who is not a citizen of that state. See SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY under IMMUNITY (1). [Cases: Federal Courts C=265–268.]

emanipate, vb. (17c) 1. To set free from legal, social, or political restraint; esp., to free from slavery or bondage. [Cases: Slaves 227.] 2. To release (a child) from the control, support, and responsibility of a parent or guardian. [Cases: Child Support 386–39; Parent and Child 227.] — emancipative, emancipatory, adj. — emancipator, n.

emanipated minor. See minor.

emanipatio. See emancipation (3).

emanipation. (17c) 1. The act by which one who was under another's power and control is freed. 2. A surrender and renunciation of the correlative rights and duties concerning the care, custody, and earnings of a child; the act by which a parent (historically a father) frees a child and gives the child the right to his or her own earnings. • This act also frees the parent from all legal obligations of support. Emancipation may take place by agreement between the parent and child, by operation of law (as when the parent abandons or fails to support the child), or when the child gets legally married or enters the armed forces. [Cases: Child Support 386–39; Parent and Child 227.] 3. Roman law. The enfranchisement of a son by his father, accomplished through the formality of an imaginary sale. • Justinian substituted the simpler proceeding of a manumission before a magistrate. — Also termed (in sense 3) emancipatio. Cf. MANCIPATION.

constructive emancipation. Emancipation by law, as opposed to a voluntary act of the parent. • Constructive emancipation may occur in several ways, as by (1) conduct of the parent that is inconsistent with the performance of parental duties, (2) marriage of the child, or (3) the child's service in the armed forces. [Cases: Child Support 386–39; Parent and Child 227.]

partial emancipation. Emancipation that frees a child for only a part of the period of minority, or from only a part of the parent's rights, or for only some purposes. [Cases: Child Support 386–39; Parent and Child 227.]

emancipation act. See MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACTS.

Emancipation Proclamation. An executive proclamation, issued by President Abraham Lincoln on January 1, 1863, declaring that all persons held in slavery in designated states and districts were freed.

embargo, n. (16c) 1. A government's wartime or peacetime detention of an offending nation's private ships found in the ports of the aggrieved nation <the President called off the embargo of Iraq's ships after the war ended.> — Also spelled embargo. — Also termed hostile embargo. [Cases: War and National Emergency 227.]

“A hostile embargo is a kind of reprisal by one nation upon vessels within its ports belonging to another nation with which a difference exists, for the purpose of forcing it to do justice, if this measure should be followed by war, the vessels are regarded as captured, if by peace, they are restored.” Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 118, at 187 (5th ed. 1878).

2. A nation's detention of all ships in its own ports, including its own, to promote safety and to preclude transportation to an offending nation <the embargo of all U.S. ships traveling to Iraq remained in effect until hostilities subsided.> — Also termed civil embargo. [Cases: War and National Emergency 227.]

“A civil embargo may be laid for the purpose of national welfare or safety, as for the protection of commercial vessels against the rules of belligerent powers which would expose them to capture. Such was the measure adopted by the United States in December 1807, which detained in port all vessels except those which had a public commission, and those that were already laden or should sail in ballast. The right to adopt such a measure of temporary non-intercourse is undeniable.” Theodore D. Woolsey, Introduction to the Study of International Law § 118, at 187 (5th ed. 1878).

3. The unilateral or collective restrictions on the import or export of goods, materials, capital, or services into or from a specific country or group of countries for political or security reasons <for a time, the industrialized nations placed an embargo on all goods from Libya.> — Also termed trade embargo; economic-cure trade embargo. [Cases: War and National Emergency 227.]

4. The conscription of private property for governmental use, such as to transport troops <the Army's embargo of the company jet to fly General White to Washington.> — A temporary prohibition on disclosure <the embargo on the press release expired at 11:59 p.m.> — embargo, vb.

embassador. See AMBASSADOR.
embassy. (1534) 1. The building in which a diplomatic body is located; esp., the residence of the ambassador. 2. A body of diplomatic representatives headed by an ambassador; a diplomatic mission on the ambassadorial level. 3. The mission, business, and function of an ambassador. Cf. legation. [Cases: Ambassadors and Consuls (c. 3).]

Ember Days. Eccles. law. The days — which the ancient church fathers called quattuor tempora jejunii — that are observed on the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday following (1) Quadragesima Sunday (the first Sunday in Lent), (2) Whitsuntide, or Holyrood Day, in September, and (3) St. Lucy’s day, about the middle of December. • Almanacs refer to the weeks in which these days fall as Ember Weeks; they are now chiefly noticed because, by tradition, the Sundays following Ember Days are used to ordain priests and deacons, although the canon law allows bishops to ordain on any Sunday or holiday.

embezzlement, n. (15c) The fraudulent taking of personal property with which one has been entrusted, esp. as a fiduciary. • The criminal intent for embezzlement — unlike larceny and false pretenses — arises after taking possession (not before or during the taking). — Also termed defalcation; peculation. See larceny; false pretenses. [Cases: Embezzlement (c. 1)] — embezzle, vb. — embezzler, n.

“Embezzlement is not a common-law crime. It is the result of legislative efforts to make provision for an unreasonable gap which appeared in the law of larceny as it developed. Under the early English statute embezzlement was made a misdemeanor, but under most modern American statutes it is either a felony or a misdemeanor depending upon the value of the property converted.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 351 (3d ed. 1982).

“Embezzlement can be defined as the fraudulent conversion of the property of another by one who has lawful possession of the property and whose fraudulent conversion has been made punishble by the statute.” Arnold H. Loewy, Criminal Law in a Nutshell 94 (2d ed. 1987).

emblem. (15c) 1. A flag, armorial bearing, or other symbol of a country, organization, or movement. 2. Loosely, something that is used to symbolize something else.

emblemata Tribonianii (em-blee ma-to tro-boh-nee-ay-ni). [Latin] Roman law. Alterations, modifications, and additions to the writings of the older jurists that were combined to form the Digest or Pandects, and generally termed interpolations. • Justinian appointed a commission over which Tribonian presided to harmonize contradictions, delete obsolete matter, and bring the law up to date. This term is considered old-fashioned by modern Romanists. See interpolations.

emblems (em-bla-mants). (15c) 1. The growing crop annually produced by labor, as opposed to a crop occurring naturally. • Emblems are considered personal property that the executor or administrator of a deceased tenant may harvest and take regardless of who may have since occupied the land. — Also termed fructus industriales. [Cases: Crops (c. 1)] 2. The tenant’s right to harvest and take away such crops after the tenancy has ended. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant (c. 139)].

“At common law those products of the earth which are annual, and are raised by yearly manurance and labor, and essentially owe their annual existence to the cultivation by man, [are] termed ‘emblements’ and sometimes ‘fructus industriales.’” Sparrow v. Pond, 52 N.W. 36 (Minn. 1892).

“The law of emblements has its origin and matrix, in the privilege, recognized at least as early as the fifteenth century, of the tenant for an uncertain term, to harvest and remove, even after the tenancy had terminated, the annual crop, which he had planted and nurtured.” Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property § 159, at 806 (2d ed. 1955).

embrois de gentz (em-bloz do jents). [Law French] A theft from the people. • The phrase occurs in the old English rolls of Parliament — for example, “Whereas divers murders, emblois de gentz, and robberies are committed . . .”

embodied technology. Intellectual property. Know-how or knowledge that is manifest in products and equipment, including software. Cf. disembodied technology.

emblem. Patents. 1. The tangible manifestation of an invention. [Cases: Patents (c. 99)] 2. The method for using this tangible form. 3. The part of a patent application or patent that describes a concrete manifestation of the invention. • Embodiments are less common in software or process patents than in manufacturing-related patents.

embrassed seal. See notary seal.

embrace, vb. To attempt to influence (a judge or juror) by corruption, or to behave in a way that might have a corrupting influence; to engage in embracery.

embracery (im-brays-er-e). n. (15c) The attempt to corrupt or wrongfully influence a judge or juror, esp. by threats or bribery. — Also spelled embracery. — Also termed juris-tampering; laboring a jury. Cf. juris-fixing; juris-packing. [Cases: Criminal Law (c. 45)].

“The word ‘embracery’ . . . has tended to disappear. It is included in some of the codes but the tendency has been to divide this common-law offense into two parts, placing that which is appropriate thereto in sections on bribery and the remainder in provisions dealing with obstruction of justice.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 552 (3d ed. 1982).

embryo (em-bree-oh). A developing but unborn or unhatched animal; esp., an unborn human from conception until the development of organs (i.e., until about the eighth week of pregnancy). Cf. fetus; zygote.

embryo formatus (for-may-tas). Eccles. law. A human embryo organized into human shape and endowed with a soul. • Though rejected in the early doctrine of the Christian church, the distinction between the embryo formatus and informatus was accepted by Gratian (regarded as the founder of canon law) in his Decretum (ca. 1140), in which he said that abortion is not murder if the fetus has not yet been infused with a soul. Though he did not specify the time of formation or animation, by the 16th century canonists accepted that the time of formation and animation was the 40th day after conception for the male fetus and the 80th day for the female. — Also termed embryo animatus.

embryo adoption (in-for-may-tas). Eccles. law. A human embryo before it has been endowed with a soul. — Also termed embryo inanimatus.

embryo adoption. See ADOPTION.

emend (i-mend), vb. (15c) To correct or revise; esp., to edit or change (a text).

emenda (ee-men-da), n. pl. [Latin “amends”] Things given in reparation for a trespass.

emendatio (ee-men-day-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Hist. The power of amending and correcting abuses, according to certain rules and measures.

emendatio panis et cerevisiae (ee-men-day-shee-oh pan-is et ser-a-vizh-ee-co). [Latin “the correction of bread and ale”] The power of supervising and correcting (assizing) the weights and measures of bread and ale.

emendation (ee-men-day-shan). (16c) 1. Correction or revision, esp. of a text. 2. Hist. The correction of an error or wrongdoing; atonement for a criminal offense, esp. by the payment of money. • As criminal law developed over time, emendation by payment of wer or wite gradually faded away and was replaced by harsher punishments.

emergency circumstances. See exigent circumstances under CIRCUMSTANCE.

Emergency Court of Appeals. Hist. A temporary court, established during World War II, whose purpose was to review wage- and price-control matters. • The court was created in 1942 and abolished in 1962. Cf. TEMPORARY EMERGENCY COURT OF APPEALS. [Cases: War and National Emergency C—>108, 206.]

emergency doctrine. (1929) 1. A legal principle exempting a person from the ordinary standard of reasonable care if that person acted instinctively to meet a sudden and urgent need for aid. — Also termed imminent-peril doctrine; sudden-emergency doctrine; sudden-peril doctrine; sudden-peril rule. [Cases: Negligence C—>291.] 2. A legal principle by which consent to medical treatment in a dire situation is inferred when neither the patient nor a responsible party can consent but a reasonable person would do so. — Also termed (in sense 2) emergency-treatment doctrine. Cf. GOOD SAMARITAN DOCTRINE; RESCUE DOCTRINE. [Cases: Health C—>909.] 3. The principle that a police officer may conduct a search without a warrant if the officer has probable cause and reasonably believes that immediate action is needed to protect life or property. — Also termed emergency exception. See exigent circumstances under CIRCUMSTANCE.

emergency-employment doctrine. The principle that an employee may enlist another's help in dealing with an emergency that falls within the scope of the employee's duties and that could not be overcome without the assistance of the other person.

emergency exception. See EMERGENCY DOCTRINE (3).

emergency jurisdiction. See JURISDICTION.

Emergency Preparedness and Response Directorate. The former division of the U.S. Department of Homeland Security responsible for coordinating relief and recovery efforts and for developing and coordinating plans to prevent terrorism and to minimize risks of danger from natural disasters. • The Director included the Federal Emergency Management Agency and also coordinated efforts with the Strategic National Stockpile and the National Disaster Medical System from the Department of Health and Human Services, the Nuclear Incident Response Team from the Department of Energy, the Domestic Emergency Support Teams from the Department of Justice, the National Domestic Preparedness Office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and state and local emergency responders. It was abolished in July 2005. — Abbr. EPR. [Cases: United States C—>82(5).] emergency protective order. See PROTECTIVE ORDER.

emergency search. See SEARCH.

emergency-treatment doctrine. See EMERGENCY DOCTRINE (2).

emerita. See EMERITUS.

emeritus. (18c) An honorary title conferred on a former officer or professor who has honorably retired, usu. after serving for an extended period well beyond the norm. • The term is loosely used as an adjective meaning “honored,” but it is not a synonym for “former,” “retired,” or “immediate past” (as in “immediate past president”). See HONORARY. Pl. emeriti. Fem. emerita. Fem. pl. emeritae.

emigrant (em-a-grant), n. (18c) One who leaves his or her country for any reason with the intent to establish a permanent residence elsewhere. Cf. IMMIGRANT.

emigration (em-a-gray-shan), n. (17c) The act of leaving a country with the intent not to return and to reside elsewhere. Cf. IMMIGRATION. — emigrate, vb.

"Emigration is usually defined as the voluntary removal of an individual from his home State with the intention of residing abroad. However, not all emigration is voluntary; there sometimes exists forced emigration, even mass emigration. Emigration may also be due to flight for political reasons or expulsion. One then speaks of refugees or exiles." Paul Weis, "Emigration," in 2 Encyclopedia of Public International Law 76 (1995).
emigré (em-ə-grar or em-ə-gray), n. [French] (18c) One who is forced to leave his or her country for political reasons. — Also spelled émigré.

eminence (em-ə-nants). (17c) (usu. cap.) Eccles. law. An honorary title given to cardinals of the Roman Catholic Church. — Until the pontificate of Urban VIII, cardinals were called illustrissimi and reverendissimi.

eminent domain. (18c) The inherent power of a governmental entity to take privately owned property, esp. land, and convert it to public use, subject to reasonable compensation for the taking. — Also (rarely) termed compulsory purchase; (in Scots law) compulsory surrender. See CONDEMNATION (2); EXPROPRIATION; TAKING (2). [Cases: Eminent Domain C= 1, 69.]

"The term 'eminent domain' is said to have originated with Grotius, the seventeenth century legal scholar. Grotius believed that the state possessed the power to take or destroy property for the benefit of the social unit, but he believed that when the state so acted, it was obligated to compensate the injured property owner for his losses. Blackstone, too, believed that society had no general power to take the private property of landowners, except on the payment of a reasonable price. The just compensation clause of the fifth amendment to the Constitution was built upon this concept of a moral obligation to pay for governmental interference with private property. . . . No provision for the power of eminent domain appears in the federal Constitution. The Supreme Court, however, has said that the power of eminent domain is an incident of federal sovereignty and an 'offspring of political necessity.' The Court has also noted that the fifth amendment's limitation on taking private property is a tacit recognition that the power to take private property exists." John E. Nowak & Ronald D. Rotunda, Constitutional Law § 11.11, at 424–25 (4th ed. 1991) (quoting Bauman v. Ross, 167 U.S. 548, 574, 17 S.Ct. 966, 976 (1897)).

Eminent Domain Clause. The Fifth Amendment provision providing that private property cannot be taken for public use without just compensation. See Takings Clause. [Cases: Eminent Domain C= 1, 69.]

emissary. (17c) One sent on a special mission as another's agent or representative, esp. to promote a cause or to gain information.

emit, vb. (16c) 1. To give off or discharge into the air <emit light>. 2. To issue with authority <emit a new series of currency>. — emission, n.

emolument (i-mol-ə-mant), n. (15c) (usu. pl.) Any advantage, profit, or gain received as a result of one's employment or one's holding of office. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees C= 94.]

Emoluments Clause. (1991) 1. The clause of the United States Constitution preventing members of Congress from continuing to serve in Congress after accepting an appointment to another federal office, and also prohibiting such an appointment if the office was created or its emoluments increased while the Senator or Representative served in Congress. U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, cl. 2. — Also written Emolument Clause. 2. Foreign Emoluments Clause.

emotional distress. (1933) A highly unpleasant mental reaction (such as anguish, grief, fright, humiliation, or fury) that results from another person's conduct; emotional pain and suffering. • Emotional distress, when severe enough, can form a basis for the recovery of tort damages. — Also termed emotional harm; mental anguish; mental distress; mental suffering. See INTENTIONAL INFRACTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS; NEGLIGENCE; NEGLIGENCE OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS. Cf. mental cruelty under CIVILITY. [Cases: Damages C= 57.1–57.60.]

"Emotional distress passes under various names, such as mental suffering, mental anguish, mental or nervous shock, or the like. It includes all highly unpleasant mental reactions, such as fright, horror, grief, shame, humiliation, embarrassment, anger, chagrin, disappointment, worry, and nausea, it is only where it is extreme that the liability arises. Complete emotional tranquility is seldom attainable in this world, and some degree of transient and trivial emotional distress is a part of the price of living among people. The law intervenes only where the distress inflicted is so severe that no reasonable man could be expected to endure it. The intensity and the duration of the distress are factors to be considered in determining its severity. Severe distress must be proved: but in many cases the extreme and outrageous character of the defendant's conduct is in itself important evidence that the distress has existed." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 46 cmt. j (1965).

emotional harm. See EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

emotional incapacity. 1. The inability to control one’s emotions or express appropriate emotions because of a mental disorder. 2. Hist. Evidence. (Of a witness) hostility or partiality rooted in bias, corruption, or interest. • At common law, an interested witness was not competent to testify on grounds of emotional incapacity. See State v. Craft, 41 So. 550, 551 (La. 1906). See INSANITY.

empanel, vb. (15c) To swear in (a jury) to try an issue or case. — Also spelled Impanel. [Cases: Jury C= 146.]

empaneled jury. See JURY.

empannors (em-pahr-narz), n. pl. [French] Hist. Persons who undertook lawsuits on behalf of others.

emperor. (13c) 1. The title of the sovereign ruler of an empire. 2. The chief of a confederation of states of which kings are members. • The rulers of the Roman world adopted the designation emperor after the fall of the republic. The title was later assumed by those — including Napoleon — who claimed to be their successors in the Holy Roman Empire. The sovereigns of Japan and Morocco are often called emperors, as were, in Western speech, the former sovereigns of Turkey and China. The title denotes a power and dignity superior to that of a king. It appears to be the appropriate style of the executive head of a federal government constructed on the monarchial principle and comprising several distinct kingdoms or other quasi-sovereign states, as with the German empire from 1871 to 1918.

emphatic added. (1945) A citation signal indicating that the writer quoting another's words has italicized... emphyteusis (em-fi-t(y)oo-sis), n. [Greek “implanting”] (16c) Greek, Roman & civil law. A contract by which one person delivered to another (the emphyteuta) a tract of land, either in perpetuity or for a long period of time, in exchange for the obligation to cultivate the land and to pay annual rental. • In Roman law, the land was state-owned (ager vectigalis). In the 5th century, emphyteusis was officially recognized as distinct from ownership or a lease. The land’s lessee or tenant, called an emphyteuta, had to bear any burdens imposed on the land. Although the emphyteusis was alienable, the owner had to consent to the sale. (Cf. SUPERFICIARIUS.) Unlike a usufruct, emphyteusis did not terminate with the death of the emphyteuta. Perpetual emphyteusis was abolished in the 18th century.

emplazamiento (em-plah-zah-myon-toh), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. A summons; esp., a court-issued citation requiring the addressee to appear at a designated time and place.

emply. See IMPLY.

emploi (om-plwah), n. [French] French law. Equitable conversion. • When property covered by the régime dotal is sold, the purchaser must ensure that the sale proceeds are reinvested for the wife’s benefit. See régime dotal under régime.

employ, vb. (15c) 1. To make use of. 2. To hire. 3. To use as an agent or substitute in transacting business. 4. To commission and entrust with the performance of certain acts or functions or with the management of one’s affairs.

employee. (1822) A person who works in the service of another person (the employer) under an express or implied contract of hire, under which the employer has the right to control the details of work performance. • Also spelled employe. Cf. AGENT (1); INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR. [Cases: Labor and Employment C=23.]

borrowed employee. (1932) An employee whose services are, with the employer’s consent, lent to another employer who temporarily assumes control over the employee’s work. • Under the doctrine of respondent superior, the borrowing employer is vicariously liable for the borrowed employee’s acts. But the borrowing employer may also be entitled to assert immunity under workers’ compensation laws. • Also termed borrowed servant; loaned employee; loaned servant; employee pro hac vice; special employee. See RESPONDENT SUPERIOR. [Cases: Labor and Employment C=26; Workers’ Compensation C=202.]

statutory employer. Workers’ compensation. An employee who is covered, or required to be covered, by the employer’s workers’ compensation insurance and who therefore has no independent tort claim against the employer for unintentional injuries suffered on the job. See statutory employer under employer. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation C=187, 2161.]

employee benefit plan. (1942) A written stock-purchase, savings, option, bonus, stock-appreciation, profit-sharing, thrift, incentive, pension, or similar plan solely for employees, officers, and advisers of a company. • The term includes an employee-welfare benefit plan, an employee-pension benefit plan, or a combination of those two. See 29 USCA § 1002(3). But the term excludes any plan, fund, or program (other than an apprenticeship or training program) in which no employees are plan participants. • Often shortened to plan. Cf. PENSION PLAN.

defined-benefit plan. A plan established and maintained by an employer primarily to provide systematically for the payment of definitely determinable benefits to employees over a period of years, usu. for life, after retirement; any pension plan that is not a defined-contribution plan. • Retirement benefits under a defined benefit plan generally are based on a formula that included such factors as years of service and compensation. If the trust funding the plan lacks sufficient assets to pay the promised benefits, ERISA requires the employer to cover the shortfall. 29 USCA § 1002(35). Cf. defined contribution plan. [Cases: Labor and Employment C=422.]

defined-contribution plan. Under ERISA, an employee retirement plan in which each participant has a separate account — funded by the employee’s contributions and the employer’s contributions (usu. in a preset amount) — and each participant’s benefits are based solely on what has accumulated in the participant’s account. 29 USCA § 1002(34). • Also termed defined-contribution pension plan; individual account plan. Cf. defined-benefit plan. [Cases: Labor and Employment C=423.] disability retirement plan. 1. A plan that is invoked when a covered person is disabled from working to normal retirement age. 2. A plan that provides increased benefits if a person retires because of a disability. [Cases: Labor and Employment C=427.]

employee-stock-ownership plan. A type of profit-sharing plan that invests primarily in the employer’s stock. • Employee-stock-ownership plans receive... special tax benefits and can borrow money to fund employee stock purchases, which makes them a useful corporate finance tool. IRC (26 USCA) §4975(e)(7). — Abbr. ESOP. [Cases: Internal Revenue 3575, 4297; Labor and Employment 491.]

excess-benefit plan. An employee benefit plan maintained by an employer solely for the purpose of providing benefits for certain employees in excess of limitations on contributions and benefits imposed by the Internal Revenue Code. 29 USCA §1002(36). [Cases: Labor and Employment 420.]

401(k) plan. A retirement and savings plan that allows an employee to elect to have a portion of his or her pretax salary contributed to a defined contribution plan. • Employers often match all or part of the employee's contributions. Employees usu. can choose investments from a list of options. IRC (26 USCA) §401(k). [Cases: Internal Revenue 3575.]

403(b) plan. A retirement plan for employees of public educational systems and certain tax-exempt organizations that is funded by pretax employee contributions much like a 401(k) plan, but may also provide for employer contributions. IRC (26 USCA) §403(b). — Also termed tax-sheltered annuity; tax-deferred annuity. [Cases: Internal Revenue 3587.]

457 plan. A type of deferred-compensation plan for employees of state and local governments and tax-exempt organizations that operates much like a 401(k) plan, but (except for governmental plans) is unfunded. IRC (26 USCA) §457. [Cases: Labor and Employment 417.]

governmental plan. Under ERISA, an employee benefit plan established or maintained for its employees by the governmental entity. — Also termed governmental employee benefit plan; government plan.

individual account plan. See defined-contribution plan.

Keogh plan. See KEOGH PLAN.

medical-expense reimbursement plan. An arrangement provided by an employer to reimburse employees for medical expenses, including vision and dental expenses, that are not covered under a medical plan available to all employees. • Some plans may also be used to substitute for health insurance, or to pay for medical expenses in excess of insurance-policy limits. IRC (26 USCA) 105. — Abbr. MERP. [Cases: Labor and Employment 426.]

money-purchase plan. A defined-contribution plan that provides for mandatory employer contributions without regard to employer profits. • Contributions are frequently stated as a percentage of employee compensation. [Cases: Labor and Employment 423.]

nonqualified deferred-compensation plan. An unfunded compensation arrangement, frequently offered to executives, that defers compensation and the recognition of its accompanying taxable income to a later date. • It is termed "nonqualified" because it does not qualify for favorable tax treatment under IRC (26 USCA) §401(a). The plan avoids the restrictions on qualified plans, esp. the limits on contributions and benefits and rules against discrimination in favor of highly compensated employees. — Abbr. NQDC. — Also termed nonqualified executive-compensation plan; unfunded deferred-compensation plan. [Cases: Internal Revenue 3596.]

"Generally, a nonqualified deferred compensation plan is an agreement or promise by an employer to certain individuals to pay compensation to those individuals at some future date. A nonqualified plan may also be a series of deferred compensation agreements between an employer and certain individuals that are considered to be a plan of benefits. These types of plans do not qualify for the special tax treatment afforded to plans that meet the qualification requirements of Section 401(a) of the Internal Revenue Code ... " Bruce J. McNell, Nonqualified Deferred Compensation Plans 1 (1994).

pension plan. See PENSION PLAN.

profit-sharing plan. See PROFIT-SHARING PLAN.

qualified plan. 1. See qualified pension plan under PENSION PLAN. 2. See qualified profit-sharing plan under PROFIT-SHARING PLAN.

survivor-income benefit plan. An agreement between an employer and an employee whereby the employer agrees that if the employee dies before retirement, the employer will pay a specified or determinable amount to the employee's spouse or other designated beneficiary. • Typically, a formula is used, so the benefit amount may be a multiple of the employee's salary (e.g., two times the average base pay in the three years preceding death) or based on the length of employment. — Abbr. SIB. — Also written survivor's-income benefit plan. — Also termed death-benefit-only plan (abbr. DBO). [Cases: Labor and Employment 428.]

retirement plan. An employee benefit plan — such as a pension plan or Keogh plan — provided by an employer (or a self-employed person) for an employee's retirement. [Cases: Labor and Employment 420.]

SIMPLE plan. An arrangement under which an individual retirement account or annuity is established for each eligible employee and funded by elective pretax employee contributions, much as with a 401(k) plan, and certain matching or minimum employer contributions. • The plan can be attractive to employers because it is easier to administer than a 401(k) plan. The name is a loose acronym for "Savings Incentive Match Plan for Employees." IRC (26 USCA) §408(p). [Cases: Labor and Employment 420.]

simplified employee pension plan. An arrangement under which an individual retirement account or annuity is established for each eligible employee and employment. (16c) 1. The relationship between master and servant. See MASTER AND SERVANT. 2. The act of employing. 3. The state of being employed. 4. Work for which one has been hired and is being paid by an employer.

casual employment. Work that is occasional, irregular, or for a short time — often associated with day labor.

employment at will. Employment that is usually undertaken without a contract and that may be terminated at any time, by either the employer or the employee, without cause. — Also termed at-will employment; hiring at will. [Cases: Labor and Employment C:40.]

"Surprisingly, the employment at will doctrine is not an ancient one. On the contrary, it dates only from the period in the mid-nineteenth century that saw the transformation of the employment relation from one of status to one of contract. The relentless logic of the contract approach dictated the rule that the employee had only such rights as were expressly agreed to in his contract of employment — no more and no less. This meant that there was no implication that an indefinite hiring would last for a year or any other presumed period, since if the parties had wanted a particular term they would have expressly agreed to it." 1 Lex K. Larson, Unjust Dismissal § 1.01, at 1-3 (1992).

"The doctrine of employment at will prescribed that an employee without a contract for a fixed term could be hired or fired for any reason or no reason at all. . . . [The] rule provided that employees categorized as 'at will' had no legal interest in continuing job security. Whereas early American masters had some responsibility to the public as well as to their servants when they turned dependent servants out on the world, under [this] formulation, masters could simply fire employees who had no contracts." Mark A. Rothstein et al., Employment Law § 1.4, at 9-10 (1994).
gainful employment. Work that a person can pursue and perform for money.

hazardous employment. High-risk work; work involving extra peril. • In the context of workers’ compensation, hazardous employment often requires an employer to carry workers’-compensation coverage or its equivalent, regardless of the number of employees.

joint employment. A job in which the essential terms and conditions of the employee’s work are controlled by two or more entities, as when a company hires a contractor to perform a task and retains control over the contractor’s employees in matters such as hiring, firing, discipline, conditions of employment, promulgation of work rules, assignment of day-to-day job duties, and issuance of operating instructions.

permanent employment. Work that, under a contract, is to continue indefinitely until either party wishes to terminate it for some legitimate reason.

seasonal employment. An occupation possible only during limited parts of the year, such as a summer camp counselor, a baseball-park vendor, or a shopping-mall Santa.

temporary employment. Work for a specific need or fixed duration, usu. agreed upon beforehand.

employment agency. (19c) A business that procures, for a fee, employment for others and employees for employers. • Whether the employer or the employee pays the fee depends on the terms of the agreement. See FINDER (1). [Cases: Labor and Employment C=:::935.]

Employment and Training Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Labor responsible for developing plans for training dislocated and unemployed workers, including young people and those who are disabled; and for interpreting federal workforce-security laws as they apply to the states.

employment contract. See CONTRACT.

employment-practices-liability insurance. See INSUR-ANCE.

SION (3).

Employment Standards Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Labor responsible for enforcing various laws and administering programs pertaining to minimum-wage and overtime standards, registration of farm-labor contractors, wage rates to be paid and the nondiscrimination and affirmative-action programs to be followed by government contractors and subcontractors, workers’-compensation programs for federal and certain private employers, financial integrity and the internal organizational practices of labor unions, and certification of employee protection for federally sponsored transportation programs. • The Administration operates through four divisions that have regional offices or administrators in various cities: the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs, the Wage and Hour Division, the Office of Labor-Management Standards, and the Office of Workers’ Compensation Programs. — Abbr. ESA.

emporium (em-por-ee-um), n. (16c) 1. A place for wholesale trade in commodities carried by sea. • The term is sometimes applied to a seaport town, but properly signifies only a particular place in such a town. 2. An important marketplace. 3. A large retail store that sells a wide variety of goods.

empresario (em-pre-sahr-ee-oh), n. [Spanish] 1. Spanish law. A businessperson; one who invests in or manages a business; esp., a land developer. 2. Hist. A person receiving extensive land grants as consideration for bringing people into Mexico (esp. into what would become Texas) and settling them on the land for the purpose of increasing the population, developing the country’s resources, and controlling the aboriginal peoples.

emptio (emp-shee-oh), n. [Latin “purchase”] Roman & civil law. The act of buying; a purchase. — Also spelled entio. Pl. emptiones.

emptio bonorum (bo-nor-ee-um), [Latin “purchase of goods”] A type of forced assignment for the benefit of creditors, involving a public sale of an insolvent debtor’s estate whereby the purchaser succeeded to all the debtor’s property, rights, and claims, and became responsible for the debtor’s debts and liabilities to an extent fixed before the transfer.

emptio et venditio (et ven-dish-ee-oh), [Latin “purchase and sale”] A contract of sale. • The double name reflects that both the buyer and seller had duties and rights in the transaction. In Roman law, agreement on the thing to be sold and its price were essential. The buyer could enforce the contract by actio empti, and the seller could enforce by actio venditi. — Also termed emptio venditio. See VENDITIO.

emptio rei speratae (ree-i spe-ray-tee), [Latin “purchase of a hoped-for thing”] The purchase of a thing not yet in existence or not yet in the seller’s possession; e.g., a future crop. La. Civ. Code art. 2451. • The price of such a purchase typically depended on the actual yield and thus could fluctuate.

emptio spei (spee-i), [Latin “purchase of a hope”] An emptio rei speratae in which the price is fixed, regardless of actual gain. • Even if the future event, such as the casting of a net, produced nothing, the buyer had to pay.

emptio venditio. See emptio et venditio.

A government program guaranteeing certain benefits, such as financial aid or government-provided services, to people or entities that meet the criteria set by law. • Some examples of entitlement programs are unemployment benefits, Social Security, food stamps, and agricultural price-support plans. Qualified beneficiaries have an enforceable right to participate in the programs. [Cases: Social Security and Public Welfare C=4.10.]

entity. An organization (such as a business or a governmental unit) that has a legal identity apart from its members or owners.

corporate entity. A corporation’s status as an organization existing independently of its shareholders. • As a separate entity, a corporation can, in its own name, sue and be sued, lend and borrow money, and buy, sell, lease, and mortgage property. [Cases: Corporations C=1.3.]

public entity. A governmental entity, such as a state government or one of its political subdivisions.

entity assumption. (1972) The presumption that a business is a unit separate from its owners and from other firms.

entity theory of partnership. (1916) The theory that a partnership is an entity with a legal existence apart from the partners who make it up. • Under the Uniform Partnership Act, “[a] partnership is an entity distinct from its partners.” UPA § 201 (1994). Cf. aggregate theory of partnership. [Cases: Partnership C=63.]

entrapment, n. (1899) 1. A law-enforcement officer’s or government agent’s inducement of a person to commit a crime, by means of fraud or undue persuasion, in an attempt to later bring a criminal prosecution against that person. [Cases: Criminal Law C=37.] 2. The affirmative defense of having been so induced. • To establish entrapment (in most states), the defendant must show that he or she would not have committed the crime but for the fraud or undue persuasion. — entrap, vb.

"Entrapment, so-called, is a relatively simple and very desirable concept which was unfortunately misnamed, with some resulting confusion. It is socially desirable for criminals to be apprehended and brought to justice. And there is nothing whatever wrong or out of place in setting traps for those bent on crime, provided the traps are not so arranged as likely to result in offenses by persons other than those who are ready to commit them. What the State cannot tolerate is having crime instigated by its officers. who are charged with the duty of enforcing the law. . . . Obviously 'entrapment' is not the appropriate word to express the idea of official investigation of crime, but it is so firmly entrenched that it seems wiser to accept it with due explanation than to attempt to supplant it . . . " Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 1161 (3d ed. 1982).

derivative entrapment. Entrapment in which the government uses a private person, acting either as an agent of the government or as an unwitting participant, to induce the subject of the entrapment to commit a crime. [Cases: Criminal Law $\Rightarrow-37(5).]

objective entrapment. Entrapment as judged by focusing on egregious law-enforcement conduct, not on the defendant's predisposition. [Cases: Criminal Law $\Rightarrow-37(2.1).]

sentencing entrapment. Entrapment of a defendant who is predisposed to commit a lesser offense but who is unlawfully induced to commit a more serious offense that carries a more severe sentence. — Also termed sentence-factor manipulation.

entrapment (on-tra-ba), n. [Law French] An intruder or interloper.

entrepôt (on-tra-poh), n. [French] (18c) French law. A building or place where goods from abroad may be deposited and from which those goods may then be exported to another country without paying a duty.

enumerator. A person appointed to collect census papers or schedules.

enunciate (i-nelll-see-ayt), vb. 1. To state publicly; to announce or proclaim «the court enunciated a new doctrine yesterday». 2. To articulate or pronounce <enunciate your syllables more clearly when you speak>. — enunciation, n. — enunciable, adj. — enunciator, n.

enure. See INURE.

environmental effect. (1967) Environmental law. A natural or artificial disturbance of the physical, chemical, or biological components that make up the environment.

environmental impact statement. (1971) Environmental law. 1. A document that the National Environmental Policy Act (42 USCA § 4332(2)(c)) requires a federal agency to produce for a major project or legislative proposal so that better decisions can be made about the positive and negative environmental effects of an undertaking. 2. In some states, a public document used by a government agency to analyze the significant environmental effects of a proposed project, to identify alternatives, and to disclose possible ways to reduce or avoid possible environmental damage. — Abbv. EIS. — Also termed environmental-impact report (EIR). [Cases: Environmental Law <=571-615.]

environmental law. (1971) The field of law dealing with the maintenance and protection of the environment, including preventive measures such as the requirements of environmental-impact statements, as well as measures to assign liability and provide cleanup for incidents that harm the environment. • Because most environmental litigation involves disputes with governmental agencies, environmental law is heavily intertwined with administrative law. [Cases: Environmental Law <=1.]

Environmental Protection Agency. An independent federal agency in the executive branch responsible for setting pollution-control standards in the areas of air, water, solid waste, pesticides, radiation, and toxic materials; enforcing laws enacted to protect the environment; and coordinating the antipollution efforts of state and local governments. • The commission was created by Reorganization Plan No.3 of 1970. — Abbv. EPA. [Cases: Environmental Law <=15.]

environmental terrorism. See ecoterrorism under TERRORISM.

environmental tort. See TORT.

enviroterrorism. See ecoterrorism under TERRORISM.

envoy (en-voy). (17c) 1. A high-ranking diplomat sent to a foreign country to execute a special mission or to serve as a permanent diplomatic representative. Formerly also termed envoy extraordinary. 2. A messenger or representative.

envoy extraordinary. Int'l law. 1. A person who heads alegation rather than an embassy. • In current usage, the term is honorific and has no special significance. 2. Hist. envoy (1).

envoy plenipotentiary. See ambassador plenipotentiary under AMBASSADOR.

eo die (ee-oh di-ee). [Latin] On that day; on the same day.

EOE. abbr. 1. See equal-opportunity employer under EMPLOYER. 2. Errors and omissions excepted. • This phrase is sometimes appended to an account stated to allow for slight errors. See errors-and-omissions insurance under INSURANCE.

EPC contract. See engineering, procurement, and construction contract under contract.

Ephemeral recording. Copyright. A temporary copy of a work that may be created and used by a broadcaster under a license or under a statutory exemption that waives the need to obtain the copyright owner’s permission. • A broadcaster must still pay royalties, and usu. must destroy the ephemeral recording within a statutorily defined time after creation or use. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C=67.2.]

Ep i pili ana (ay pee-lee ah-nah). [Hawaiian] Adjoining. • This term usu. refers to lands that adjoin a stream.

Epimienia (ep-ee-mee-nee-ah), n. pl. [Latin] Expenses; gifts.

Epiqueya (ep-ee-kay-ah), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. An equitable principle calling for the benign and prudent interpretation of the law according to the circumstances of the time, place, and person.

Episcopacy (i-pis-koh-pa-see), n. (17c) Eccles. law. 1. The office of a bishop. 2. A form of church government by bishops. 3. An office of overseeing or overseeing.

Episcopalia (i-pis-koh-pay-lee-ah), n. pl. (19c) Eccles. law. Synodals, pentecostals, and other customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, collected by rural deans and forwarded to the bishop.

Episcopate (i-pis-koh-pit), n. (17c) Eccles. law. 1. A bishop. 2. The dignity or office of a bishop.

Episcopus (i-pis-koh-pas), n. [Latin fr. Greek] 1. Roman law. An overseer; an inspector, such as the municipal officer responsible for oversight of the bread and other provisions that served as the citizens’ daily food. 2. A bishop.

Episcopus puerorum (i-pis-koh-por-orn pyoo-or-orn-am). [Latin “bishop of the boys”] Hist. Eccles. law. A layperson who would, on certain feasts, braid his hair, dress like a bishop, and act ludicrous. • This English custom outlasted several laws passed to abolish it.

Episodic criminal. See CRIMINAL.

Epistle (ee-pis-tal), n. (13c) Roman & Civil law. A rescript replying to a magistrate or official body. See REScript (3).

Epistola (i-pis-ta-la), n. [Latin “letter”] Hist. A charter; a written instrument to convey lands or to assure contracts. See ASSURANCE. • Also spelled epistula.

Epistulae (i-pis-tyoo-lee), n. pl. [Latin “letters”] Roman law. 1. Rescripts; esp., opinions given by the emperors in cases submitted to them for decision. 2. Opinions of juris consulti, such as Nerratius, on questions of law in the form of letters to those consulting them. • Also spelled epistolae.

EPL insurance. See employment-practices liability insurance under INSURANCE.

E pluribus unum (ee ploor-ah-bay-ah-nam). [Latin] One out of many. • This is the motto on the official seal of the United States and on several U.S. coins.

EPO. abbr. 1. See emergency protective order under protective order. 2. EUROPEAN PATENT OFFICE.

Epoch (ep-ahk), n. 1. A period of time marked by distinctive features or noteworthy events. 2. A time when a new computation is begun; a time from which memorable dates are counted. • Epochal (ep-ah-kal), adj.

EPR. abbr. EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE DIRECTORATE.

EPS. abbr. EARNINGS PER SHARE.

Equal Access Act of 1984. A federal law that prohibits school districts receiving federal funds and allowing extracurricular activities to be held in its facilities from denying secondary-school students the right to meet for religious and other purposes in public-school facilities. 20 USCA § 4071. • The constitutionality of the Act was upheld in Board of Education of Westside Community Schools v. Mergens, 496 U.S. 226, 110 S.Ct. 2356 (1990). [Cases: Schools C=72.]

Equal-access rule. (1989) Criminal law. The doctrine that contraband found on a defendant’s premises will not support a conviction if other persons have the same access to the premises as the defendant. • To invoke this defense successfully, the defendant must show that other persons did in fact have equal access to the premises; speculative evidence that trespassers might have come onto the premises will not bar a conviction. [Cases: Controlled Substances C=30.]

Equal and uniform taxation. See TAXATION.

Equal Credit Opportunity Act. A federal statute that prohibits creditors from discriminating against credit applicants on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, age, sex, or marital status with respect to any aspect of a credit transaction. 15 USCA §§ 1691(a)–(f). — Abbr. ECOA. [Cases: Consumer Credit C=31.]
equal-dignities rule. Agency. The doctrine that an agent can perform all acts requiring a writing signed by the principal only if the agent's authority is set forth in a writing. • This rule is an adjunct to the statute of frauds and applies when one or more of the signatories to a contract acted through an agent. [Cases: Principal and Agent $\Rightarrow 12$.]

Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. An independent federal commission that investigates claims of employment discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or age and enforces antidiscrimination statutes through lawsuits. • It was created by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The EEOC encourages mediation and other nonlitigious means of resolving employment disputes. A claimant must file a charge of discrimination before the EEOC before pursuing a claim under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act and certain other employment-related statutes. — Abbr. EEOC. [Cases: Civil Rights $\Rightarrow 1503$.]

equal-footing doctrine. (1949) The principle that a state admitted to the Union after 1789 enters with the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction within its borders as did the original 13 states.

equality. (15c) The quality or state of being equal; esp., likeness in power or political status. See EQUAL PROTECTION.

"We need not repeat the burning irony of Anatole France: 'The law in its majesty draws no distinction but forbids rich and poor alike from begging in the streets or from sleeping in the public parks.' Equality is meaningless under unequal conditions." Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Law 101 (1961).

political equality. The sharing of governmental decisions in such a way that, in the setting of governmental policies, the preference of each citizen is assigned an equal value.

equality before the law. (18c) The status or condition of being treated fairly according to regularly established norms of justice; esp., in British constitutional law, the notion that all persons are subject to the ordinary law of the land administered by the ordinary law courts, that officials and others are not exempt from the general duty of obedience to the law, that discretionary governmental powers must not be abused, and that the task of superintending the operation of law rests with an impartial, independent judiciary.

"A number of distinct meanings are normally given to the provision that there should be equality before the law. One meaning is that equality before the law only connotes the equal subjection of all to a common system of law, whatever its content. ... A second theory asserts that equality before the law is basically a procedural concept, pertaining to the application and enforcement of laws and the operation of the legal system. ... A third meaning normally borne by declarations that all are equal before the law, perhaps no more than a variant of the second, is that State and individual before the law should be equal." Polyvios G. Polyviou, The Equal Protection of the Laws 1–2 (1980).

equality of states. Int'l law. The doctrine that all fully independent nations are equal under international law. • This doctrine does not, of course, mean that all nations are equal in power or influence, but merely that, as nations, they all have the same legal rights.

equalization, n. (18c) 1. The raising or lowering of assessed values to achieve conformity with values in surrounding areas. 2. Tax. The adjustment of an assessment or tax to create a rate uniform with another. — Also termed equalization of taxes; fair and proper legal assessment. [Cases: Taxation $\Rightarrow 2621–2634$.]

equalization board. (1875) A local governmental agency responsible for adjusting the tax rates in different districts to ensure an equitable distribution of the tax burden. — Also termed board of equalization. [Cases: Taxation $\Rightarrow 2621–2634$.]

equalization of taxes. See equalization (2).

equalize, vb. To make equal; to cause to correspond or be the same in amount or degree.

equal-knowledge rule. Georgia law. The principle that a complainant who was at least as aware as the defendant of the danger has no grounds for recovery because the consequences could have been readily avoided. Cf. superior-knowledge rule. [Cases: Negligence $\Rightarrow 506(2)$.

equally divided. (16c) 1. (Of property) apportioned per capita — not per stirpes — among heirs on the testator's death. • A provision in a will calling for property to be divided "share and share alike" has the same effect. [Cases: Wills $\Rightarrow 530$.] 2. (Of a court, legislature, or other group) having the same number of votes on each side of an issue or dispute.

equal-management rule. The doctrine that each spouse alone may manage community property unless the law provides otherwise. Cf. head-and-master rule. [Cases: Husband and Wife $\Rightarrow 265$.]

equal-opportunity employer. See employer.

equal-or-superior-knowledge rule. See superior-knowledge rule.

Equal Pay Act. A federal law mandating that all who perform substantially the same work must be paid equally. 29 USCA § 206. [Cases: Labor and Employment $\Rightarrow 2452$.]

equal protection. (1866) The 14th Amendment guarantee that the government must treat a person or class of persons the same as it treats other persons or classes in like circumstances. • In today's constitutional jurisprudence, equal protection means that legislation that discriminates must have a rational basis for doing so. And if the legislation affects a fundamental right (such as the right to vote) or involves a suspect classification (such as race), it is unconstitutional unless it can withstand strict scrutiny. — Also termed equal protection of the laws; equal protection under the law. See rational-basis test; strict scrutiny. [Cases: Constitutional Law $\Rightarrow 3000–3833$.]

"Equal protection does not require that all persons be dealt with identically, but it does require that a distinction made have some relevance to the purpose for which the clas-

"As in all equal protection cases, . . . the crucial question is whether there is an appropriate governmental interest suitably furthered by the differential treatment." Police Dept v. Mosley, 408 U.S. 92, 95, 92 S.Ct. 2286, 2290 (1972).

"[T]he equal protection principle is exclusively associated with written Constitutions and embodies guarantees of equal treatment normally applied not only to the procedural enforcement of laws but also to the substantive content of their provisions. In other words, the equal protection of the laws is invariably treated as a substantive constitutional principle which demands that laws will only be legitimate if they can be described as just and equal." Polyvios G. Polyviou, The Equal Protection of the Laws 4 (1980).

Equal Protection Clause. (1899) The 14th Amendment provision requiring the states to give similarly situated persons or classes similar treatment under the law. Cf. DUE PROCESS CLAUSE. [Cases: Constitutional Law ☉ 3000–3833.]

equal protection of the laws. See equal protection.

equal protection under the law. See equal protection.

Equal Rights Amendment. A failed constitutional amendment that, had it been ratified, would have constitutionally prohibited sex-based discrimination. • Congress passed the Amendment in 1972, but it failed in 1982, having been ratified by only 35 of the required 38 states. — Abbr. ERA.

equal-shares clause. Insurance. A clause requiring an insurer to pay its proportionate share of a claimed loss.

Equal Time Act. A federal law requiring that a broadcasting-facility licensee who permits a legally qualified candidate for public office to use the facility for other candidates for the office. 47 USCA § 315. [Cases; Telecommunications ☉ 1153(3)].

equal-time doctrine. See FAIRNESS DOCTRINE.

equiclus (ee-kwē-loh-kōs), n. [Latin] An equal.

equinox (eek-wē-noks or ek-wō-noks), n. (16c) One of the two periods of the year when the time from the sun's rising to its setting is equal to that from its setting to its rising. • The vernal equinox is about March 21, and the autumnal equinox is about September 22.

equip, vb. (16c) To furnish for service or against a need or exigency; to fit out; to supply with whatever is necessary for efficient action.

equipment, n. (17c) The articles or implements used for a specific purpose or activity (esp. a business operation).
• Under the UCC, equipment includes goods if (1) the goods are used in or bought for a business enterprise (including farming or a profession) or by a debtor that is a nonprofit organization or a governmental subdivision or agency, and (2) the goods are not inventory, farm products, or consumer goods. UCC § 9-102(a)(33). [Cases: Secured Transactions ☉ 16.]

equipment trust. A financing device commonly used by railroads in which a trustee and the railroad together buy equipment from a manufacturer, with the trustee providing most of the purchase price, and the trustee then leases the equipment to the railroad, which pays a rental fee comprising interest, amortization for serial retirement, and the trustee's fee. See EQUIPMENT TRUST CERTIFICATE; equipment trust bond under BOND (3).

equipment trust bond. See BOND (3).

equipment trust certificate. A security, usu. issued by a railroad, to pay for new equipment. • Title to the equipment is held by a trustee until the note has been paid off. — Also termed car trust certificate; trust certificate. See equipment trust.

equitable (ek-wi-ta-bal), adj. (16c) 1. Just; consistent with principles of justice and right. 2. Existing in equity; available or sustainable by an action in equity, or under the rules and principles of equity.

equitable abstention. See abstention.

equitable action. See action in equity under ACTION (4).

equitable-adjustment theory. (1979) The doctrine that in settling a federal contract dispute, the contracting officer should make a fair adjustment within a reasonable time before the contractor has to settle with its subcontractors, suppliers, and other creditors. [Cases: United States ☉ 70(20).]

equitable adoption. See adoption by estoppel under ADOPTION (1).

equitable asset. See asset.

equitable assignment. See ASSIGNMENT (2).

equitable-benefit doctrine. Bankruptcy. The principle that allows a bankruptcy court to grant preferred status to claims for service rendered by persons other than bankruptcy officers, to the extent that the service benefited the estate, when the person filing the claim acted primarily for the benefit of the estate as a whole. [Cases: Bankruptcy ☉ 2871.]

equitable construction. See liberal construction under CONSTRUCTION.

equitable conversion. See CONVERSION (1).

equitable defense. See DEFENSE (1).

equitable disseisin. See DISSEISIN.

equitable distribution. (1893) Family law. The division of marital property by a court in a divorce proceeding, under statutory guidelines that provide for a fair, but not necessarily equal, allocation of the property between the spouses. • With equitable distribution, when a marriage ends in divorce, property acquired during the marriage is divided equitably between the spouses regardless of who holds title to the property. The courts consider many factors in awarding property, including a spouse's monetary contributions, nonmonetary assistance to a spouse's career or earning potential, the efforts of each spouse during the marriage, and the length of the marriage. The court may take into account the relative earning capacity of the spouses and the fault of either spouse. Equitable distribution is applied in 47 states (i.e., all the states except California, Louisiana, and New Mexico, which are "equal division" community-property states). — Also termed equitable division; assignment of property. Cf. title division; community property. [Cases: Divorce ☑ 248.] equitable parent. See parent.

equitable-parent doctrine. Family law. The principle that a spouse who is not the biological parent of a child born or conceived during the marriage may, in a divorce action, be considered the child's natural father or mother if (1) the other spouse and the child both acknowledge a parent-child relationship, esp. when that other spouse has cooperated in the development of this relationship before the divorce action, (2) the nonbiologically related spouse wants parental rights, and (3) he or she is willing to take on the responsibility of paying support. • The doctrine sometimes applies to nonspousal partners as well. Very few jurisdictions apply the doctrine. See Carolee Kvoriak Lezuch, Michigan's Doctrine of Equitable Parenthood, 45 Wayne L. Rev. 1529 (1999). — Also termed equitable-parenthood doctrine. [Cases: Child Custody ☑ 274; Child Support ☑ 31; Children Out-of-Wedlock ☑ 1; Parent and Child ☑ 15.] equitable recoupment. (1878) 1. Tax. A doctrine allowing a taxpayer to offset previously overpaid taxes against current taxes due, even though the taxpayer is time-barred from claiming a refund on the previous taxes. [Cases: Internal Revenue ☑ 4829.10.] 2. Tax. A doctrine allowing the government to offset taxes previously uncollected from a taxpayer against the taxpayer's current claim for a refund, even though the government is time-barred from collecting the previous taxes. • In both senses, this type of recoupment can be asserted only if the statute of limitations has created an inequitable result. See recoupment (2). [Cases: Internal Revenue ☑ 4845.] 3. A principle that diminishes a party's right to recover a debt to the extent that the party holds money or property of the debtor to which the party has no right. • This doctrine is ordinarily a defensive remedy going only to mitigation of damages. The doctrine is sometimes applied so that a claim for a tax refund that is barred by limitations may nonetheless be recouped against a tax claim of the government. — Also termed equitable-recoupment doctrine. See setoff; recoupment (3). [Cases: Set-off and Counterclaim ☑ 8.] equitable relief. See equitable remedy under remedy.

equitable right to setoff. (1895) The right to cancel cross-demands, usu. used by a bank to take from a customer's deposit accounts the amount equal to the customer's debts that have matured and that are owed to that bank. See setoff. [Cases: Banks and Banking ☑ 134; Set-off and Counterclaim ☑ 8.] equitable seisin. See seisin. equitable servitude. See restrictive covenant under covenant (4). equitable subrogation. See legal subrogation under subrogation. equitable title. See title (2). equitable tolling. (1967) 1. The doctrine that the statute of limitations will not bar a claim if the plaintiff, despite diligent efforts, did not discover the injury until after the limitations period had expired. • Equitable tolling does not require misconduct by the defendant. [Cases: Limitation of Actions ☑ 104.5.] 2. The doctrine that if a plaintiff files a suit first in one court and then refiles in another, the statute of limitations does not run while the litigation is pending in the first court if various requirements are met. • Among those requirements are (1) timely notice to the defendant; (2) no prejudice to the defendant; and (3) reasonable and good-faith conduct on the part of the plaintiff.
equitable waste. See waste (1).

equity, n. (14c) 1. Fairness; impartiality; evenhanded dealing. The company's policies require managers to use equity in dealing with subordinate employees. 2. The body of principles constituting what is fair and right; natural law. The concept of "inalienable rights" reflects the influence of equity on the Declaration of Independence.

In its popular sense it (equity) is practically equivalent to natural justice. But it would be a mistake to suppose that equity, as administered by the Courts, embraces a jurisdiction as wide and extensive as that which would result from carrying into operation all the principles of natural justice. There are many matters of natural justice wholly unprovided for, from the difficulty of framing any general rules to meet them, and from the doubtful wisdom of a policy of attempting to give a legal sanction to duties of imperfect obligation, such as charity, gratitude and kindness. A large proportion of natural justice in its widest sense is thus not judicially enforced, but is left to the conscience of each individual. R.E. Megarry, Snell's Principles of Equity 1 (23d ed. 1947).

3. The recourse to principles of justice to correct or supplement the law as applied to particular circumstances. The judge decided the case by equity because the statute did not fully address the issue. — Also termed natural equity. [Cases: Equity C=> 1.17. The court decided that the wrong was egregious enough to ignore the statute of limitations and decide the case in equity]. [Cases: Equity C=> 1.1]

4. The system of law or body of principles originating in the English Court of Chancery and superseding the common and statute law (together called "law" in the narrower sense) when the two conflict in appealing to the equity of the court, she was appealing to the "king's conscience"; CHANCERY (2).

"Equity is that system of justice which was developed in and administered by the High Court of Chancery in England in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction. This definition is rather suggestive than precise; and invites inquiry rather than answers it. This must necessarily be so. Equity, in its technical and scientific legal sense, means neither natural justice nor even all that portion of natural justice which is susceptible of being judicially enforced. It has, when employed in the language of English law, a precise, definite and limited signification, and is used to denote a system of justice which was administered in a particular court — the nature and extent of which system cannot be defined in a single sentence, but can be understood and explained only by studying the history of that court, and the principles upon which it acts. In order to begin to understand what equity is, it is necessary to understand what the English High Court of Chancery was, and how it came to exercise what is known as its extraordinary jurisdiction. Every true definition of equity must, therefore, be, to a greater or lesser extent, a history." George T. Bispham, The Principles of Equity 1–2 (Joseph D. McCoy ed., 11th ed. 1931).

"In its technical sense, equity may be defined as a portion of natural justice which, although of a nature more suitable for judicial enforcement, was for historical reasons not enforced by the Common Law Courts, an omission which was supplied by the Court of Chancery. In short, the whole distinction between equity and law is not so much a matter of substance or principle as of form and history." R.E. Megarry, Snell's Principles of Equity 2 (23d ed. 1947).

The term 'equity' is an illustration of Mr. Towkington's proposition that some words have a legal meaning very unlike their ordinary one. In ordinary language 'equity' means natural justice; but the beginner must get that idea out of his head when dealing with the system that the lawyers call equity. Originally, indeed, this system was inspired by ideas of natural justice, and that is why it acquired its name; but nowadays equity is no more (and no less) natural justice than the common law, and it is in fact nothing else than a particular branch of the law of England. Equity, therefore, is law. The student should not allow himself to be confused by the lawyer's habit of contrasting 'law' and 'equity,' for in this context 'law' is simply an abbreviation for the common law. Equity is law in the sense that it is part of the law of England; it is not law only in the sense that it is not part of the common law. Clanville Williams, Learning the Law 25–26 (11th ed. 1982).

5. A right, interest, or remedy recognizable by a court of equity. There was no formal contract formation, so they sued for breach in equity. [Cases: Equity C=> 1.1] contravening equity (kon-tra-veen-ing). (1888) A right or interest that is inconsistent with or contrary to a right sought to be enforced.

countervailing equity (kown-tar-vayl-ing). (1824) A contrary and balancing equity, equally deserving of consideration.

latent equity (lay-tant). (18c) An equitable claim or right known only by the parties for and against whom it exists, or that has been concealed from one who is interested in the subject matter. — Also termed secret equity.

perfect equity. (1821) An equitable title or right that, to be a legal title, lacks only the formal conveyance or other investiture that would make it cognizable at law; esp., the equity of a real estate purchaser who has paid the full amount due but has not yet received a deed.

secret equity. See latent equity.

6. The right to decide matters in equity; equity jurisdiction. The court decided that the wrong was egregious enough to ignore the statute of limitations and decide the case in equity. [Cases: Equity C=> 1.17. The amount by which the value of or an interest in property exceeds secured claims or liens; the difference between the value of the property and all encumbrances upon it <thanks to the real-estate boom, the mortgaged house still had high equity>]. — Also termed cushion.

negative equity. The difference between the value of an asset and the outstanding amount of the loan secured by the asset when the asset's current value is less than the loan's balance.

8. An ownership interest in property, esp. in a business. The founders gave her equity in the business in return for all her help. See owners' equity; book equity; market equity.

9. A share in a publicly traded company. He did not want to cash in his equity.

equity, bill in. See bill (2).

equity accounting method. See accounting method. equity capital. See capital.
equity contra legem (kon-tra lee-jam). Int'l law. The use of equity in derogation of the law, where, under the circumstances of the case, an exception to the law is needed to achieve an equitable and just result. — Sometimes shortened to contra legem. See ex aequo et bono. Cf. equity infra legem.

equity financing. See financing.

equity insolvency. See insolveney.

equity intra legem (in-tra lee-jam). A court's power to interpret and apply the law to achieve the most equitable result. — Sometimes shortened to intra legem. — Also written equity infra legem. Cf. equity contra legem.

equity jurisdiction. See jurisdiction.

equity jurisprudence. See jurisprudence.

equity kicker. See equity participation.

equity loan. See home equity loan under loan.

equity of exoneration (eg-zon-a-ray-shan). The right of a person who is secondarily liable on a debt to make the primarily liable party discharge the debt or reimburse any payment that the secondarily liable person has made. • One example is the right of a surety to call on the principal for reimbursement after the surety has paid the debt. Unlike contribution, which exists when the parties are equally liable, the equity of exoneration exists when parties are successively liable. — Also termed right of exoneration. See exoneration.

equity of partners. The right of each partner to have the firm's property applied to the firm's debts. [Cases: Partnership C=179,] equity of redemption. Real estate. The right of a mortgagor in default to recover property before a foreclosure sale by paying the principal, interest, and other costs that are due. • A defaulting mortgagor with an equity of redemption has the right, until the foreclosure sale, to reimburse the mortgagee and cure the default. In many jurisdictions, the mortgagor also has a statutory right to redeem within six months after the foreclosure sale, and the mortgagor becomes entitled to any surplus from the sale proceeds above the amount of the outstanding mortgage. — Also termed right of redemption. See CLOG ON THE EQUITY OF REDEMPTION; REDEMPTION (4); STATUTORY RIGHT OF REDEMPTION. [Cases: Mortgages C=591, 600.]

“...A mortgage is technically a conveyance of title to property as security for a debt. The law courts, with typical technicality, early adopted the rule that if the debt was not paid on the very day it was due, the debtor lost his land. The equity courts, however, with more liberality, and with more of a recognition of the real purpose of the transaction, recognized the fact that the securing of the debt, rather than the act of conveyance of title was the principal thing giving character to the transaction. Accordingly they alleviated the severity of the legal rule by, in effect, giving the land back to the debtor if he would pay the debt, even though it had not been paid on time. This equitable right to redeem, even after default in paying the debt when it was due, was called the ‘equity of redemption.’” Charles Herman Kinnane, A First Book on Anglo-American Law 309 (2d ed. 1952).

equity of subrogation. (1850) The right of a person who is secondarily liable on a debt, and who pays the debt, to personally enforce any right that the original creditor could have pursued against the debtor, including the right to foreclose on any security held by the creditor and any right that the creditor may have to contribution from others who are liable for the debt. — Also termed right of subrogation; (in Scots law) right of relief. See subrogation. [Cases: Subrogation C=1.]

equity-of-the-statute rule. (1959) In statutory construction, the principle that a statute should be interpreted according to the legislators' purpose and intent, even if this interpretation goes beyond the literal meaning of the text. • Under this little-used rule, for example, if a statute defines jury-tampering to include a party's “giving a juror food or drink,” the giving of cigars to a juror would also fall within that definition. Cf. golden rule; mischief rule; plain-meaning rule. [Cases: Statutes C=189.]

equity participation. (1947) The inclusion of a lender in the equity ownership of a project as a condition of the lender's granting a loan. — Also termed equity kicker.

equity praeter legem (pree-tar lee-jam) The use of equity to fill a gap in the law. — Sometimes shortened to praeter legem.

equity ratio. 1. The percentage relationship between a purchaser's equity value (e.g., the amount of a down payment) and the property value. 2. The measure of a shareholder's equity divided by total equity.

equity security. See security.

equity stock. See stock.

equity term. See term (5).

equity to a settlement. (1838) A wife's equitable right, arising when her husband sues in equity for the reduction of her equitable estate to his own possession, to have all or part of that estate settled upon herself and her children. — Also termed wife's equity; wife's settlement. [Cases: Husband and Wife C=12.]

equivalent, adj. (15c) 1. Equal in value, force, amount, effect, or significance. 2. Corresponding in effect or function; nearly equal; virtually identical.

equivalent, n. Patents. An element that (1) existed before another element; (2) can perform the same function as the other element; and (3) is recognizable as a substitute for the other element. • For instance, mechanical devices are equivalents when one skilled in the art would have recognized that each device would produce the same result. If the equivalent is known at the time an invention is conceived, the invention's patentability may be questioned. See analog. [Cases: Patents C=237.]

“If a given substitute is an equivalent under certain circumstances or in certain settings, and is not an equivalent under certain other circumstances or in certain other settings, then the substitution is patentable, provided the claim contains express limitations to the circumstances or settings in which the substitution is nonequivalent.” Roger Sherman Hoar, Patent Tactics and the Law 43 (3d ed. 1950).

equivalents doctrine. See doctrine of equivalents. equivocal (i-kwiv-a-kal), adj. (17c) 1. Of doubtful character; questionable. 2. Having more than one meaning or sense; ambiguous.

equivocality test (i-kwiv-a-kal-a-tee). See res ipsa loquitur test.

equivocation (i-kwiv-a-kay-shan). See latent ambiguity under ambiguity.

equuleus (i-kuoo-lee-as), n. [Latin] Roman law. A rack in the shape of a horse, used for torture.

erase, vb. (14c) 1. To rub or scrape out (something written); to obliterate. 2. To obliterate (recorded material). 3. To seal (criminal records) from disclosure. [Cases: Criminal Law C>1226(3); Records C>32.] — erase, n.

Errastian (i-rais-chan or i-rais-tee-an). (17c) Hist. A follower of Thomas Erastus (1524-1583), who thought that offenses against religion and morality should be punished by the civil power and not by the censures of the church. • As a sect, Erastians had great influence in England, particularly among 17th-century common law lawyers.

erase of record. See expungement of record.

ericiscundus (er-sis-kan-das), adj. [Latin] Civil law. To be divided. • A suit judicium familiae ericiscundae was one to partition an inheritance.

erect, vb. (15c) 1. To construct. 2. To establish. • In England, erect is one of the formal words of incorporation in a royal charter, being part of the phrase, "We do incorporate, erect, ordain, name, constitute, and establish." See erigimus.

erectile dysfunction. See impotence.

E reorganization. See reorganization (2).

ergo (or-goh or air-goh), adv. [Latin] Therefore; thus.

ergalabus (or-goh-lay-bas), n. [Latin] Civil law. A person who contracts to perform work by personally furnishing the materials and labor.

Erie-bound, adj. (Of a federal court) required to apply the Erie doctrine. [Cases: Federal Courts C>372.]

Erie doctrine (eer-ee). (1943) The principle that a federal court exercising diversity jurisdiction over a case that does not involve a federal question must apply the substantive law of the state where the court sits. Erie R.R. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 58 S.Ct. 817 (1938). Cf. reverse Erie doctrine. [Cases: Federal Courts C>373.]

Erie/Klaxon doctrine. See klaxon doctrine.

erigimus (i-rij-a-mos). [Latin] Hist. We erect. • This was one of the words used in a corporation’s royal charter. See erect (1).

ERISA (ee- or a-ris-a), abbr. Employee Retirement Income Security Act.

eristic (e-ris-tik), adj. Of or relating to controversy or disputatious. — Also termed eristical.
See ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR. [Cases: Appeal and Error $\Rightarrow$718–754; Federal Courts $\Rightarrow$714.]

Caldwell error. The constitutionally impermissible error of resting a death sentence on a determination made by a sentencer who has been led to believe that the responsibility for determining the appropriateness of the defendant's death sentence lies elsewhere. Caldwell v. Mississippi, 472 U.S. 320, 105 S.Ct. 2633 (1985). • The error most often occurs when the prosecutor or the judge tells the jury that the death sentence, if inappropriate, may be overthrown on appeal. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment $\subseteq$1780(2).]

clerical error. (18c) An error resulting from a minor mistake or inadvertence, esp. in writing or copying something on the record, and not from judicial reasoning or determination. • Among the boundless examples of clerical errors are omitting an appendix from a document; typing an incorrect number; mistranscribing a word; and failing to log a call. A court can correct a clerical error at any time, even after judgment has been entered. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(a); Fed. R. Crim. P. 36. — Also termed scrivener's error; vitium clericit. See VITIUM SCRIPTORIS. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure $\Rightarrow$2653; Judgment $\subseteq$2653.]

cumulative error. The prejudicial effect of two or more trial errors that may have been harmless individually. • The cumulative effect of multiple harmless errors may amount to reversible error. See CUMULATIVE-ERROR ANALYSIS. [Cases: Appeal and Error $\Rightarrow$1026; Criminal Law $\subseteq$1186.1; Federal Courts $\subseteq$891.]

error apparent of record. See plain error.

error in vacuo. See harmless error.

harmless error. (1851) An error that does not affect a party's substantive rights or the case's outcome. • A harmful error is not grounds for reversal. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 61; Fed. R. Crim. P. 52. — Also termed technical error; error in vacuo. Cf. substantial error. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure $\Rightarrow$764; Appeal and Error $\Rightarrow$1025–1074; Criminal Law $\subseteq$1162; Federal Courts $\subseteq$891.]

invited error. (1893) An error that a party cannot complain of on appeal because the party, through conduct, encouraged or prompted the trial court to make the erroneous ruling. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure $\Rightarrow$742; Appeal and Error $\Rightarrow$882; Criminal Law $\subseteq$1137.]

manifest constitutional error. (1983) An error by the trial court that has an identifiably negative impact on the trial to such a degree that the constitutional rights of a party are compromised. • A manifest constitutional error can be reviewed by a court of appeals even if the appellant did not object at trial.

manifest error. (18c) An error that is plain and indisputable, and that amounts to a complete disregard of the controlling law or the credible evidence in the record. [Cases: Appeal and Error $\Rightarrow$999(1), 1008.1(7); Criminal Law $\Rightarrow$1030(1).]

plain error. (1801) An error that is so obvious and prejudicial that an appellate court should address it despite the parties' failure to raise a proper objection at trial. • A plain error is often said to be so obvious and substantial that failure to correct it would infringe a party's due-process rights and damage the integrity of the judicial process. See Fed. R. Evid. 103(d). — Also termed fundamental error; error apparent of record. [Cases: Appeal and Error $\Rightarrow$181; Criminal Law $\Rightarrow$1030; Federal Courts $\subseteq$611.]

reversible error. (1855) An error that affects a party's substantive rights or the case's outcome, and thus is grounds for reversal if the party properly objected at trial. • A reversible error is often said to be so obvious and substantial that failure to correct it would infringe a party's due-process rights and damage the integrity of the judicial process. See Fed. R. Evid. 103(d). — Also termed fundamental error; error apparent of record. [Cases: Appeal and Error $\Rightarrow$181; Criminal Law $\Rightarrow$1030; Federal Courts $\subseteq$611.]

substantial error. An error that affects a party's substantive rights or the outcome of the case. • A substantial error may require reversal on appeal. Cf. harmless error. [Cases: Appeal and Error $\Rightarrow$181; Federal Courts $\subseteq$891.]

technical error. See harmless error.

3. An appeal .

error, assignment of. See ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR.

error, writ of. See WRT OF ERROR.

error calculi (er-or kal-kyu-uh). [Latin] Roman & civil law. An error in calculation.

"If it occurs in a judgment and is fully evident, no appeal is necessary. The judge himself may correct it. In public administration, error calculi is without any legal effect. A reexamination and correction (retractatio) is admissible even after ten or twenty years." Adolf Berger, Encyclopedic Dictionary of Roman Law 456 (1953).

error de persona (dee par-soh-na). [Latin "error of the person"]; A mistake about a person's identity. Cf. ERROR NOMISIN.

errore acerrimo non affectato insimulato e (e-ror-ee a-ser-i-moh non af-ek-tay-toh in-sim-yuu-la-toh-vee). [Latin] Hist. Through error of the most pointed or positive character, not merely pretended or feigned. error (e-ror). [Latin] 1. Mistaken through error. • This type of mistake was usu. not sufficient to invalidate a contract.

error in fact. See mistake of fact (1) under mistake.

error in law. See mistake of law (1) under mistake.

error of fact. See mistake of fact (1) under mistake.

error-of-judgment rule. The doctrine that a professional is not liable to a client for advice or an opinion given in good faith and with an honest belief that the advice was in the client’s best interests, but that was based on a mistake either in judgment or in analyzing an unsettled area of the professional’s business. • For example, an attorney who makes an error in trial tactics involving an unsettled area of the law may, under certain circumstances, defeat a malpractice claim arising from the tactical error. — Also termed judgmental immunity.

error of law. See mistake of law (1) under mistake.

errors, assignment of. See assignment of errors.

errors-and-omissions insurance. See insurance.

ERS. abbr. 1. ECONOMIC AND STATISTICS ADMINISTRATION. 2. EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS ADMINISTRATION.

ESBT. abbr. See electing small-business trust under trust (3).

escalation clause. See escalator clause.

escalator clause. (1930) 1. A contractual provision that makes pricing flexible by increasing or decreasing the contract price according to changing market conditions, such as higher or lower taxes or operating costs. Cf. de-escalation clause. [Cases: Contracts ☐ 229, 231.] 2. A provision in a divorce decree or divorce agreement providing for the automatic increase of alimony payments upon the occurrence of any of various triggering events, such as cost-of-living increases or an increase in the obligor’s salary. • Escalation clauses for child support are often unenforceable. [Cases: Child Support ☐ 161; Divorce ☐ 240(2), 243, 245.] 3. Oil & gas. A provision in a long-term gas contract allowing the base price of the gas to be adjusted as the market changes. • The actual adjustment may be up or down. [Cases: Gas ☐ 14.1(3).] — Also termed escalation clause; fluctuating clause.

escape. n. (14c) 1. The act or an instance of breaking free from confinement, restraint, or an obligation. 2. An unlawful departure from legal custody without the use of force. — Also termed actual escape. Cf. prison breach. [Cases: Escape ☐ 1.]

“[In the technical sense an] ‘escape’ is an unauthorized departure from legal custody, in a loose sense the word is used to indicate either such an unlawful departure or an avoidance of capture. And while the word is regularly used by the layman in the broader sense it usually is limited to the narrower meaning when used in the law, — although this is not always so.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 539 (3d ed. 1982).

constructive escape. A prisoner’s obtaining more liberty than the law allows, while not fully regaining freedom.

3. At common law, a criminal offense committed by a peace officer who allows a prisoner to depart unlawfully from legal custody. — Also termed voluntary escape. [Cases: Escape ☐ 3.] — escape, vb.

negligent escape. The offense committed by a peace officer who negligently allows a prisoner to depart from legal custody.

“Escapes are either voluntary, or negligent. Voluntary are such as are by the express consent of the keeper, after which he never can retake his prisoner again, (though the plaintiff may retake him at any time) but the sheriff must answer for the debt. Negligent escapes are where the prisoner escapes without his keeper’s knowledge or consent; and then upon fresh pursuit the defendant may be retaken, and the sheriff shall be excused, if he has him again before any action brought against himself for the escape.” 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 156–157 (1768).

escape clause. (1945) A contractual provision that allows a party to avoid performance under specified conditions; specif., an insurance-policy provision — usu. contained in the “other insurance” section of the policy — requiring the insured to provide coverage only if no other coverage is available. Cf. excess clause; pro rata clause.

escapee. (19c) A prisoner or other inmate who has escaped from lawful custody. [Cases: Escape ☐ 1.]

The word ‘escapee’ is employed at times by those who are not careful in the use of language. They probably think this word is comparable to ‘arrestee’ or ‘employee.’ But the arrestee did not do the arresting and the employee did not do the employing. The employee does the work but that makes him a worker, not a workee.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 560 (3d ed. 1982).

escape period. Labor law. A time agreed upon in some union contracts during which workers may withdraw from the union near the end of one term covered by the contract and before the start of the next.

escape warrant. See warrant (1).

escaipum (e-skay-pee-am), n. [Law Latin] That which comes by chance or accident. • In medieval Latin, the term often referred to the escape of a prisoner or the straying of cattle.

escheat (es-cheet), n. (14c) 1. Hist. The reversion of land ownership back to the lord when the immediate tenant dies without heirs. See writ of escheat. 2. Revocation of property (esp. real property) to the state upon the death of an owner who has neither a will nor any legal heirs. [Cases: Escheat ☐ 1–8.] 3. Property that has so reverted. See heirless estate under estate (3). — escheat, vb. — escheatable, adj.

“All escheats, under the English law, are declared to be strictly feudal, and to import the extinction of tenure. . . . The rule [was] that if lands were held in trust and the cestui escheccum (es-check-um), n. [Latin] Hist. A jury or inquisition.

Escobedo rule (es-ka-bee-doh). Criminal procedure. The principle that a statement by an unindicted, targeted suspect in police custody is inadmissible at trial unless the police warn the suspect of the right to remain silent and provide an opportunity for the suspect to consult with retained or appointed counsel. • This rule was a precursor to the Miranda rule. Escobedo v. Illinois, 378 U.S. 478, 84 S.Ct. 1758 (1964). See MIRANDA RULE.

escot (e-skot), n. (17c) Hist. English law. A tax paid in boroughs and corporations to support the community.

escribano (es-kree-bah-noh), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. A notary; specifically, an officer who has authority to set down in writing, and attest to, transactions and contracts between private persons, as well as judicial acts and proceedings.

escritura (es-kree-toor-ah), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. A written instrument, such as a contract; esp., a deed that either is prepared by an escribano or notary of a corporation or council (concejo) or is sealed with a monarchical or governmental seal.

escroquerie (es-kroh-ka-ree), n. [French] Fraud; swindling; cheating.

escrow (es-kroh), n. (16c) 1. A legal document or property delivered by a promisor to a third party to be held by the third party for a given amount of time or until the occurrence of a condition, at which time the third party is to hand over the document or property to the promisee <the agent received the escrow two weeks before the closing date>. [Cases: Deposits and Escrows C=11-26.] 2. An account held in trust or as security <the earnest money is in escrow>. — Also termed escrow account; impound account; reserve account. See escrow account under ACCOUNT. [Cases: Deposits and Escrows C=11.] 3. The holder of such a document, property, or deposit <the attorney performed the function of escrow>. — Also termed escrow agent. [Cases: Deposits and Escrows C≥13.] 4. The general arrangement under which a legal document or property is delivered to a third person until the occurrence of a condition <creating an escrow>. — escrow, vb.

Like 'scroll' and 'scrawl,' the word 'escrow' is derived from the Norman-French word for a writing or a written instrument. It has come in practice to refer to a security device: one or both parties to a transaction deposit property or an instrument with a third party until some condition has occurred. The property or instrument may be referred to as 'the escrow'; the delivery is said to be 'in escrow.' Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 102 cmt. a (1979).

escrow account. See ACCOUNT.
escrow agent. See AGENT (2). escrow agreement. (1882) The instructions given to the third-party depositary of an escrow. [Cases: Deposits and Escrows C≥15.]
escrow contract. See CONTRACT. escrow deposit. See escrow account under ACCOUNT.
escrowee. See escrow agent under AGENT (2). escrow holder. See escrow agent under AGENT (2). escrow officer. See escrow agent under AGENT (2).

E-Sign Act. The short name for the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act, a 2000 federal statute that establishes the legal equivalency of electronic contracts, electronic signatures, and other electronic records with their paper counterparts. • The E-Sign Act applies to all types of transactions, whether in interstate or foreign commerce, unless a specific exception applies. Among the few exceptions are documents related to family law and probate law, most documents required by the Uniform Commercial Code, court documents, and a list of notices that directly impact the lives of consumers (e.g., a notice of termination of utility services or a notice of eviction). [Cases: Signatures C≥1.]

esketores (es-ko-tor-eez), n. pl. Hist. Robbers; destroyers of others' lands or fortunes.
eskip (o-skip-ar), vb. To ship. — Also termed eskippare (es-ka-pair-ee).
eskippeson (a-skip-[a]-san), n. Shippage; passage by sea. — Also termed skippeson.
eslisor (es-1-2or). See ELISOR. esne (ez-nee), n. Hist. A hireling of servile condition; a hired laborer or a slave.
esnecy (es-ni-see), n. Hist. Seniority; the condition, right, or privilege of the eldest-born. • The term esp. applied to the privilege of the eldest among coparceners to make a first choice of shares upon a voluntary partition. — Also termed aescnecia.

ESOP (ee-sop). abbr. See employee-stock-ownership plan under EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN.
Espionage Act. A federal law that criminalizes and punishes espionage, spying, and related crimes. 18 USCA §§793 et seq. Two Espionage Acts were passed. The 1917 act criminalized false statements intended to interfere with the war effort; to willfully cause or attempt to cause dissension in the armed forces; or to willfully obstruct national recruiting and enlistment activities. This act remains enforceable “when the United States is at war.” The 1918 act criminalized speech intended to obstruct war-bond sales; to generate or the uniform of the Army or Navy; to urge reduced military activities. This act remains enforceable “when the United States is at war.”

essential finding. See FINDING OF FACT.

essentialia (es-seen-hee-ay-lee-a). [Law Latin “essentials”] Scots law. Terms or qualities essential to the existence of a particular right or contract. Cf. ACCIDENTALIA.

essential mistake. See mistake.

essential term. See fundamental term under TERM (2).

essoign (e-soyn). n. [fr. Old French essoi(g)ne “excuse”] (14c) Hist. 1. An excuse for not appearing in court on an appointed day in obedience to a summons. 2. The offering or presentation of such an excuse. — Also spelled essoign.

The first return-day of every term, properly speaking, is the first day of that term; and on that day the court used formerly to sit ... to hear the essoigns, or excuses, of such as did not appear according to the summons of the writ. This day therefore came to be called the essoign-day of the term.” George Crompton, Practice Common-Placed: Rules and Cases of Practice in the Courts of King’s Bench and Common Pleas liv (3d ed. 1787).

essoin vb. [fr. Old French essoi(g)ner “to excuse”] (14c) Hist. To present an excuse for not appearing in court as ordered.

Upon the summons, the defendant either appeared, or essoigned, or made default. If he did the former, the plaintiff declared against him, and the cause was proceeded in by the court; and if he did the latter, the plaintiff had liberty to take out further process against him. But if he essoigned, that is, sent an excuse to the court why he could not attend, he was to send it by the return day of the writ which if he did, a further process against him.” George Crompton, Practice Common-Placed: Rules and Cases of Practice in the Courts of King’s Bench and Common Pleas liv (3d ed. 1787).

essoin day. Hist. English law. The first general return day of the term, when the courts sat to receive essoins.
By the Law Terms Act (1830), essoin days were eliminated as a part of the term. St. 11 Geo. 4; 1 Will. 4, ch. 70, § 6.

essoin de malo villae (dee mal-oh vil-ee). Hist. A procedure by which a defendant, who was in court the first day but was then taken ill without pleading, would send two essoiners to state in court that the defendant was detained by sickness in a particular village and thus unable to attend. • This essoin would be accepted unless the plaintiff could show its falsity.

essoin roll. Hist. A roll upon which essoins were entered, together with the day to which they were adjourned.

establish, vb. (14c) 1. To settle, make, or fix firmly; to enact permanently <one object of the Constitution was to establish justice>. 2. To make or form; to bring about or into existence <Congress has the power to establish Article III courts>. 3. To prove; to convince <the House managers tried to establish the President’s guilt>.

established royalty. See royalty (1).

establishment, n. (15c) 1. The act of establishing; the state or condition of being established. 2. An institution or place of business. 3. A group of people who are in power or who control or exercise great influence over something.

Establishment Clause. (1959) The First Amendment provision that prohibits the federal and state governments from establishing an official religion, or from favoring or disfavoring one view of religion over another. U.S. Const. amend. 1. Cf. FREE EXERCISE CLAUSE. [Cases: Constitutional Law $1294.]

estadal (es-tah-dahl), n. [Spanish] Hist. In Spanish America, a measure of land of 16 square varas, or yards.

estadia (es-tah deer-ah), n. [Spanish] Spanish law. 1. A delay in a voyage, or in the delivery of cargo, caused by the charterer or consignee, who becomes liable for demurrage. 2. The time for which the party who has chartered a vessel, or is bound to receive the cargo, must pay demurrage because of a delay in performing the contract. — Also termed sobrestadía (soh-bray-stan-deer-ah).

estandard (e-stan-dard), n. [Law French] A standard of weights and measures.

est a scavorir (ay ah skah-rvahr). [Law French, prob. fr. Latin est sciemund “it is to be known”) It is to be understood or known; to wit. • This expression is common in Sir Thomas de Littleton’s 15th-century Treatise on Tenures, written in Law French. See scientum est.

estate. (15c) 1. The amount, degree, nature, and quality of a person’s interest in land or other property; esp., a real-estate interest that may become possessory, the ownership being measured in terms of duration. See periodic tenancy under TENANCY.

absolute estate. A full and complete estate that cannot be defeated.

The epithet absolute is used to distinguish an estate extended to any given time, without any condition to defeat or collateral limitation to determine [i.e., terminate] the estate in the mean time, from an estate subject to a condition or collateral limitation. The term absolute is of the same signification with the word pure or simple, a word which expresses that the estate is not determinable by any event besides the event marked by the clause of limitation.” G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 54 (3d ed. 1933).

base estate. Hist. An estate held at the will of the lord, as distinguished from a freehold.

concurrent estate. (18c) Ownership or possession of property by two or more persons at the same time. • In modern practice, there are three types of concurrent estates: tenancy in common, joint tenancy, and tenancy by the entirety. — Also termed concurrent interest.

A concurrent estate is simply an estate — whether present or future, defeasible or non-defeasible, in fee simple, in tail, for life, or for years — that is owned by two or more persons at the same time. O transfers ‘to A and B and their heirs.’ A and B own a present concurrent estate in fee simple absolute.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 53 (2d ed. 1984).

conditional estate. See estate on condition.

contingent estate. (17c) An estate that vests only if a specified event does or does not happen. Cf. estate on condition.

defeasible estate. (17c) An estate that may come to an end before its maximum duration has run because of the operation of a special limitation, a condition subsequent, or an executory limitation. • If an estate is defeasible by operation of a special limitation, it is called a determinable estate.

derivative estate. (18c) A particular interest that has been carved out of another, larger estate. Cf. original estate.

determinable estate. (17c) An estate that is defeasible by operation of a special limitation. — Also termed determinable freehold.

equitable estate. (17c) An estate recognized in equity, such as a trust beneficiary’s interest. See EQUITY.

“A legal estate was a right in rem, an equitable estate a right in personam, that is to say, the former conferred a right enforceable against the whole world, the latter one which could be enforced only against a limited number of persons.” G.C. Cheshire, Modern Law of Real Property 54 (3d ed. 1933).

equitable life estate. An interest in real or personal property that lasts for the life of the holder of the estate and that is equitable as opposed to legal in its creation. • An example is a life estate held by a trust beneficiary. [Cases: Life Estates $1-1, 21.]

estate ad remanentiam (ad rem-a-nee-shuh-am). An estate in fee simple.

estate at sufferance. See tenancy at sufferance under TENANCY.

estate at will. See tenancy at will under TENANCY. estate by curtesy. An estate owned by a wife, to which the husband is entitled upon her death. See curtesy.

estate by elegit. An estate held by a judgment creditor, entitling the creditor to the rents and profits from land owned by the debtor until the debt is paid. See elegit.

estate by entirety. A common-law estate in which each spouse is seised of the whole of the property. • An estate by entirety is based on the legal fiction that a husband and wife are a single unit. The estate consists of five unities: time, title, interest, possession, and marriage. The last of these unities distinguishes the estate by entirety from the joint tenancy. A joint tenancy can exist with any number of persons, while an estate by entirety can be held by a husband and wife and is not available to any other persons. And it can be acquired only during the marriage. This estate has a right of survivorship, but upon the death of one spouse, the surviving spouse retains the entire interest rather than acquiring the decedent’s interest. Most jurisdictions have abolished this estate. — Also termed estate by the entireties; tenancy by the entirety; tenancy by the entireties. Cf. joint tenancy and tenancy in common under tenancy. [Cases: Husband and Wife 14.2.] estate by purchase. An estate acquired in any manner other than by descent. See purchase.

estate by statute staple. An estate in a defendant’s land held by a creditor under the statute staple until the debt was paid. See statute staple.

estate by the curtesy of England. See curtesy.

estate for a term. See tenancy for a term under tenancy.

estate for life. See life estate.

estate for years. See tenancy for a term under tenancy.

estate in common. See tenancy in common under tenancy.

estate in fee simple. See fee simple.

estate in fee tail. See fee tail.

estate in gage. An estate that has been pledged as security for a debt. See mortgage.

estate in partnership. A joint estate that is vested in the members of a partnership when real estate is purchased with partnership funds and for partnership purposes. [Cases: Partnership 14.7.76.]

estate in possession. An estate in which a present interest passes to the tenant; an estate in which the tenant is entitled to receive the rents and other profits arising from the estate. [Cases: Estates in Property 14.1.]

estate in reversion. See reversion (1).

estate in severity (sev-ah-ral-tee). An estate held by a tenant separately, without any other person being joined or connected in interest.

estate in tail. See fee tail.

estate in vadio (in vad-ee-oh). An estate in gage or pledge. See mortgage.

estate less than freehold. An estate for years, an estate at will, or an estate at sufferance.

estate on condition. (18c) An estate that vests, is modified, or is defeated upon the occurrence or non-occurrence of some specified event. • While an estate on condition can revert without any action by the grantor or the grantor’s heirs, an estate on condition requires the entry of the grantor or the grantor’s heirs to end the estate whenever the condition occurs. — Also termed estate on conditional limitation; conditional estate. Cf. estate on limitation.

estate on conditional limitation. See estate on condition.

estate on condition expressed. (18c) A contingent estate in which the condition upon which the estate will fail is stated explicitly in the granting instrument.

estate on condition implied. (18c) A contingent estate having some condition that is so inseparable from the estate’s essence that it need not be expressed in words.

estate on limitation. (18c) An estate that automatically reverts back to the grantor according to a provision, usu. regarding the passage of a determined time period, designated by words such as “during,” “while,” and “as long as.” See fee simple determinable under fee simple. Cf. estate on condition.

estate pur autre vie. See life estate pur autre vie.

estate tail. See fee tail.

estate tail quasi. An estate granted by a life tenant, who, despite using language of conveyance that is otherwise sufficient to create an estate tail, is unable to grant in perpetuity.

executed estate. See remainder (1).

expectant estate. See future interest.

fast estate. See real property under property.

freehold estate. See freehold.

future estate. See future interest.

joint estate. (15c) Any of the following five types of estates: (1) a joint tenancy, (2) a tenancy in common, (3) an estate in coparcenary (a common-law estate in which coheirs hold as tenants in common), (4) a tenancy by the entirety, or (5) an estate in partnership. [Cases: Husband and Wife 14.2-14.7; Joint Tenancy 14.1; Tenancy in Common 14.1.]

landed estate. An interest in real property, esp. suburban or rural land, as distinguished from real estate situated in a city. — Also termed landed property.

leasehold estate. See leasehold.
estate

legal estate. An interest enforced in law rather than in equity.

legal life estate. See life estate.

life estate. (18c) An estate held only for the duration of a specified person's life, usu. the possessor's. • Most life estates — created, for example, by a grant "to Jane for life" — are beneficial interests under trusts, the corpus often being personal property, not real property. — Also termed estate for life; legal life estate; life tenancy. See life tenant. [Cases: Life Estates \(\supseteq 1\].

life estate pur autre vie (por oh-tro vee). (1888) A life estate for which the measuring life — the life whose duration determines the duration of the estate — is someone's rather than the possessor's. — Also spelled life estate per autre vie. [Cases: Life Estates \(\supseteq 1\].

marital estate. See marital property under property.

next eventual estate. (1836) An estate taking effect upon an event that terminates the accumulation of undisposed rents and profits; an estate taking effect when the existing estate terminates.

nonancestral estate. An estate from any source other than the owner's ancestors. — Also termed nonancestral property.

nonfreehold estate. Any estate in real property without seisin, such as an estate for years, from period to period, at will, or at sufferance; any estate except a fee simple, fee tail, or life estate.

original estate. An estate that is the first of one or more derivative estates, bearing to each other the relation of a particular estate and a reversion.

particular estate. An estate or interest less than a fee simple, such as a fee tail, a life estate, or a term for years. • It is so called because the estate is a mere part (particula) of the fee simple.

periodic estate. See periodic tenancy under tenancy.

possessionary estate. (18c) An estate giving the holder the right to possess the property, with or without an ownership interest in the property.

present estate. An estate in immediate possession; one vested at the present time, as distinguished from a future estate. See present interest under interest (2).

qualified estate. Any estate that is not absolute and unconditional; a limited or conditional estate.

reversionary estate. See reversion.

separate estate. The individual property of one of two persons who stand in a marital or business relationship. See separate property. [Cases: Divorce \(\supseteq 252.3(3); \) Husband and Wife \(\supseteq 110-202\].

settled estate. An estate created or limited under a settlement; an estate in which the powers of alienation, devising, and transmission according to the ordinary rules of descent are restrained by the settlement's terms.

stipendiary estate (sti-pen-dee-er-ee). Hist. An estate granted in return for services, usu. of a military kind.

vested estate. (18c) An estate with a present right of enjoyment or a present fixed right of future enjoyment.

2. All that a person or entity owns, including both real and personal property.

bankruptcy estate. See bankruptcy estate.

3. The property that one leaves after death; the collective assets and liabilities of a dead person. [Cases: Executors and Administrators \(\supseteq 38-73\].

"The word 'estate' was probably adopted because in early days it was possible to ascertain a man's status or position in life by discovering the particular kind of tenure by which he held his lands. The quality of his tenure gave a clue to his status. The baron for example ought in theory to be the holder of a barony; he has the status of a baron because he has the estate of a baron. . . . [O]ne of the distinguishing marks of [the] freehold estates was the uncertainty of their duration. They were invariably held either for life, or for some other space of time dependent upon an event which might not happen within a lifetime, and thus a freehold estate came to be regarded as one which involved the performance of free services only, but as one which endured for an uncertain time. In this way, the word 'estate' came to denote the quantity of a man's interest in land."

adjusted gross estate. 1. The total value of a decedent's property after subtracting administration expenses, funeral expenses, creditors' claims, and casualty losses. • The value of the adjusted gross estate is used in computing the federal estate tax. Cf. net probate estate under probate estate. 2. See gross estate (1).

ancestral estate. An estate that is acquired by descent or by operation of law with no other consideration than that of blood.

augmented estate. A refinement of the elective share to which a surviving spouse is entitled, whereby the "fair share" is identified as something other than the traditional one-third of the probate estate. • The current version of the Uniform Probate Code uses a sliding scale that increases with each year of marriage. Under the UPC, a surviving spouse has accrued full marital-property rights after 15 years of marriage. This percentage of spousal entitlement is applied to a reconceptualization of the decedent's estate to take into account more than just the assets remaining in the probate estate at death. Also added into the calculation are the value of certain inter vivos transfers that the decedent made to others in a way that deploited the probate estate; the value of similar transfers made to others by the spouse as well as the value of the marital property owned by the spouse at the decedent's death; and the value of inter vivos transfers of property made by the decedent to the spouse. The Uniform Probate Code adopted this version of the augmented-estate concept in an attempt to equalize the treatment of surviving spouses in non-community-property states vis-a-vis community-property states. estate. See DUTY (4).
estate freeze. (1986) An estate-planning maneuver whereby an owner of a closely held business exchanges common stock for dividend-paying preferred stock and gives the common stock to his or her children, thus seeking to guarantee an income in retirement and to avoid estate tax on future appreciation in the business’s value. estate from period to period. See periodic tenancy under TENANCY. estate in expectancy. See future interest.
estate in freehold. See FREEHOLD. estate in lands. (16c) 1. Property that one has in lands, tenements, or hereditaments. [Cases: Estates in Property C≤1-1.] 2. The conditions or circumstances under which a tenant stands in relation to the leased property.
estate in remainder. See remainder (1).
estate planning. (1938) 1. The preparation for the distribution and management of a person’s estate at death through the use of wills, trusts, insurance policies, and other arrangements, esp. to reduce administration costs and transfer-tax liability. [Cases: Wills C≤1-202.] 2. A branch of law that involves the arrangement of a person’s estate, taking into account the laws of wills, taxes, insurance, property, and trusts.
estates of the realm. 1. The lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons of Great Britain. — Also termed the three estates. 2. In feudal Europe, the clergy, nobles, and commons. — Because the lords spiritual had no separate assembly or negative in their political capacity, some authorities reduce the estates in Great Britain to two, the lords and commons. In England (until about the 14th century), the three estates of the realm were the clergy, barons, and knights. In legal practice, the lords spiritual and lords temporal are usu. collectively designated simply as lords.
estate’s property. See property of the estate.
estate tax. See TAX.
estate trust. See Trust.
estorer in judgment (es-tor). [Law French] To appear before a tribunal, as either plaintiff or defendant. estimated damages. See liquidated damages under DAMAGES.
estimated tax. See TAX.
estimated useful life. See USEFUL LIFE.
estop (e-stop), vb. (15c) To bar or prevent by estoppel.
estoppage (e-stop-ij), n. (18c) The state or condition of being estopped.
estoppel (e-stop-al), n. (16c) 1. A bar that prevents one from asserting a claim or right that contradicts what one has said or done before or what has been legally established as true. [Cases: Estoppel C≤52-59.] 2. A bar that prevents the relitigation of issues. 3. An affirmative defense alleging good-faith reliance on a misleading representation and an injury or detrimental change in position resulting from that reliance. Cf. WAIVER (1). [Cases: Estoppel C≤83-87.] — estop, vb.
administered collateral estoppel. See collateral estoppel.

assignee estoppel. Patents. The equitable doctrine that bars the assignee of a patent from contesting the patent's validity under some circumstances, as when the assignee seeks to avoid royalty payments, to void an assignment contract, or to mitigate damages related to the assignee's fraud. The doctrine prevents an assignee from simultaneously attacking and defending the validity of the same patent. [Cases: Patents (1923)] assignor estoppel. Patents. Estoppel barring someone who has assigned the right to a patent from later attacking the patent's validity. Westminster Elec. & Mfg. Co. v. Formica Insulation Co. 266 U.S. 342, 45 S.Ct. 117 (1924). The doctrine was narrowed by Diamond Scientific Co. v. Ambico, Inc., 848 F.2d 1220 (Fed. Cir. 1988), in which the court held that in some circumstances equity may outweigh the public-policy reasons behind the estoppel doctrine. [Cases: Patents (1923)] collateral estoppel. See collateral estoppel.

equitable estoppel. (18c) 1. A defensive doctrine preventing one party from taking unfair advantage of another when, through false language or conduct, the person to be estopped has induced another person to act in a certain way, with the result that the other person has been injured in some way. This doctrine is founded on principles of fraud. The five essential elements of this type of estoppel are that (1) there was a false representation or concealment of material facts, (2) the representation was known to be false by the party making it, or the party was negligent in not knowing its falsity, (3) it was believed to be true by the person to whom it was made, (4) the party making the representation intended that it be acted on, or the person acting on it was justified in assuming this intent, and (5) the party asserting estoppel acted on the representation in a way that will result in substantial prejudice unless the claim of estoppel succeeds. — Also termed estoppel by conduct; estoppel in pais. [Cases: Estoppel (1923)] estoppel by conduct. See equitable estoppel.

estoppel by contract. A bar that prevents a person from denying a term, fact, or performance arising from a contract that the person has entered into.

estoppel by deed. Estoppel that prevents a party to a deed from denying anything recited in that deed if the party has induced another to accept or act under the deed; esp., estoppel that prevents a grantor of a warranty deed, who does not have title at the time of the conveyance, but who later acquires title, from denying that he or she had title at the time of the transfer. See after-acquired-title doctrine. — Also termed estoppel by warranty. [Cases: Estoppel (1923)] estoppel by election. The intentional exercise of a choice between inconsistent alternatives that bars the person making the choice from the benefits of the one not selected.

estoppel by inaction. See estoppel by silence.

estoppel by judgment. See collateral estoppel.

estoppel by laches. (1894) An equitable doctrine by which some courts deny relief to a claimant who has unreasonably delayed or been negligent in asserting a claim. [Cases: Equity (1923)] estoppel by misrepresentation. An estoppel that arises when one makes a false statement that induces another person to believe something and that results in that person's reasonable and detrimental reliance on the belief. [Cases: Estoppel (1923)] estoppel by negligence. An estoppel arising when a negligent person induces someone to believe certain facts, and then the other person reasonably and detrimentally relies on that belief. [Cases: Estoppel (1923)] estoppel by record. See collateral estoppel.

estoppel by representation. An estoppel that arises when one makes a statement or admission that induces another person to believe something and that results in that person's reasonable and detrimental reliance on the belief; esp., equitable estoppel. [Cases: Estoppel (1923)] estoppel by silence. (1872) Estoppel that arises when a party is under a duty to speak but fails to do so. — Also termed estoppel by standing by; estoppel by inaction. [Cases: Estoppel (1923)] estoppel by standing by. See estoppel by silence.

estoppel by verdict. See collateral estoppel.

estoppel by warranty. See estoppel by deed.
estoppel in pais. See equitable estoppel.

estoppel on the record. See prosecution-history estoppel.

file-wrapper estoppel. See prosecution-history estoppel.

judicial estoppel. (1886) Estoppel that prevents a party from contradicting previous declarations made during the same or an earlier proceeding if the change in position would adversely affect the proceeding or constitute a fraud on the court. — Also termed doctrine of preclusion of inconsistent positions; doctrine of the conclusiveness of the judgment. [Cases: Estoppel ☐= 68.]

legal estoppel. Estoppel recognized in law (as distinguished from equitable estoppel or estoppel in pais), such as an estoppel resulting from a recital or other statement in a deed or official record, and precluding any denial or assertion concerning a fact. [Cases: Estoppel ☐= 1–51.]

marking estoppel. Patents. Estoppel that prevents a party from asserting that a product is not covered by a patent if that party has marked the product with a patent number. • This type of estoppel has been questioned in recent years, and has been sharply limited by some courts. [Cases: Patents ☐= 222.]

promissory estoppel. (1924) The principle that a promise made without consideration may nonetheless be enforced to prevent injustice if the promisor should have reasonably expected the promisee to rely on the promise and if the promisee did actually rely on the promise to his or her detriment. — Also termed (inaccurately) equitable estoppel. [Cases: Estoppel ☐= 85.]

"The doctrine of promissory estoppel is equitable in origin and nature and arose to provide a remedy through the enforcement of a gratuitous promise. Promissory is distinct from equitable estoppel in that the representation at issue is promissory rather than a representation of fact. 'Promissory estoppel and estoppel by conduct are two entirely distinct theories. The latter does not require a promise," Ann Taylor Schwing, California Affirmative Defenses § 34:16, at 35 (2d ed. 1996) (quoting Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. Transpacific Transp. Co., 88 Cal. App. 3d 823, 829 (Cal. Ct. App. 1979)).

prosecution-history estoppel. Patents. The doctrine limiting a patent-holder's invocation of the doctrine of equivalents by eliminating from the claims those elements that the holder surrendered or abandoned during the prosecution of the patent. — Also termed estoppel on the record; file-wrapper estoppel. See doctrine of equivalents. [Cases: Patents ☐= 168(2.1).]

quasi-estoppel. (1823) An equitable doctrine preventing one from repudiating an act or assertion if it would harm another who reasonably relied on the act or assertion.

technical estoppel. 1. An estoppel arising from a matter of record or from a deed made by the party who is claimed to be estopped. • Estoppels by deed or by record are called "technical" because the rules of estoppel apply with certainty in appropriate cases. [Cases: Estoppel ☐= 1, 12.] 2. COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL. See estoppel by deed.

estoppel certificate. (1897) 1. A signed statement by a party (such as a tenant or a mortgagee) certifying for another's benefit that certain facts are correct, such as that a lease exists, that there are no defaults, and that rent is paid to a certain date. • A party's delivery of this statement estops that party from later claiming a different state of facts. 2. See waiver of claims and defenses.

estoppel per rem judicatam (par rem joo-di-kay-tom). See collateral estoppel.

estover (e-stoh-var). (usu. pl.) 1. Wood that a tenant is allowed to take for fuel, the manufacture or repair of agricultural instruments, and the erection and maintenance of fences and hedges; necessary supplies. — Also termed botes. See note (1); common of estovers under common. 2. The tenant's right to obtain that wood. 3. ALIMONY.

estrage, vb. 1. To separate, to keep away (a person or thing), or to keep away from (a person or thing). 2. To destroy or divert affection, trust, and loyalty. — estrangement, n.

estray (e-stray), n. 1. A valuable tame animal found wandering and ownerless; an animal that has escaped from its owner and wanders about. • At common law, an estray belonged to the Crown or to the lord of the manor, but today the general rule is that it passes to the state in trust for the true owner, who may regain it by proving ownership. An animal cannot be an estray when on the range where it was raised and where its owner permits it to run, and esp. when the owner is known to the party who takes the animal. [Cases: Animals ☐= 58.] 2. FLOTSAM.

estreat (e-street), n. (15c) A copy or duplicate of some original writing or record, esp. of a fine or amercement imposed by a court, extracted from the record, and certified to one who is authorized and required to collect it. — Also termed (in Scots law) extract.

estreat, vb. (16c) To take out a forfeited recognizance from the recordings of a court and return it to the court to be prosecuted.

estrepe (e-streep), vb. (17c) 1. To strip; to despoil; to commit waste upon an estate, as by cutting down trees or removing buildings. 2. To injure the value of a reversionary interest by stripping or spoiling the estate. See waste (1).

estrepe (e-streep mant), n. (16c) A species of aggravated waste, by stripping or devastating land to the injury of the reversioner, esp. pending a suit for possession. See de estrepamento. [Cases: Waste ☐= 16.]
et, conj. [Latin] And. • This conjunction was the introductory word of several Latin and Law French phrases that were once common.

et adjournatur (et aj-ar-nay-tar). [Latin] Hist. And it is adjourned. • This phrase was used in the old reports, when argument of a case was adjourned to another day, or where a second argument was had.
et al. (et al or ahl). abbr. 1. [Latin et alii or et alia] And other persons <the office of Thomas Webb et al.>. 2. [Latin et alibi] And elsewhere. et alii e contra (et ay-lee-i ee kon-tra). [Latin “and others on the other side”] Hist. A phrase often used in the Year Books, describing a joinder in issue.
et cetera (et set-<1r-<1). [Latin “and others”] (12c) And other things. • The term usu. indicates additional, unspecified items in a series. — Abbr. etc.
et de ceo se mettent en le pays (ay da say-oh sa me-tawn on la pay). [Law French] Hist. And of this they put themselves upon the country. See CONCLUSION TO THE COUNTRY; GOING TO THE COUNTRY.
et de hoc ponit se super patriam (et dee hok poh-nit see s[y]oo-par pay-tree-om). [Latin] Hist. And of this he puts himself upon the country. • This was the formal conclusion of a common-law plea in bar by way of traverse. et ei legitur in haec verba (et ee-i lee-ja-tar in heek var-ba). [Latin] Hist. And it is read to him in these words. • This phrase was formerly used in entering the prayer of oyer on the record.
eternal law. See NATURAL LAW.
et habeasibi tunc hoc breve (et hay-bee-<1s ib-tang hok bree-vее). [Latin] Hist. And that you have then and there this writ. • These were the formal words directing the return of a writ. The literal translation was retained in the later form of a considerable number of writs.
et habuit (et hab-yoo-it). [Latin “and he had [it]”] Hist. A common phrase in the Year Books, indicating that a party’s application or demand was granted.
etical, adj. (16c) 1. Of or relating to moral obligations that one person owes another; esp., in law, of or relating to legal ethics <the ethical rules regarding confidences>. See LEGAL ETHICS. 2. In conformity with moral norms or standards of professional conduct <refusing to identify the informant was a perfectly ethical act>.
etical absolutism. See MORAL ABSOLUTISM.
etical consideration. (often cap.) A structural component of the ethical canons set forth in the legal profession’s Model Code of Professional Responsibility, containing a goal or ethical principle intended to guide a lawyer’s professional conduct. • Ethical considerations are often used in the interpretation and application of the Model Rules of Professional Conduct. — Abbr. EC. etical jurisprudence. See JURISPRUDENCE. etical relativism. See MORAL RELATIVISM. etical drug. See DRUG.
etical wall. (1988) A screening mechanism maintained by an organization, esp. a law firm, to protect client confidences from improper disclosure to lawyers or staff who are not involved in a particular representation. • The screening mechanism is designed to prevent lawyer or law-firm disqualification from certain representations because of conflicts of interest. — Also termed screening mechanism; Chinese wall. [Cases: Attorney and Client C=21.15.]
etics. See LEGAL ETHICS.
etnic cleansing. (1991) The officially sanctioned forcible and systematic diminution or elimination of targeted ethnic minorities from a geographic area, usu. by confiscating real and personal property, ordering or condemning mass murders and mass rapes, and expelling the survivors. • In theory, the purpose of ethnic cleansing is to drive all members of the victimized group out of a territory. In practice, ethnic cleansing is nearly synonymous with genocide as mass murder is a characteristic of both. Ethnic cleansing additionally includes mass rapes for two cultural reasons: (1) the victims are often put to death by their relatives or commit suicide, and (2) any children born are regarded as belonging to the father’s ethnic group, not the mother’s. Both acts — murder and rape — are intended to diminish or extinguish the victimized minority. Cf. GENOCIDE. etnic profiling. See RACIAL PROFILING.
et hoc paratus est verificare (et hok pa-ray-tas est ver-s<1-fi-kair-ee). [Latin] And this he is prepared to verify. • This phrase traditionally concluded a plea in confession and avoidance, or any pleading that contained new affirmative matter. A pleading containing this phrase was technically said to “conclude with a verification,” as opposed to a simple denial.
et hoc petit quod inquiratur per patriam (et hok pet-it kwod in-kwa-ray-tar par pay-tree-am). [Latin “and this he prays may be inquired of by the country”] Archaic. The conclusion of a plaintiff’s pleading that tendered an issue to the country. See CONCLUSION TO THE COUNTRY.
etiam causa non cognita (ee-shee-am kaw-z<1 non kog-ni-to). [Latin] Hist. Even where the cause is not known; absent an investigation. • Some decrees could be issued without a full factual inquiry or trial.
etiam in articulo mortis (ee-shee-am in ahr-tik-ya-loh mor-tis). [Latin] Scots law. Even at the point of death. • The phrase appeared in reference to a circumstance under which one could revoke a will.
A clause found at the end of a pleading, requesting judgment in that party's favor.

etiquette of the profession. See legal etiquette.

et modo ad hunc diem (et moh-doh ad hängk di-ám). [Latin "and now at this day"] Archaic. The formal beginning of an entry of appearance or of a continuance.

et non (et non). [Latin "and not"] Archaic. A phrase formerly used in pleading to introduce the negative averments of a special traverse. See absque hoc.

et seq. (et sek). Abr. [Latin et sequens "and the following one," et sequentes (masc.) "and the following ones," or et sequentia (neuter) "and the following ones"] (18c) And those (pages or sections) that follow <11 USCA §§ 101 et seq.

et sic (et sik). [Latin "and so"] Archaic. The introductory words of a special conclusion to a plea in bar, intending to render the plea positive and not argumentative.

et sic ad judicium (et sik ad joo-dish-ee-um). [Latin] Archaic. And so to judgment.

et sic ad patriam (et sik ad pay-tree-ám). [Latin] Hist. And so to the country. • This phrase was used in the Year Books to record an issue to the country.

et sic de anno in annum quamdiu ambobus partibus placuerit (et sik dee an-oh in an-ám kwam-dee-yoo am-ba-bas pahr-tn-plak-yoo-air-it). Hist. And so from year to year, so long as both parties please, or are agreed. • The phrase appeared in reference to tacit relocation. See tacit relocation.

et sic fecit (et sik fee-sit). [Latin] Archaic. And he did so.

et sic pendet (et sik pen-dit). [Latin] Hist. And so it hangs. • This phrase was used in the old reports to signify that a point was left undetermined.

et sic ulterius (et sik al-teer-ee-as). [Latin] Archaic. And so on; and so further; and so forth.

et uxor (et ak-8or). [Latin] Archaic. And wife. • This phrase was formerly common in case names and legal documents (esp. abstracts of title) involving a husband and wife jointly. It usu. appears in its abbreviated form, et ux. <conveyed the land to Donald Baird et ux.> See uxor.

et vir (et veer). [Latin] Archaic. And husband. See vir.

EU. abbr. European union.

Euclidean zoning. See Zoning.

eundo et redeundo (ee-ón-doh et red-ee-án-doh). [Latin] Hist. Going and returning. • This phrase was once used to describe vessels in transit.

eundo, morando, et redeundo (ee-ón-doh, mor-án-doh, et red-ee-án-doh). [Latin] Hist. Going, remaining, and returning. • This phrase was once used to describe a person (for example, a witness or legislator) who is privileged from arrest while traveling to the place where assigned duties are to be performed, while remaining there, and while returning.

eunomy (yoo-ná-mee), n. (19c) A system of good laws that lead to civil order and justice. • Also termed eunomia. Cf. dinsomy. • eunomic, adj.

Euratom. A European Union organization that coordinates the development and use of nuclear energy in Europe. • It was created in 1958 and merged with the European Economic Community in 1967. It is governed by the Council of the European Union.

eureka model. Patents. The view that the inventive process is the product of a stroke of luck rather than labor. • The notion is used to counter labor-based theories justifying intellectual-property rights, since no labor is involved in a "eureka" discovery. Cf. labor-desert model; value-added model.

eureka moment. Slang. The instant when an inventor realizes the answer to a question or the significance of a discovery. • Also termed flash of genius.

Euribor. abbr. Euro interbank offered rate.

Eurodollar. (1960) United States currency held in a bank outside the U.S., usu. in Europe, and used to settle international transactions.

Euro Interbank Offered Rate. A measure of what major international banks charge each other for large-volume, short-term loans of euros, based on interest-rate data provided daily by a panel of representative banks across Europe. • Abbr. Euribor. Cf. London interbank offered rate.

European Commission of Human Rights. A body of the Council of Europe charged with overseeing the operation of the European Convention on Human Rights. • The commission was abolished in 1998. The European Court of Human Rights absorbed its functions. See European court of human rights.

European Community. See European union.

European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. A 1950 international agreement to protect human rights. • The European Commission for Human Rights and the European Court for Human Rights were created under the convention's terms. [Cases: Treaties C=8]

European Copyright Directive. An official instruction of the European Union designed to promote uniformity in certain aspects of copyright law and related rights, esp. on the Internet. • Officially titled Directive 2001/29 on the Harmonisation of Certain Aspects of Copyright and Related Rights in the Information Society, this is the European Union equivalent of the Digital Millennium Copyright Act. Among other provisions, the directive provides broad exclusive rights of reproduction and distribution to copyright holders, and requires E.U. member nations to prohibit the circumvention of technical measures and devices intended to prevent the alteration or reproduction of copyrighted works. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property $\Rightarrow$ 34.]

European Court of Human Rights. The judicial body of the Council of Europe. • The court was set up in 1959 and was substantially changed in 1994–1998. As of 2008, the court had 47 judges, each elected by the Council of Europe's Parliamentary Assembly. The court adjudicates alleged violations of the civil and political rights enumerated in the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.

European Currency Unit. A monetary unit that was the precursor of the euro. • Created in 1979, it was an artificial currency used by the members of the European Union as their internal accounting unit. It ceased to exist in January 1999, when it was replaced by the euro. — Abbr. ECU; ecu. See €uro.

European Economic Community. See European Union.

European law. (1844) 1. The law of the European Union. 2. More broadly, the law of the European Union, together with the conventions of the Council of Europe, including the European Convention on Human Rights. 3. More broadly still, all the law current in Europe, including the law of European organizations, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and all the bilateral and multilateral conventions in effect, as well as European customary law.

European option. See option.

European Patent Convention. A 1973 treaty allowing a patent applicant to obtain patent protection in all signatory nations, mostly European Union members, through a single blanket filing and examination procedure. • The Community patent is valid in any member nation in which it is registered. The procedure is administered through the European Patent Office in Munich, Germany and The Hague, Netherlands. — Abbr. EPC. — Also termed Convention on the Grant of European Patent.

European Patent Office. The office that receives filings, conducts examinations, and issues Community patents applied for under the European Patent Convention. • The office is located in Munich, Germany, and The Hague, Netherlands.

European Patent Organization. A centralized patent-grant system, established in 1978, comprising a legislative body (the Administrative Council) and an executive body (the European Patent Office).

European-style option. See European option under option.

European Union. An association of European nations whose purpose is to achieve full economic unity (and eventual political union) by agreeing to eliminate barriers to the free movement of capital, goods, and labor among the member-nations. • The European Union was formed as the European Economic Community (EEC) by the Treaty of Rome in 1957, and later renamed the European Community (EC). The European Community became the European Union when the Maastricht Treaty on European Union took effect in November 1993. — Abbr. EU.

euthanasia (yoo-tha-nay-zho), n. (1869) The act or practice of causing or hastening the death of a person who suffers from an incurable or terminal disease or condition, esp. a painful one, for reasons of mercy. • Euthanasia is sometimes regarded by the law as second-degree murder, manslaughter, or criminally negligent homicide. In 2001, the Netherlands became the first nation to legalize euthanasia. — Also termed mercy killing. See living will; advance directive. Cf. assisted suicide under suicide; dyathanasia. [Cases: Homicide $\Rightarrow$ 765.] — eutanasic (yoo-tho-nay-zik), adj.

"The translation of the Greek word euthanasia — 'easy death' — contains an ambiguity. It connotes that the means responsible for death are painless, so that the death is an easy one. But it also suggests that the death sought would be a relief from a distressing or intolerable condition of living (or dying), so that death, and not merely the means through which it is achieved, is good or right in itself. Usually, both aspects are intended when the term euthanasia is used; but when that is not the case, there can be consequences in legal analysis." Alexander Morgan Capron, "Euthanasia," in 2 Encyclopedia of Crime and Justice 709, 709 (Sanford H. Kadish ed., 1983).

active euthanasia. Euthanasia performed by a facilitator (such as a healthcare practitioner) who not only provides the means of death but also carries out the final death-causing act.

involuntary euthanasia. Euthanasia of a competent, nonconsenting person.

nonvoluntary euthanasia. Euthanasia of an incompetent, and therefore nonconsenting, person.

passive euthanasia. The act of allowing a terminally ill person to die by either withholding or withdrawing life-sustaining support such as a respirator or feeding tube.

voluntary euthanasia. Euthanasia performed with the terminally ill person's consent. [Cases: Health $\Rightarrow$ 913.]

euthanize (yoo-tha-niz), vb. (1873) To put to death by euthanasia. • This term is used chiefly in reference to animals. — Also termed eutanatize.

evacuee. A person who has been evacuated, esp. because of a natural disaster or an imminent man-made danger, such as war. • This loanword from French dates from World War I. Cf. displaced person under person (1); refugee.

evaluative fact. See fact.

Evarts Act (ev-arts). An 1891 federal statute that established the circuit courts of appeals (now U.S. courts of appeals) and fixed the contemporary method of federal appellate review.

evasion. See tax evasion.

evasive, adj. (17c) Tending or seeking to evade; elusive; shifting. • If a pleading requiring a response is evasive, the responding party may move for a more definite statement. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(e). evasive answer. See answer (2).

even date. The same date.  1. This jargonistic phrase is sometimes used in one instrument to refer to another instrument with the same date, esp. when both relate to the same transaction (as a deed and a mortgage).

evenings. Hist. The delivery at evening or night to a customary tenant of a gratuity in the form of a portion of the grass, corn, or other crop that the tenant cuts, mows, or reaps for the lord.

even lot. See round lot under lot (3).

event-driven audit. See audit.

evergreen contract. See contract.

evict, vb. (15c) 1. To expel (a person, esp. a tenant), from real property, usu. by legal process. — Also termed put out. 2. Archaic. To recover (property or title) from a person by legal process. — evictor, n.

eviction. (16c) The act or process of legally dispossessing a person of land or rental property. See forcible entry and detainer. Cf. ejectment. [Cases: Forcible Entry and Detainer C 6; Landlord and Tenant C 287.]

actual eviction. (18c) A physical expulsion of a person from land or rental property. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C 171(1)].

constructive eviction. (1826) 1. A landlord’s act of making premises unfit for occupancy, often with the result that the tenant is compelled to leave. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C 172.] 2. The inability of a land purchaser to obtain possession because of paramount outstanding title. 1 Such an eviction usu. constitutes a breach of the covenants of warranty and quiet enjoyment.

eviction by paramount title. An eviction by judicially establishing title superior to that under which the possessor claims. — Also termed eviction by title paramount. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C 174.]

eviction by title paramount. See eviction by paramount title.

partial eviction. An eviction, either constructive or actual, from a portion of a tenant’s premises. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C 172(1), 190(2).]

retaliatory eviction. (1956) An eviction — nearly always illegal — commenced in response to a tenant’s complaints or involvement in activities with which the landlord does not agree. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C 278, 284(1), 290(3), 298(1).]

summary eviction. (1807) An eviction accomplished through a simplified legal procedure, without the formalities of a full trial. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C 293.]

total eviction. (1832) An eviction that wholly deprives the tenant of any right in the premises. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C 172(1), 190(1).]
circumstantial evidence. (18c) Evidence based on inference and not on personal knowledge or observation. Also termed indirect evidence; oblique evidence. Cf. direct evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law C => 338(2), 552; Evidence C => 100, 587.] 2. All evidence that is not given by eyewitness testimony.

"Indirect evidence (called by the civilians, oblique, and more commonly known as circumstantial evidence) is that which is applied to the principal fact, indirectly, or through the medium of other facts, by establishing certain circumstances or minor facts, already described as evidentiary, from which the principal fact is extracted and gathered by a process of special inference . . . ." Alexander M. Burrell, A Treatise on the Nature, Principles and Rules of Circumstantial Evidence 4 (1868).

"Evidence of some collateral fact, from which the existence or non-existence of some fact in question may be inferred as a probable consequence, is termed circumstantial evidence." William P. Richardson, The Law of Evidence § 111, at 68 (3d ed. 1928).

Testimonial evidence readily defines itself by its name; it is any assertion by a human being, offered to evidence the truth of the matter asserted. Circumstantial evidence is any and all other evidence. Scientifically the term 'circumstantial' is indefensible, for it does not correlate with 'testimonial'; a more correct equivalent would be 'non-testimonial.' But no one has yet invented an acceptable substitute for 'circumstantial.' John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 38 (1935).

clear and convincing evidence. (17c) Evidence indicating that the thing to be proved is highly probable or reasonably certain. This is a greater burden than preponderance of the evidence, the standard applied in most civil trials, but less than evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, the norm for criminal trials. Also termed clear and convincing proof. See reasonable doubt. Cf. preponderance of the evidence. [Cases: Evidence C => 596(1).] communicative evidence. See testimonial evidence.

competent evidence. 1. See admissible evidence. 2. See relevant evidence.

conclusive evidence. (17c) Evidence so strong as to overbear any other evidence to the contrary. Also termed conclusive proof. [Cases: Criminal Law C => 549; Evidence C => 584(1).] 2. Evidence that so preponderates as to oblige a fact-finder to come to a certain conclusion.

concomitant evidence. (17c) Evidence that, at the time of the act, the alleged doer of the act was present and actually did it.

conflicting evidence. (1803) Evidence that comes from different sources and is often irreconcilable.

corroborating evidence. (17c) Evidence that differs from but strengthens or confirms what other evidence shows (esp. that which needs support). Also termed corroborative evidence. Cf. cumulative evidence.

credible evidence. (17c) Evidence that is worthy of belief; trustworthy evidence.

critical evidence. (18c) Evidence strong enough that its presence could tilt a juror's mind. Under the Due Process Clause, an indigent criminal defendant is entitled to an expert opinion of the merits of critical evidence. Also termed crucial evidence.

crucial evidence. See critical evidence.

cumulative evidence. (18c) Additional evidence that supports a fact established by the existing evidence (esp. which does not need further support). Cf. corroborating evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law C => 675; Federal Civil Procedure C => 2011; Trial C => 56.]

demeaning evidence. (1809) The behavior and appearance of a witness on the witness stand, to be considered by the fact-finder on the issue of credibility. [Cases: Criminal Law C => 553; Evidence C => 588.]

demonstrative evidence (di-mon-str-a-tiv). (17c) Physical evidence that one can see and inspect (i.e. an explanatory aid, such as a chart, map, and some computer simulations) and that, while of probative value and usu. offered to clarify testimony, does not play a direct part in the incident in question. This term sometimes overlaps with and is used as a synonym of real evidence. Also termed illustrative evidence; autopic evidence; autopic preference; real evidence; tangible evidence. See nonverbal testimony under testimony. Cf. real evidence; testimonial evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law C => 404.5-404.85; Evidence C => 188-198.]

'There remains a source of proof, distinct from either circumstantial or testimonial evidence, viz., what the tribunal sees or hears by its own senses. Whether this should be termed 'evidence' or not is a question of words, open to difference of view. But it is universally conceded to be an available source of proof. Bentham's term for it, 'real evidence,' came into wide vogue, but is ambiguous. The term 'autopic preference' (etymologically meaning 'showing to the tribunal's own vision') is preferable. John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 39 (1935).

derivative evidence. (1961) Evidence that is discovered as a result of illegally obtained evidence and is therefore inadmissible because of the primary taint. See exclusionary rule; fruit-of-the-poisonous-tree doctrine. [Cases: Criminal Law C => 394.1(3).]

direct evidence. (16c) 1. Evidence that is based on personal knowledge or observation and that, if true, proves a fact without inference or presumption. Also termed positive evidence. Cf. circumstantial extrajudicial evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law 549; Evidence 587.] 2. See original evidence (I).

A little reflection shows that no disputed case will ordinarily be proved solely by circumstantial or solely by testimonial evidence. Ordinarily there is evidence of both kinds. The matter has been obscured by the use of the term 'direct evidence,' — a term sometimes used to mean testimonial evidence in general, but sometimes also limited to apply only to testimony directly asserting the fact-in-issue. . . . The term 'direct' evidence has no utility.” John H. Wigmore, A Students’ Textbook of the Law of Evidence 40 (1935).

documentary evidence. (18c) Evidence supplied by a writing or other document, which must be authenticated before the evidence is admissible. [Cases: Criminal Law 429-446; Evidence 325-383.] downright evidence. See extrinsic evidence (I). evidence-in-chief. (18c) Evidence used by a party in making its case-in-chief. [Cases: Criminal Law 682; Federal Civil Procedure 2015; Trial 61.]
exclusive evidence. (18c) The only facts that have, or are allowed by law to have, any probative force at all on a particular matter in issue.

"[T]here is an important class of rules declaring certain facts to be exclusive evidence, none other being admissible. The execution of a document which requires attestation can be proved in no other way than by the testimony of an attesting witness, unless owing to the death or some other circumstance his testimony is unavailable. A written contract can generally be proved in no other way than by the production of the writing itself, whenever its production is possible." John Salmond, Jurisprudence 485 (Glaville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

excusatory evidence (ek-skål-pa-tor-ee). (18c) Evidence tending to establish a criminal defendant’s innocence. Fed. R. Crim. P. 16. • The prosecution has a duty to disclose excusatory evidence in its possession or control when the evidence may be material to the outcome of the case. See Brady material. [Cases: Criminal Law 359, 1992.]

expert evidence. (16c) Evidence about a scientific, technical, professional, or other specialized issue given by a person qualified to testify because of familiarity with the subject or special training in the field. • Also termed expert testimony. Fed. R. Evid. 702-705. See Daubert test. [Cases: Criminal Law 469-494; Evidence 505-574.]

extrajudicial evidence. (18c) Evidence that does not come directly under judicial cognizance but nevertheless constitutes an intermediate link between judicial evidence and the fact requiring proof. • It includes all facts that are known to the tribunal only by way of inference from some form of judicial evidence. See judicial notice. Cf. judicial evidence.
extrinsic evidence. (17c) 1. Evidence relating to a contract but not appearing on the face of the contract because it comes from other sources, such as statements between the parties or the circumstances surrounding the agreement. • Extrinsic evidence is usu. not admissible to contradict or add to the terms of an unambiguous document. • Also termed extraneous evidence; parol evidence; evidence aliunde. [Cases: Evidence 384-469.] 2. Evidence that is not legitimately before the court. Cf. intrinsic evidence. 3. Evidence that is calculated to impeach a witness’s credibility, adduced by means other than cross-examination of the witness. • The means may include evidence in documents and recordings and the testimony of other witnesses. See Fed. R. Evid. 608(b) & note.

"Under [Federal Rule of Evidence] 608(b), if the witness denies engaging in untruthful misconduct, the cross-examiner must 'take the witness' answer,' meaning the questioner may not introduce extrinsic evidence to contradict the witness’ denial through other witness testimony or the introduction of impeaching documents, or indeed any other evidence than the cross-examination, even if the questioner waits until it is his turn to put on evidence.” Paul F. Rothstein, The Federal Rules of Evidence 312 (3d ed. 2003).
fabricated evidence. (18c) False or deceitful evidence that is unlawfully created, usu. after the relevant event, in an attempt to achieve or avoid liability or conviction. • Also termed fabricated fact.
false evidence. See false testimony under testimony.
forensic evidence. (18c) Evidence used in court; esp., evidence arrived at by scientific or technical means, such as ballistic or medical evidence. [Cases: Evidence 150.] foundational evidence. (1946) Evidence that determines the admissibility of other evidence. habit evidence. (1921) Evidence of one’s regular response to a repeated specific situation. Fed. R. Evid. 406. [Cases: Criminal Law 385; Evidence 138.] hearsay evidence. See hearsay. illegally obtained evidence. (1924) Evidence obtained by violating a statute or a person’s constitutional or other right, esp. the Fourth Amendment guarantee against unreasonable searches, the Fifth Amendment right to remain silent, or the Sixth Amendment right to counsel. [Cases: Criminal Law 394.1-394.6; Evidence 154.] illustrative evidence. See demonstrative evidence. immaterial evidence. (18c) 1. Evidence lacking in probative value. 2. Evidence offered to prove a matter that is not in issue. [Cases: Criminal Law 382; Evidence 143.]

impeachment evidence. (1861) Evidence used to undermine a witness’s credibility. Fed. R. Evid. 607-610. [Cases: Witnesses 311-409.] impertinent evidence. See irrelevant evidence. incompetent evidence. (18c) Evidence that is for any reason inadmissible. [Cases: Criminal Law 385; Evidence 148.]

icriminating evidence. (1878) Evidence tending to establish guilt or from which a fact- trier can infer guilt.
Inculpatory evidence

Evidence showing or tending to show one’s involvement in a crime or wrong.

Indirect evidence. See circumstantial evidence (1).

Indispensable evidence. (18c) Evidence without which a particular fact cannot be proved.

Insufficient evidence. (17c) Evidence that is inadequate to prove or support a finding of something. This term usu. describes a case that is not strong enough to even get to the fact-finder. [Cases: Evidence C= 584–601.]

Intrinsic evidence. (17c) 1. Evidence brought out by the examination of the witness testifying. 2. Evidence existing within a writing. Cf. extrinsic evidence (2).

Irrelevant evidence. Evidence not tending to prove or disprove a matter in issue. Fed. R. Evid. 401–403. — Also termed inadmissible evidence. See irrelevant. [Cases: Criminal Law C= 338; Evidence C= 99.]

Judicial evidence. (17c) Evidence produced in court, consisting of all facts brought to the attention of or admitted into evidence before the tribunal. Cf. extrajudicial evidence.

Legal evidence. (17c) 1. See admissible evidence. 2. All admissible evidence, both oral and documentary, of such a character that it reasonably and substantially proves the point rather than merely raising suspicion or conjecture.

Material evidence. (17c) Evidence having some logical connection with the facts of consequence or the issues. Cf. relevant evidence; immaterial evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law C= 382; Evidence C= 143.]

Mathematical evidence. (18c) 1. Loosely, evidence that establishes its conclusions with absolute certainty. 2. Evidence pertaining to mathematical or statistical matters, or probabilities.

Mediate evidence. See secondary evidence.

Medical evidence. (18c) Evidence furnished by a doctor, nurse, or other qualified medical person testifying in a professional capacity as an expert, or by a standard treatise on medicine or surgery. [Cases: Criminal Law C= 473, 476; Evidence C= 555.10.]

Moral evidence. (17c) Loosely, evidence that depends on a belief, rather than complete and absolute proof.

Generally, moral evidence is testimonial.

Multiple evidence. (1926) Evidence with probative or other value on more than one issue but usu. admitted into evidence for one specific purpose. Generally, praepartition evidence, for example, may not be probative on a particular issue but may nonetheless affect the jury’s perceptions of several issues.

Negative evidence. (17c) Evidence suggesting that an alleged fact does not exist, such as a witness’s testifying that he or she did not see an event occur. Generally, negative evidence is considered as weaker than positive evidence because a positive assertion that a witness saw an event is a stronger statement than an assertion that a witness did not see it. But a negative assertion will sometimes be considered positive evidence, depending on the witness’s opportunity to see the event. For instance, testimony that the witness watched the entire game and saw no riot in the stands is stronger than testimony stating only that the witness did not see a riot. — Also termed negative testimony. Cf. direct evidence (1). [Cases: Criminal Law C= 387; Evidence C= 147, 586.]

Newly discovered evidence. (18c) Evidence existing at the time of a motion or trial but then unknown to a party, who, upon later discovering it, may assert it as grounds for reconsideration or a new trial. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 60(b). [Cases: Criminal Law C= 938; Federal Civil Procedure C= 928, 2350, 2655; New Trial C= 99.]

No evidence. See no evidence.

Oblique evidence. See circumstantial evidence (1).

Opinion evidence. (1955) A witness’s belief, thought, inference, or conclusion concerning a fact or facts. Fed. R. Evid. 701–705. See opinion (3); opinion rule. [Cases: Criminal Law C= 448; Evidence C= 470–574.]

"In a sense all testimony to matter of fact is opinion evidence, i.e. it is a conclusion formed from phenomena and mental impressions." James B. Thayer, A Preliminary Treatise on Evidence at the Common Law 524 (1898).

Oral evidence. See testimonial evidence.

Original evidence. (18c) 1. A witness’s statement that he or she perceived a fact in issue by one of the five senses, or that the witness was in a particular physical or mental state. — Also termed direct evidence. Cf. hearsay. 2. See best evidence.

Parol evidence (po-rol or par-ol). (18c) 1. Evidence of oral statements. [Cases: Criminal Law C= 447; Evidence C= 384–469.] 2. See extrinsic evidence (1). See parol-evidence rule.

Partial evidence. (17c) Evidence that establishes one of a series of facts.

Personal evidence. See testimony.

Positive evidence. See direct evidence (1).

Preappointed evidence. (1850) Evidence prescribed in advance (as by statute) for the proof of certain facts.

Preliminary evidence. (18c) Evidence that is necessary to begin a hearing or trial and that may be received conditionally in anticipation of other evidence linking it to issues in the case. Fed. R. Evid. 104. [Cases: Evidence C= 117; Federal Civil Procedure C= 2014.]

Prima facie evidence (pra-ma-fay-sh). (18c) Evidence that will establish a fact or sustain a judgment unless contradictory evidence is produced. [Cases: Evidence § 584(1).]

"The legislative branch may create an evidential presumption, or a rule of 'prima facie' evidence, i.e., a rule which does not shut out evidence, but merely declares that certain conduct shall suffice as evidence until the opponent produces contrary evidence." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 237 (1925).

primary evidence. See best evidence.

privileged evidence. (1897) Evidence that is exempt from production to an opposing party or tribunal (with certain, limited exceptions) because it is covered by one or more statutory or common-law protections, such as the attorney–client privilege. See privileged communication under communication. [Cases: Privileged Communications and Confidentiality § 1, 2, 100.]

probable evidence. See presumptive evidence.

probative evidence (proh-ba-tiv). (1877) Evidence that tends to prove or disprove a point in issue. Cf. relevant evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law §=338; Evidence §=99.]

proffered evidence (prof-ard). (1904) 1. Evidence that is offered to the court to obtain a ruling on its admissibility. 2. Evidence whose admissibility depends on the existence or nonexistence of a preliminary fact. [Cases: Evidence §=117; Federal Civil Procedure §=2011.]

proper evidence. See admissible evidence.

prospectant evidence (pra-spek-tont). (1924) Evidence that, before someone does an act, suggests that the person might or might not do the act. • This evidence typically falls into any of five categories: (1) moral character or disposition, (2) physical and mental capacity, (3) habit or custom, (4) emotion or motive, and (5) plan, design, or intention.

Queen's evidence. English law. Testimony provided by one criminal defendant, usu. under a promise of pardon, against another criminal defendant. — Also termed (when a king reigns) King's evidence. See state's evidence.

real evidence. (17c) 1. Physical evidence (such as clothing or a knife wound) that itself plays a direct part in the incident in question. — Also termed physical evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law §=405; Evidence §=188.] 2. See demonstrative evidence.

"Anything which is believed for any other reason than that someone has said so, is believed on real evidence." John Salmend, Jurisprudence 480 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

rebuttal evidence. (1859) Evidence offered to disprove or contradict the evidence presented by an opposing party. • Rebuttal evidence is introduced in the rebutting party's answering case; it is not adduced, e.g., through cross-examination during the case-in-chief of the party to be rebutted. — Also termed rebutting evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law §=683; Federal Civil Procedure §=2015; Trial §=62.]

relevant evidence. (18c) Evidence tending to prove or disprove a matter in issue. • Relevant evidence is both probative and material and is admissible unless excluded by a specific statute or rule. Fed. R. Evid. 401–403. — Also termed competent evidence. Cf. material evidence; probative evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law §=338; Evidence §=99.]

reputation evidence. (1888) Evidence of what one is thought by others to be. • Reputation evidence may be introduced as proof of character when character is in issue or is used circumstantially. Fed. R. Evid. 405(a). — Also termed reputational evidence. Cf. character evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law §=375; Evidence §=106; Witnesses §=333–362.]

reputational evidence. (1879) Evidence that, although it occurs after an act has been done, suggests that the alleged door of the act actually did it when goods have been stolen, and the thief is sought, a person's later possession of those goods amounts to retrospective evidence that this person took them>. — Also termed traces.

satisfactory evidence. (17c) Evidence that is sufficient to satisfy an unprejudiced mind seeking the truth. — Also termed sufficient evidence; satisfactory proof. [Cases: Evidence §=584(1).]

scientific evidence. (17c) Fact or opinion evidence that purports to draw on specialized knowledge of a science or to rely on scientific principles for its evidentiary value. See Daubert test. [Cases: Criminal Law §=388; Evidence §=150, 505–574.]

secondary evidence. (17c) Evidence that is inferior to the primary or best evidence and that becomes admissible when the primary or best evidence is lost or inaccessible. • Examples include a copy of a lost instrument or testimony regarding a lost instrument's contents. — Also termed mediate evidence; mediate testimony; substitutionary evidence. See Fed. R. Evid. 1004. Cf. best evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law §=398, 403; Evidence §=157–187.]

secret evidence. (1983) Classified information that may be used against a defendant in an immigration proceeding but withheld from the defendant, the defendant's lawyer, and the public on national-security grounds. • The use of secret evidence was made easier under the Anti-Terrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship §=423.]

signature evidence. Highly distinctive evidence of a person's prior bad acts. • While ordinarily inadmissible, signature evidence will be admitted if it shows, for example, that two crimes were committed through the same planning, design, scheme, or modus operandi, and in such a way that the prior act and the current act are uniquely identifiable as those of the defendant. See Fed. R. Evid. 404(b). [Cases: Criminal Law §=369.15; Evidence §=129(5), 133.]
slight evidence. (18c) A small quantity of evidence; esp., the small amount of evidence sufficient to remove a presumption from a case or for a rational fact-finder to conclude that something essential has not been established beyond a reasonable doubt. See slight-evidence rule.

state's evidence. (1886) Testimony provided by one criminal defendant — under a promise of immunity or reduced sentence — against another criminal defendant. See turn state’s evidence.

substantial evidence. (17c) 1. Evidence that a reasonable mind could accept as adequate to support a conclusion; evidence beyond a scintilla. See substantial-evidence rule. (Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure 9-137; Evidence 9-597.) 2. The product of adequately controlled investigations, including clinical studies, carried out by qualified experts that establish the effectiveness of a drug under FSA regulations. 21 USC § 355(e). substantive evidence (sub-stan-tiv). Evidence offered to help establish a fact in issue, as opposed to evidence directed to impeach or to support a witness’s credibility. (Cases: Criminal Law 9-337; Evidence 9-266.)

substitutionary evidence. See secondary evidence.

sufficient evidence. See satisfactory evidence.

tainted evidence. (1876) Evidence that is inadmissible because it was directly or indirectly obtained by illegal means. See fruit-of-the-poisonous-tree doctrine. (Cases: Criminal Law 9-394; Evidence 9-154.)

tangible evidence. Physical evidence that is either real or demonstrative. See demonstrative evidence; real evidence.

testimonial evidence. (1831) A person’s testimony offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted; esp., evidence elicited from a witness. — Also termed communicative evidence; oral evidence. Cf. demonstrative evidence. (Cases: Trial 9-43.)

"An assertion is testimonial evidence whether made out of court or in court, if it is offered with a view to persuading the tribunal of the matter asserted." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 120 (1935).

traditional evidence. (18c) Evidence derived from a deceased person’s former statements or reputation. — Traditional evidence is admissible to prove ancestry, ancient boundaries, or similar facts, usu. when no living witnesses are available to testify. (Cases: Boundaries 9-35(2); Evidence 9-274, 302.)

unwritten evidence. (18c) Evidence given orally, in court or by deposition.

evidence by inspection. See demonstrative evidence under evidence.

evidence code. A relatively comprehensive set of statutory provisions or rules governing the admissibility of evidence at hearings and trials.

evidence of debt. See security (4).

evidence of indebtedness. See security (4).

evidence of insurability. Information — such as medical records or a medical examination — that an insurer may require to establish a potential insured’s qualification for a particular insurance policy. (Cases: Insurance 9-2052.)

evidence of title. (17c) The means by which the ownership of land is satisfactorily demonstrated within a given jurisdiction. See deed (2), (3). (Cases: Property 9-9.)

"There are four kinds of evidence of title: abstract and opinion, certificate of title, title insurance and Torrens certificate. The certificate of title is used extensively in the Eastern states, and some Southern states. In urban centers in a great many sections of the country, title insurance occupies a dominant position in real estate transactions. In farm areas the abstract and opinion method is common. To a great extent, the acceptability of a particular kind of evidence of title depends on the local custom." Robert Kratovil, Real Estate Law 170 (6th ed. 1974).

evidence rules. See evidence (4).

evidencing feature. Evidence. A group of circumstances that, when taken as a whole, form a composite feature that can be reliably associated with a single object. — This term appears more frequently in criminal cases than in civil. In criminal cases, it usu. refers to evidence that establishes a perpetrator’s identity, but in civil cases it often refers to evidence that an event did or did not occur. — Also termed evidencing mark; evidential mark.

evidencing mark. See evidencing feature.

evidential, adj. Of, relating to, relying on, or constituting evidence; evidentiary (1).

evidential fact. See evidentiary fact (2) under fact.

evidential mark. See evidencing feature.

evidentiary (ev-i-den-sha-ree), adj. (1810) 1. Having the quality of evidence; constituting evidence; evidencing. 2. Pertaining to the rules of evidence or the evidence in a particular case.

evidentiary fact. See fact.

evidentiary hearing. See hearing.

evince, vb. (17c) To show, indicate, or reveal <in abstinence from the vote, Hariden evisced misgivings about the nomination>.

evocation (ev-a-kay-shun). French law. The act of withdrawing a case from an inferior court and bringing it before a superior court.

evocative trademark. See suggestive trademark under trademark.

evolution statute. See anti-evolution statute.

ex. (18c) 1. Former <ex-wife>. 2. Without <ex rights>. 3. From <ex cathedra>. 4. (usu. cap.) abbr. Exhibit <Ex. 4>. 5. abbr. Example <this is but one ex. of several that might be cited>. 6. (cap.) abbr. EXCHEQUER.

exacta diligentia. See DILIGENTIA.

exaction, n. (15c) 1. The act of demanding more money than is due; exortion. 2. A fee, reward, or other compensation arbitrarily or wrongfully demanded. [Cases: Extortion and Threats C=7, 25.1] — exact, vb.

exactor. 1. Civil law. A tax collector; a gatherer or receiver of money. 2. Hist. A collector of public funds; a tax collector.

ex adverso (eks ad-var-soh). [Latin] On the other side. • This term is sometimes applied to opposing counsel.

ex aquo et bono (eks ee-kwoh et boh-noh). [Latin] According to what is equitable and good. • A decision-maker (esp. in international law) who is authorized to decide ex aequo et bono is not bound by legal rules and may instead follow equitable principles. For example, article 38(2) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice provides that the Court may "decide a case ex aequo et bono if the parties agree thereto." 37 ILM 999. [Cases: Equity C=54.]

ex-all. Without all rights and privileges. • Securities sold ex-all reserve all rights and privileges, such as pending dividends, to the seller.

examen (eg-zay man), n. [Law Latin] A trial; investigation.

examination. (14c) 1. The questioning of a witness under oath. See DIRECT EXAMINATION; CROSS-EXAMINATION. [Cases: Witnesses C=224-228.] 2. Bankruptcy. The questioning of a debtor, esp. at the first meeting of creditors, concerning such matters as the bankrupt’s debts and assets. [Cases: Bankruptcy C=3040.] 3. An inquiry made at the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, upon application for a patent, into the alleged invention’s novelty and utility, and whether it interferes with any other pending application or in-force patent. [Cases: Patents C=104.] 4. Banking. The government’s fact-finding mechanism for determining the soundness of a bank’s finances and management. [Cases: Banks and Banking C=17, 235.] 5. Insurance. A periodic investigation by a state insurance commission into the affairs and soundness of an insurance company licensed in that state. [Cases: Insurance C=1048.] preliminary examination. Patents. A patent office’s initial review of an application, usu. to see whether the specification is properly set out and to prepare a search report. [Cases: Patents C=104.]

4. PRELIMINARY HEARING. 5. A test, such as a bar examination.

examination before trial. See DEPOSITION (1).

examination-in-chief. See DIRECT EXAMINATION.

examination on the voir dire. See VOIR DIRE.

examination pro interesse suo (proh in-tar-es ee s[y] oo-oh). [Latin “according to his interest”] A judicial inquiry into the merits of a person’s claim to sequestered property. [Cases: Sequestration C=18.] • “In practice, an examination pro interesse suo is an inquiry described as follows: When any person claims to be entitled to an estate or other property sequestered, whether by mortgage or judgment, lease or otherwise, or has a title paramount to the sequestration, he should apply to the court to direct an inquiry whether the applicant has any and what interest in the property sequestered.” 79 A.C.J.S. Sequestration § 31, at 589 (1995).

examination system. Patents. A patent system in which an invention is subjected to official scrutiny to determine whether it qualifies for patent protection. Cf. REGISTRATION SYSTEM.

examined copy. See COPY.

examiner. (16c) 1. One authorized to conduct an examination; esp., a person appointed by the court, esp. a court of equity, to administer an oath and take testimony. — Also formerly termed examiner in chancery. See MASTER (2). 2. A patent officer responsible for determining the patentability of an invention submitted to the patent office. [Cases: Patents C=104.] 3. MEDICAL EXAMINER. 4. BANK EXAMINER.

examiner in chancery. See EXAMINER (1).

examiner-in-chief. Hist. Patents. 1. A member of the quasi-judicial body in the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office that formerly heard appeals of interference decisions and patent-application rejections. 2. (pl. cap.) The body comprising those members; the predecessor of the Board of Appeals, the Board of Patent Interferences, and the present-day Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences.

examiner’s amendment. Patents & Trademarks. Minor changes in the form of a patent or trademark application, made by the examiner rather than the applicant. • For example, the examiner may correct spelling and grammar rather than wait for the applicant to respond. A patent examiner may also amend or cancel claims if authorized by the applicant. [Cases: Patents C=104; Trademarks C=1287.]

examiner’s answer. Patents. The brief filed by a patent examiner with the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences to rebut the arguments in an appeal brief and to defend the examiner’s decision to reject the application. Cf. APPEAL BRIEF UNDER BRIEF. [Cases: Patents C=111.]

examining authority. See AUTHORITY (3).

examining board. (1851) An appointed group of public officials responsible for conducting the tests required by those applying for occupational and professional licences. — Also termed board of examiners. [Cases: Licenses ⊆ 21.]

examining court. See COURT.

dating court. See COURT.

eaximal roll (eks-an-yoo-al). [Law Latin] A detailed description of an invention’s embodiment. • Alternatives without detail may be referred to as by example. — Also termed patic example; working example. [Cases: Patents ⊆ 99.]

eaxante (eks an-tee), adj. & adv. [Latin “from before”] (1937) Based on assumption and prediction, on how things appeared beforehand, rather than in hindsight; subjective; prospective from an antenpective. Cf. ex post.

ex arbitrio judicis (eks kaw-tee drong-a or kath-a-dra), adv. & adj. [Latin “from the chair”] (17c) By virtue of one’s high office or position; with authority <ex cathedra pronouncements>.

ex assensu curiae (eks a-sen-s[y]oo kyoor-ee-ee or -t). [Latin] By or with the consent of the court.

ex assensu patris (eks a-sen-s[y]oo pay-tris). [Latin “by or with the consent of the father”] (17c) By hearsay; by report.

ex bonis (eks boh-nis). [Latin] Civil law. Of or relating to goods or property.

ex cambion (eks-kam-bee-ah-n), n. Scots law. 1. The exchange of one piece of property for another, esp. an exchange of heritable estates. 2. EXCAMBIUM (1).

ex cambium (eks-kam-bee-om), n. [Latin] An exchange; a place where merchants meet to transact their business. — Also termed (in Scots law) exambion. 2. An equivalent in recompense; a recompense in lieu of dower ad ostium ecclesiae.

ex capite (eks kap-i-tee). [Latin] On the ground of; by reason of. See LIEGE POUSTIE.

ex capite lecti (eks kap-i-tee lek-ti). [Law Latin] Scots law. On the ground of deathbed. • Under some circumstances, a legal heir could overturn a deed that a grantor made to the heir’s detriment if the deed were made within 60 days before the grantor’s death.

ex capite metus (eks kap-i-tee mee-tas). [Law Latin] Scots law. On the ground of fear. • A transaction could be rescinded if it were induced by serious threats.

ex capite minoremitatis et laesiones (eks kap-i-tee minor-en-i-tay-tis et lee-z[ee-oh-nis]). [Law Latin] Scots law. On the ground of minority and lesion. • The phrase appeared in reference to a ground upon which a minor could be restored against deeds granted by him during his minority. The phrase also referred to a basis upon which a minor could set aside a deed (on the ground of lesion) if the deed were substantially onerous.

ex cathedra (eks kaw-tee drah or kath-a-drah). [Latin “from the chair”] (17c) By virtue of one’s high office or position; with authority <ex cathedra pronouncements>.

ex causa mandati (eks kwaz-a man-day-ti). [Latin] Scots law. On account of the mandate; because of the mandate.

ex causa mandati. “A mandator is entitled to claim from the mandator reimbursement of all moneys disbursed, as well as relief from all obligations incurred, ex causa mandati — i.e., on account of the matter which the mandate authorised to be done or performed.” John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 195 (4th ed. 1894).

ex causa postestatis (eks kwaz-a poh-tes-tay-tis). Roman law. Because of his position of authority. • Certain men could not marry women who were subject to their guardianship or control, and the reason was said to be ex causa postestatis.

“Certain impediments to marriage in the civil law were described as being ex causa postestatis. Thus a tutor or curator could not marry his female ward until his office had terminated, or unless his accounts had been passed. A person administering a government or public office in a province, and the members of his family, were not permitted to intermarry with a person domiciled in his province, unless they had been betrothed to each other before he had accepted the office.” Alexander Wood Renton & George Grenville Phillimore, The Comparative Law of Marriage and Divorce 6 (1910).

excellency, (usu. cap.) (16c) A title of honor given to certain high officials or dignitaries, such as governors, ambassadors, and Roman Catholic bishops or archbishops.

Excelsior list. Labor law. A roster of the names and addresses of employees who are eligible to vote in a union election. • The NLRB requires an employer to file the list within seven days after the employer and a union reach a consent-election agreement. Excelsior Underwear, Inc., 156 N.L.R.B. 1236 (1966). [Cases: Labor and Employment.]

exceptio (ek-sep-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Hist. 1. An exception, plea, or objection. 2. Roman & civil law. A defendant’s plea admitting the claim in principle but alleging facts or legal provisions that negate it in this instance. 3. A defense to a claim that is justly brought but that unjustly accurses the particular defendant named. Pl. exceptiones (ek-sep-shee-oh-neez).

exceptio dilatoria (dil-a-tor-ee-oh). A dilatory exception; an exception that defeated the action for a time and created a delay, such as an agreement not to sue within a certain time.

exceptio doli mali (doh-li mal-ee). An exception, defense, or plea of fraud. — Sometimes shortened to exceptio doli. exceptio dominii (das-min-ee). A claim of ownership by the defendant in an action to recover property.

exceptio dotis caucae non numeratae (doh-tis kaw-tsee non n[y]oo-ma-ray-tee). A defense to an action for the restitution of dowry, asserting that, although promised, dowry was never paid.

exceptio in factum (in fak-tem). An exception on the facts; an exception or plea founded on the peculiar circumstances of a case.

exceptio in personam (in par-soh-nam). A plea or defense of a personal nature that only the person to whom it is granted by law may assert.

exceptio in rem (in reem). A plea or defense that is not of a personal nature but is connected with the legal circumstances on which the suit is founded, and that may therefore be alleged by any party in interest, such as an heir or surety of the proper or original debtor.

exceptio jurisjurandi (joor-is-juu-ran-dee). An exception of oath; an exception or plea that the matter had been sworn to. • This kind of exception was allowed if a debtor, at a creditor’s instance, had sworn that nothing was due the creditor, but the creditor sued anyway.

exceptio metus (met-as). An exception, defense, or plea of fear or compulsion.

exceptio non adimpleti contractus (non ad-im-plee-tee kon-trak-tas). An exception in a contract action involving mutual duties or obligations, to the effect that the plaintiff may not sue if the plaintiff’s own obligations have not been performed.

exceptio non numeratae pecuniae (ek-sep-shee-oh non n[y]oo-ma-ray-tee pi kyoo-nee-ee). [Latin] Roman law. An exception or defense that money was not paid.

“This was one of the Roman law exceptions, founded on the obligatio literarum of the Romans. The obligatio literarum was constituted by a writing, the granter of which acknowledged receipt from the creditor of a certain sum of money. But as the obligation was sometimes granted before the money was advanced, spe numeranda pecuniae, by the Roman law, the obligation, until the lapse of two years after its date and delivery, did not prove the receipt of the money; and the debtor against whom, within that time, a demand for repayment was made, might plead the exceptio non numerata pecuniae: that is, that the money of which repayment was demanded, was truly never advanced. The exception was sufficient to elide the demand, unless the creditor proved that he had advanced the money.” William Bell, Bell’s Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 426 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

exceptio non solutae pecuniae (non sa-loo-tee pi-kyoo-nee-ee). A plea that the debt at issue in the suit had not been discharged by payment (as the adverse party alleged), notwithstanding the existence of a receipt or acquittance reflecting payment. Cf. exceptio pecuniae non numeratae.

exceptio pacti conventi (pak-ti-kan-ven-tee). An exception of compact; a defense or plea that the plaintiff had agreed not to sue.

exceptio pecuniae non numeratae (pi-kyoo-nee-ee non n[y]oo-ma-ray-tee). An exception or plea of money not paid; a defense by a party who was sued on a promise to repay money that was never received from the plaintiff. Cf. exceptio non solutae pecuniae; pecunia non numerata.

exceptio peremptoria (par-emp-tor-ee-oh). A peremptory exception that forever destroyed the subject matter or ground of the action, such as the exceptio doli mali and the exceptio metus. — Also termed exceptio perpetua.

exceptio plurium concubentium (floor-ee-oh kon-kyoo-ben-see-oh). Rare. The plea or defense in a paternity action that the plaintiff had several lovers around the time of conception.

exceptio rei judicatae (reee1 joo-da-kay-tee). An exception or plea of matter adjudged; a plea that the subject matter of the action had been determined in a previous action.

exceptio rei venditae et traditae (reee1 ven-da-tee et trad-oh-tee). An exception or plea of the sale and delivery [of a thing]. • This exception presumes a valid sale but, because no one can transfer a right greater than what is possessed, no valid transfer of property occurred, yet the real owner is nonetheless estopped from contesting the sale.

exceptio senatusconsulti Macedoniani (sa-nay-tos-kan-sal-ti mas-oh-nee-ay-nee). A defense to an action for the recovery of money loaned, on the ground that the loan was made to a person who was under another person’s paternal power. • This defense is so named from the decree of the senate that forbade the recovery of such loans.

exceptio senatusconsulti Velleiani (sa-nay-tas-kan-sal-ti vel-ee-ay-nee). A defense to an action on a contract of suretyship, on the ground that the surety exception was a woman and thus incapable of becoming bound for another. • This defense is so named from the decree of the senate forbidding such sureties.

exceptio temporis (tem-pa-ri-s). An exception or plea that the time prescribed by law for bringing a particular action has expired.

exception, n. (14c) 1. A formal objection to a court's ruling by a party who wants to preserve an overruled objection or rejected proffer for appeal <the prosecutor stated her exception to the court's ruling disallowing the witness's testimony>. • To make an exception or objection, attorneys sometimes say, "I except" or "I object." Exception properly refers only to an objection made after an initial objection or proffer is made and overruled. In most courts, an exception is no longer required to preserve the initial objection. [Cases: Appeal and Error \( \Leftrightarrow\) 248–280; 1048–1060; Pleading \( \Leftrightarrow\) 228–228.23.]

The following quotation reflects former practice: "The exception must be distinguished from the objection. Many counsel are heard carelessly saying 'I except' when the thing they are doing is 'I object.' The exception serves an entirely distinct purpose from the objection, — a double purpose, in fact. It warns the judge and the other party that the excepter is not satisfied with the ruling and takes issue with a view to appeal; and it sums up and preserves the precise terms of the ruling. The proponent of the evidence is the excepter if the ruling excludes the evidence; but if it admits the evidence, the opponent of the evidence is the excepter. Thus the excepter and the objector are not necessarily the same parties." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 421 (1935).

delinatory exception (di-kl-n-a-tor-ee). Louisiana law. An exception to a court's jurisdiction. • Grounds for refusing to submit to a court's jurisdiction include lack of personal jurisdiction and insufficient service of process. [Cases: Pleading \( \Leftrightarrow\) 228.2.] dilatory exception (di-l-a-tor-ee). (1822) Louisiana law. An exception intended to delay but not dismiss an action. [Cases: Pleading \( \Leftrightarrow\) 228.6, 228.7.]

general exception. (16c) 1. An objection pointing out a substantive defect in an opponent's pleading, such as the insufficiency of the claim or the court's lack of subject-matter jurisdiction; an objection to a pleading for want of substance. — Also termed general demurrer. Cf. special exception (1). [Cases: Pleading \( \Leftrightarrow\) 228.13.] 2. An objection in which the excepting party does not specify the grounds of the objection.

peremptory exception. (16c) Louisiana law. A defensive pleading asserting that no legal remedy exists for the plaintiff's alleged injury, that res judicata or prescription bars the claim, or that an indispensable party has not been included in the litigation. [Cases: Pleading \( \Leftrightarrow\) 228.8.]

special exception. See special exception.

2. Something that is excluded from a rule's operation <employers with fewer than five employees are an exception to the rule>.

statutory exception. (18c) A provision in a statute exempting certain persons or conduct from the statute's operation. [Cases: Statutes \( \Leftrightarrow\) \( \Leftrightarrow\) 228.]

3. The retention of an existing right or interest, by and for the grantor, in real property being granted to another. Cf. reservation (1). [Cases: Deeds \( \Leftrightarrow\) \( \Leftrightarrow\) 137, 141.] — except, vb.

exceptionable (ek-sep-shn-bal), adj. (17c) Liable to objection; objectionable.

exceptional charge. See special charge under charge.

exception clause. A clause that attempts to modify or exclude the prima facie obligations that arise when a document is signed. — Also termed exception clause. [Cases: Deeds \( \Leftrightarrow\) 137–140.]

Exchequer (eks-chek-ar or eks-chek-ar). (14c) 1. English law. The government department charged with collecting and administering the national revenue; the treasury department. • The name is said to have derived from the checkered cloth, resembling a chessboard, that anciently covered the table on which certain of the king's accounts were tallied, the sums being marked and scored with counters. 2. COURT OF EXCHEQUER. — Abbr. Ex.

Exchequer bill. A bill of credit issued in England by the authority of Parliament; an instrument issued at the Exchequer, usu. under the authority of an act of Parliament passed for that specific purpose, containing an engagement on the part of the government to repay, with interest, the principal sums advanced.

Exchequer Chamber. An English court of intermediate appeal from the common-law courts, namely, the Court of King's Bench, the Court of Common Pleas, and the Court of Exchequer. • It was established in 1822. — Also termed Camera Scaccarii.

Exchequer Division. Hist. English law. A division of the High Court of Justice, to which the business of the Court of Exchequer was specially assigned by section 34 of the Judicature Act of 1873, and later merged into the Queen's Bench Division in 1881.

excise, n. (15c) A tax imposed on the manufacture, sale, or use of goods (such as a cigarette tax), or on an occupation or activity (such as a license tax or an attorney occupation fee). — Also termed excise tax. Cf. income tax and property tax under tax. [Cases: Taxation \(\implies\) 3251, 3602.]

excise lieu property tax. See tax.

excise tax. See excise.

excited utterance. (1800) A statement about a startling event made under the stress and excitement of the event. • An excited utterance may be admissible as a hearsay exception. Fed. R. Evid. 803(2). Cf. present sense impression. [Cases: Criminal Law \(\implies\) 363–368; Evidence \(\implies\) 120.]

excludable, adj. (1916) 1. (Of evidence) subject to exclusion <excludable hearsay>. 2. (Of an alien) ineligible for admission or entry into a country.

excludable alien. See alien.

exclusion, n. 1. Tax. An item of income excluded from gross income. — Also termed income exclusion. [Cases: Internal Revenue \(\implies\) 3110; Taxation \(\implies\) 3447.]

annual exclusion. (1940) The amount allowed as nontaxable gift income during the calendar year. • The purpose of the annual exclusion is both to serve as an estate-planning mechanism (so that gifts made during the donor's lifetime remain nontestamentary and nontaxable) and to eliminate the administrative inconvenience of taxing relatively small gifts. In 2009, for an individual, the first $13,000 in gifts can be excluded; for married persons, the exclusion is $26,000 per couple for joint gifts, regardless of which spouse supplied the donated property. IRC (26 USCA) § 2503. — Also termed annual gift-tax exclusion. [Cases: Internal Revenue \(\implies\) 4206.10.]

2. Evidence. A trial judge's determination that an item offered as evidence may not be presented to the trier of fact (esp. the jury). 3. Insurance. An insurance-policy provision thatexcepts certain events or conditions from coverage. [Cases: Insurance \(\implies\) 2098. — exclude, vb. — exclusionary, adj.

automobile exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damages arising from the use (including loading and unloading) of an automobile, aircraft, or other motor vehicle owned, operated, rented, or borrowed by the insured. [Cases: Insurance \(\implies\) 2278(13).]

business-risk exclusion. An exclusion in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for common risks of doing business, including harm to the insured's product or work, damages arising from a product recall, damages arising from the insured's failure to perform under a contract, or damages arising from a failure of the insured's product to perform as intended. [Cases: Insurance \(\implies\) 2278(20).]

design-defect exclusion. A provision in some umbrella policies and some older commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for bodily injury arising from the failure of the insured's product to perform its intended function because of a defect or deficiency in its design, formula, specifications, instructions, or advertising materials. [Cases: Insurance \(\implies\) 2278(21).]

employee-liability exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for injury to an employee (or a member of the employee's family), arising from and in the course of employment with the insured. • This exclusion is generally intended to exclude from coverage all injuries covered by the workers'-compensation laws. [Cases: Insurance \(\implies\) 2278(11, 12).]

employment-related-practices exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for property damage or bodily injury that is expected or intended by the insured, except any harm arising from the use of reasonable force to protect a person or property. • This exclusion is sometimes referred to as "exclusion a" because it is the first exclusion listed on most policies. — Also termed exclusion a; intentional-injury exclusion. [Cases: Insurance \(\implies\) 2278(3).]

failure-to-perform exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for (1) the loss of use of undamaged property resulting from the insured's delay or failure in performing an obligation, or (2) a design defect or failure in the insured's product. — Also termed loss-of-use exclusion. [Cases: Insurance \(\implies\) 2278(21).]

knowledge-of-falsity exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damages arising from an oral or written communication made by the insured with knowledge that it is false. [Cases: Insurance \(\implies\) 2303(2), 2313(2).]

named-insured exclusion. An exclusion limiting liability-insurance coverage to a named insured whose injuries were caused by another named insured under the same insurance policy. [Cases: Insurance \(\implies\) 2278(1), 2745–2747.]
owned-property exclusion. Insurance. A provision in a comprehensive general-liability insurance policy allowing only third parties who are injured on or by the insured’s property to make liability claims against the insurer. • The provision ordinarily excludes coverage for (1) property owned, rented, occupied, sold, given away, or abandoned by the insured, (2) personal property in the care, custody, or control of the insured, and (3) property located where the insured and its employees work. [Cases: Insurance C—2278(25).]

own-product exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for property damage to a product that is manufactured, sold, handled, distributed, or disposed of by the insured. [Cases: Insurance C—2278(21).]

own-work exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damage to the work or services performed by the insured. [Cases: Insurance C—2278(21).]

pollution exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for bodily injury or property damages arising from the discharge, dispersal, release, or escape of chemicals, waste, acid, and other pollutants. • Pollution-exclusion clauses may take one of two forms: (1) sudden and accidental, and (2) absolute. The sudden-and-accidental clause, usu. limited to policies issued before 1985, contains an exception under which the damages are covered (i.e., exempted from the exclusion) if the discharge or other release was sudden and accidental. The absolute pollution exclusion, in most policies issued since 1985, does not contain this exception. [Cases: Insurance C—2278(17).]

sistership exclusion. A provision in some commercial general liability policies, excluding coverage for damages arising from the withdrawal, inspection, repair, replacement, or loss of use of the insured’s product or work, to the extent that the product or work is withdrawn or recalled from the market because of a known or suspected defect or deficiency. — Also termed recall exclusion. [Cases: Insurance C—2278(24).] exclusion a. See expected/intended exclusion under EXCLUSION (3).

exclusionary hearing. See HEARING.

exclusionary practice. Antitrust. A method by which a firm can gain or maintain monopoly power without the express or tacit cooperation of competing or potentially competing firms.

exclusionary rule. (1855) 1. Evidence. Any rule that excludes or suppresses evidence <despite many exceptions, hearsay has long been inadmissible under an exclusionary rule>. — Also termed exclusionary evidence rule. [Cases: Evidence C—154, 314.] 2. Criminal procedure. A rule that excludes or suppresses evidence obtained in violation of an accused person’s constitutional rights <in accordance with the exclusionary rule, the court did not admit the drugs into evidence because they had been obtained during a warrantless search of the defendant’s home>. See FRUIT-OF-THE-POISONOUS-TREE DOCTRINE; GOOD-FAITH EXCEPTION. [Cases: Criminal Law C—394.]

“The deterrence of unreasonable searches and seizures is a major purpose of the exclusionary rule. . . . But the rule serves other purposes as well. There is, for example, ‘the imperative of judicial integrity,’ namely, that the courts do not become ‘accomplices in willful disobedience of a Constitution they are sworn to uphold.’ . . . A third purpose of the exclusionary rule . . . is that of ‘assuring the people — all potential victims of unlawful government conduct — that the government would not profit from its lawless behavior, thus minimizing the risk of seriously undermining popular trust in the government.” Wayne R. LaFave & Jerold H. Israel, Criminal Procedure § 3.1, at 107 (2d ed. 1992) (quoting Elkins v. United States, 364 U.S. 206, 80 S.Ct. 1437 (1960); United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S. 338, 94 S.Ct. 613 (1974) (dissent)).

“In the simplest of exclusionary rule cases, the challenged evidence is quite clearly ‘direct’ or ‘primary’ in its relationship to the prior arrest, search, interrogation, lineup or other identification procedure. Such is the case when that evidence is an identification occurring at the confrontation between suspect and victim or witness, a confession or admission made in response to questioning, or physical evidence obtained by search or arrest. Not infrequently, however, challenged evidence is ‘secondary’ or ‘derivative’ in character. This occurs when, for example, a confession is obtained after an illegal arrest, physical evidence is located after an illegally obtained confession, or an in-court identification is made following an illegally conducted pretrial identification. In these situations, it is necessary to determine whether the derivative evidence is ‘tainted’ by the prior constitutional or other violation.” Wayne R. LaFave & Jerold H. Israel, Criminal Procedure § 9.3, at 471 (2d ed. 1992).

excommunicant (eks-ka-myoo-ni-kant), n. (16c) Eccles. law. 1. An excommunicated person. 2. Rare. An excommunicator.
excommunication, n. (15c) Eccles. law. A sentence of censure pronounced by a spiritual court for an offense falling under ecclesiastical cognizance; expulsion from religious society or community. • In England, an excommunicated person was formerly subject to various civil disabilities, such as an inability to be a juror, to be a witness in any court, or to sue to recover lands or money due. These penalties were abolished by the Ecclesiastical Courts Act (1813). St. 53 Geo. 3, ch. 127. — Also termed excommunication. — excommunicate, vb.
“Closely allied to outlawry is excommunication, it is in fact an ecclesiastical outlawry, and, like temporal outlawry, though once it was the law’s last and most terrible weapon against the obstinate offender, it is now regarded as a normal process for compelling the appearance in court of those who are accused. Indeed as regards the laity, since the spiritual courts cannot direct a seizure of the body, lands, or goods, those courts must, if mere citations fail to produce an appearance, at once have recourse to their last weapon. Then, as ordained by William the Conqueror, the lay power comes to their aid. If the excommunicate does not seek absolution within forty days (this period seems to be fixed already in the twelfth century), the ordinary will signify this to the king; a writ for the arrest of the offender will be issued, and he will be kept in prison until he makes his submission.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic William Maitland, History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 500 (2d ed. 1899).
excommunicato capiendo (eks-ka-myoo-ni-kay-toh kap-ee-en-doh). [Latin] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ that, being founded on a bishop’s certificate of excommunication, required the sheriff to arrest and imprison the defendant. • The writ issued out of chancery and was returnable to the King’s Bench. Cf. de contumace capiendo.
excommunicator. (17c) A person who excommunicates.
excommunicato recapiendo (eks-ka-myoo-ni-kay-toh ri-ka-pee-en-doh). [Latin] Hist. Eccles. law. A writ commanding that an excommunicant — who had been committed to prison for obstinacy but who was unlawfully freed before agreeing to obey the church’s authority — should be found, retaken, and imprisoned again.
ex comparatione scriptorum (eks kom-pa-ray-shoo-oh-nee skrip-tor-om). [Latin] By a comparison of writings or handwritings. • This term was formerly used in the law of evidence.

exculpate (ek-skal-payt), vb. (17c) To free from blame or accusation. Cf. EXONERATE (1). — exculpation (ek-skal-pay-shun), n. — exculpatory (ek-skal-toor-e), adj.
exculpatory clause. (1891) A contractual provision relieving a party from liability resulting from a negligent or wrongful act. • A will or a trust may contain an exculpatory clause purporting to immunize a fiduciary from a breach of duty; the clause may reduce the degree of care and prudence required of the fiduciary. But courts generally find that if an exculpatory clause in a will or trust seeks to confer absolute immunity, it is void as being against public policy. See EXEMPTION CLAUSE. [Cases: Contracts ☐=114, 189.5.] exculpatory evidence. See EVIDENCE.
exculpatory-no doctrine. (1977) Criminal law. The principle that a person cannot be charged with making a false statement for falsely denying guilt in response to an investigator’s question. • This doctrine is based on the Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination. But the U.S. Supreme Court has overruled this doctrine in federal law. Brogan v. United States, 552 U.S. 398, 118 S.Ct. 805 (1998). [Cases: Fraud ☐=68.10(1).]
ex curia (eks kyoor-ee-a). [Latin] Out of court; away from the court.

exclusor (ek-skyoo-zay-tor), n. (17c) 1. Hist. An excusor. 2. In old German law, a defendant; one who wholly denies the plaintiff's claim.

excuse (ek-skyooz), n. (14c) 1. A reason that justifies an act or omission or that relieves a person of a duty. 2. Criminal law. A defense that arises because the defendant is not blameworthy for having acted in a way that would otherwise be criminal. • The following defenses are the traditional excuses: duress, entrapment, infancy, insanity, and involuntary intoxication. — Also termed legal excuse. Cf. justication (2). [Cases: Criminal Law C 37, 38.] — excusa-to-ry (ek-skyooz-a-tor ee), adj.

excuse by failure of presupposed conditions. See commercial impracticability under IMPRACTICABILITY.

excess (ek-skas), vb. (18c) To seize and detain by law.

excessio (ek-sca-shee-oh), n. [Latin] Roman & civil law. A diligent prosecution of a remedy against a debtor; esp., the exhausting of a remedy against a principal debtor before resorting to a surety. — Also termed excursion.

ex-date. See EX-DIVIDEND DATE.

ex debito justitiae (eks deb-i-toh jas-tish-ee-ee-e), [Latin] From or as a debt of justice; in accordance with the requirement of justice; right; as a matter of right. • Arising from a crime or tort <action ex delicto>. • Although ex delicto refers most commonly to a tort in modern usage, it referred historically to both torts and crimes. Cf. IN DELICTO; EX CONTRACTU.

ex debito naturali (eks deb-i-toh nach-a-ray-li), [Law Latin] Scots law. Arising from natural obligation. • The phrase appeared in reference to an obligation that was moral rather than legal.

ex defectu juris (eks di-fek-t[y]oo joor-iss), [Law Latin] Scots law. From a defect in the right. • A seller had to warrant a purchaser against an eviction based on a defect in the seller's own right.

ex defectu natalium (eks di-fek-t[y]oo na-tay-lee-am), [Law Latin] Hist. From defect of parentage. • Formerly, this phrase appeared in reference to a basis upon which the court rejected the will of a bastard who died without issue.

ex defectu familiae (eks di-fek-t[y]oo fa-mil-ee-ee-ee), [Law Latin] Hist. From choice of a certain family. • The phrase appeared in reference to the sovereign's right to bestow honors on those whom he chose.

ex deliberatione Dominorum Concilii (eks di-lib-a-ray-shee-oh nee dom-a-nor-am kon-sil-ee-ee-ee), [Law Latin] Hist. After consideration by the Lords of Council. "Formerly all writs which passed the signet were procured by presentation of a bill (or petition) for such writ. The bill was perused and considered by the Lord Ordinary on the Bills, and if he was satisfied, the bill was passed and the writ issued: the latter bearing the words ex deliberatione Dominorum Concilii to signify that the bill had been considered. These words are still appended to almost all writs which pass the signet, but they are now only words of style, since the writs are now passed periculo poten­tissim without being submitted to the Lords," John Trayner, Trayner's Latin Maxims 196-97 (4th ed. 1894).

ex delicto (eks da-lik-toh), adj. & adv. [Latin "from a wrong"] 1. Arising from a crime or tort <action ex delicto>. • Although ex delicto refers most commonly to a tort in modern usage, it referred historically to both torts and crimes. Cf. IN DELICTO; EX CONTRACTU.

ex directo (eks di-rek-toh), [Latin] Directly; immediately.

ex distribution. Without distribution. • Shares are traded ex distribution when they no longer carry the right to receive a distribution to be made to holders. — Abbr. X; XD.

ex diverso (eks di-var-soh), [Latin] Hist. On the other hand; conversely.

ex dividendo. Without dividend. • Shares are traded ex dividendo when the seller, not the purchaser, is entitled to the next dividend payment because it will be made before the stock transfer is completed. The first day on which shares are traded ex dividend, the stock price will drop by an amount usu. approximating the amount of the dividend. — Abbr. XD.; X. Cf. CUM DIVIDEND.

ex-dividend date. The date on or after which the buyer of a security does not acquire the right to receive a recently declared dividend. — Also termed ex-date. Cf. DIVIDEND DATE.

ex dollo malo (eks doh-loh mal-oh), [Latin] Out of fraud; out of deceitful or tortious conduct.

exeat (ek-see-at), n. (18c) 1. Generally, permission to go outside (a place). 2. Permission that a bishop grants to a priest to go out of his diocese. Cf. NE EXEAT (1).

execute, vb. (14c) 1. To perform or complete (a contract or duty) <once the contract was fully executed, the parties owed no further contractual duties to each other>. [Cases: Contracts C 6.] 2. To change (as a legal interest) from one form to another <the shifting use was executed into a valid legal estate>. 3. To make (a legal document) valid by signing; to bring (a legal document) into its final, legally enforceable form <each party executed the contract without a signature witness>. 4. To put to death, esp. by legal sentence <Johnson was executed shortly after midnight>. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment C 1795.] 5. To enforce and collect on (a money judgment) <Williams asked the executed, adj. (16c) 1. (Of a document) that has been signed <an executed will>. 2. That has been done, given, or performed <executed consideration>.

"The term 'executed' is a slippery word. Its use is to be avoided except when accompanied by explanation. . . . A contract is frequently said to be executed when the document has been signed, or has been signed, sealed, and delivered. Further, by executed contract is frequently meant one that has been fully performed by both parties." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 26 n.* (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

-executed. See TRUST.
-executed note. See NOTE (1).
-executed bonorum (ek-sa-kyoo-shee-oh), n. [Latin] 1. The performance or completion of a thing; the act of following through on a commitment. 2. The doing of something thoroughly. 3. Management or administration. 4. Hist. Execution: the final process in an action.

-execution, n. (14c) 1. The act of carrying out or putting into effect (as a court order or a securities transaction) <execution of the court's decree> <execution of the stop-loss order>. 2. Validation of a written instrument, such as a contract or will, by fulfilling the necessary legal requirements <delivery of the goods completed the contract's execution>. [Cases: Contracts C=34; Sales C=29; Vendor and Purchaser C=23; Wills C=108–129.] 3. Judicial enforcement of a money judgment, usu. by seizing and selling the judgment debtor's property <even if the plaintiff receives a judgment against the foreign debtor, execution is unlikely>. — Also termed (in Scots law) diligence. [Cases: Execution C=1; Federal Civil Procedure C=2691.] 4. A court order directing a sheriff or other officer to enforce a judgment, usu. by seizing and selling the judgment debtor's property <the court issued the execution authorizing seizure of the car>. — Also termed writ of execution; judgment execution; general execution. [Cases: Execution C=74; Federal Civil Procedure C=2697.]

"A writ of execution is an authorization to an executive officer, issued from a court in which a final judgment has been rendered, for the purpose of carrying such judgment into force and effect. It is founded upon the judgment, must generally be conformed to it in every respect, and the plaintiff is always entitled to it to obtain a satisfaction of his claim, unless his right has been suspended by proceedings in the nature of an appeal or by his own agreement."

-alias execution. A second execution issued to enforce a judgment not fully satisfied by the original writ. Cf. alias writ under Writ. [Cases: Execution C=99.]

-body execution. A court order requiring an officer to take a named person into custody, usu. to bring the person before the court to pay a debt; CAPIAS. [Cases: Execution C=421; Federal Civil Procedure C=2714.]

-close-jail execution. A body execution stating that the person to be arrested should be confined in jail without the privilege of movement about the jailyard. [Cases: Execution C=421, 448.]

-dormant execution. An execution authorizing an officer to seize and hold property rather than sell it, until further notice.

-junior execution. An execution that is subordinate to another execution issued from an earlier judgment against the same debtor. [Cases: Execution C=112.]

-malicious execution. An abuse of process by which a person, maliciously and without reasonable cause, issues an execution against the property of a judgment debtor. [Cases: Execution C=454.]

executor to the tenor. Eccles. law. A person who is not named executor in the will but who performs duties similar to those of an executor.

general executor. (18c) An executor who has the power to administer a decedent's entire estate until its final settlement.

independent executor. (1877) An executor who, unlike an ordinary executor, can administer the estate with very little supervision by the probate court. • Only a few states — mostly in the West and Southwest — allow testators to designate independent executors. But lawyers routinely write wills that relieve a trusted executor from obtaining appraisals, from providing inventories and surety bonds, and from obtaining court approval "to the maximum extent permitted by law." The Uniform Probate Code endorses independent administration, and it is the usual process unless a party demands court-supervised administration. — Also termed nonintervention executor. [Cases: Executors and Administrators C≈-7, 75.]

joint executor. (17c) One of two or more persons named in a will as executor of an estate. — Also termed coexecutor. [Cases: Executors and Administrators C≈-123.]

executory interest. (1833) A future interest, held by a third person, that either cuts off another's interest or begins after the natural termination of a preceding estate. Cf. REMAINDER. [Cases: Estates in Property C≈-1.]

"What is an executory interest? Here is a pretty good definition: An executory interest is any future interest created in a person other than the transferee that is not a remainder. Here are five classic examples of executory interest: (1) O transfers 'to A for life; then, one day after A's death, to the heirs of A.' The transfer creates a springing executory interest in those who will be A's heirs. (2) O transfers 'to A for 200 years if he shall so long live, then to the heirs of A.' This transfer also creates a springing executory interest in A's prospective heirs. (3) O transfers 'to A and his heirs five years from the date of this deed.' A owns a springing executory interest. (4) O, when B is fifteen, transfers 'to A for life; then no sooner than one day after A's death, to B and his heirs if B ever reaches 21.' B owns a springing executory interest. (5) O transfers 'to A and his heirs; but if A marries X, to B and his heirs.' B owns a shifting executory interest." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 80 (2d ed. 1984).

shifting executory interest. An executory interest that operates in defeasance of an interest created simultaneously in a third person. [Cases: Wills C≈-625.]

springing executory interest. An executory interest that operates in defeasance of an interest left in the transferee. [Cases: Wills C≈-625.]

executory judgment. See JUDGMENT.

executory limitation. See LIMITATION.

executory process. Civil law. 1. A process that can be resorted to either (1) when the right of a creditor arises from an act importing a confession of judgment, and that contains a privilege or mortgage in the creditor's favor, or (2) when the creditor demands the execution of a judgment that has been rendered by a different tribunal. 2. An accelerated procedure, summary in nature, by which the holder of a mortgage or privilege evidenced by a confession of judgment seeks to effect an ex parte seizure and sale of the subject property. [Cases: Chattel Mortgages C≈-269; Mortgages C≈-499.] executory remainder. See contingent remainder under REMAINDER.

executory sale. See SALE.

executory trust. See TRUST.

executory unilateral accord. (1940) An offer to enter a contract; OFFER (2).

An amount allowed as a deduction from adjusted gross income, used to determine taxable income. Cf. deduction (2). [Cases: Internal Revenue < 3294; Taxation < 3501, 3518.]

dependency exemption. (1920) A tax exemption granted to an individual taxpayer for each dependent whose gross income is less than the exemption amount and for each child who is younger than 19 or, if a student, younger than 24. [Cases: Internal Revenue < 3294; Taxation < 3501, 3519.]

personal exemption. (1920) An amount allowed as a deduction from an individual taxpayer’s adjusted gross income. [Cases: Internal Revenue < 3295; Taxation < 3501, 3519.]

exemption clause. (1840) A contractual provision providing that a party will not be liable for damages for which that party would otherwise have ordinarily been liable. Cf. exemption clause; exculpatory clause; indemnity clause. [Cases: Contracts < 114, 189.5.]

"An exemption clause may take many forms, but all such clauses have one thing in common in that they exempt a party from a liability which he would have borne had it not been for the clause. In some cases an exemption clause merely relieves a party from certain purely contractual obligations, for example, the duties of a seller in a contract of sale regarding the quality and fitness of the goods. In other cases exemption clauses go further and protect the party not merely from contractual liability but even from liability which would otherwise have arisen in tort. For example, a shipping company’s ticket may exempt the company from liability to the passenger for any injuries, however caused. Now if the passenger is injured as a result of the negligence of the company’s employees, that would, in the normal way, give rise to an action in tort for negligence, quite apart from the contract.” P.S. Atiyah, An Introduction to the Law of Contract 167 (3d ed. 1981).

exemption equivalent. The maximum value of assets that one can transfer to another before incurring a federal gift and estate tax.

exemption law. (1839) A law describing what property of a debtor cannot be attached by a judgment creditor or trustee in bankruptcy to satisfy a debt. See exempt property (1). [Cases: Exemptions < 1; Homestead < 1.]

exempt organization. An organization that is either partially or completely exempt from federal income taxation. See charitable organization. [Cases: Internal Revenue < 4045–4071.]

exempt property. (1839) 1. A debtor’s holdings and possessions that, by law, a creditor cannot attach to satisfy a debt. • All the property that creditors may lawfully reach is known as nonexempt property. Many states provide a homestead exemption that excludes a person’s house and household items, up to a certain amount, from the liens of most creditors. The purpose of the exemption is to prevent debtors from becoming destitute. See homestead. Cf. nonexempt property. [Cases: Exemptions < 1; Homestead < 1.] 2. Personal property that a surviving spouse is automatically entitled to receive from the decedent’s estate. [Cases: Executors and Administrators < 53.] exempt security. See security.

exempt transaction. A sale that falls outside the scope of a certain statute, such as the Securities Act of 1933 or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. [Cases: Securities Regulation < 18.10–18.30.]

St. 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 27, § 36.

exhausted ballot. See exhausted vote under VOTE (1).

exhausted combination. See old combination under COMBINATION.

exhausted-combination rejection. See old-combination rejection under REJECTION.

exhausted vote. See VOTE (1).

exhaustion of remedies. (1876) The doctrine that, if an administrative remedy is provided by statute, a claimant must seek relief first from the administrative body before judicial relief is available. • The doctrine’s purpose is to maintain comity between the courts and administrative agencies and to ensure that courts will not be burdened by cases in which judicial relief is unnecessary. — Also termed exhaustion of administrative remedies. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure C=229.]

"The traditional rule can . . . be fairly simply stated. A litigant must normally exhaust state ‘legislative’ or ‘administrative’ remedies before challenging the state action in federal court. He or she need not normally exhaust state ‘judicial’ remedies. The rationale for this distinction is that until the administrative process is complete, it cannot be certain that the party will need judicial relief, but when the case becomes appropriate for judicial determination, he or she may choose whether to resort to a state or federal court for that relief. The word ‘normally’ is required in both branches of the rule." Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts § 49, at 313 (5th ed. 1994).

vicarious exhaustion of remedies. The rule that if one member of a class satisfies a requirement to exhaust administrative remedies, that is enough for all others similarly situated to be considered as having exhausted the remedies. — Often shortened exhaustion-of-rights doctrine. Int'l law. The principle that once the owner of an intellectual-property right has placed a product covered by that right into the marketplace, the right to control how the product is resold within that internal market is lost. • Within a common market, such as the European Union, the doctrine also applies to the import and export of the goods between member nations. Cf. PATENT-EXHAUSTION DOCTRINE.

exhaustion of state remedies. (1944) The doctrine that an available state remedy must be exhausted in certain types of cases before a party can gain access to a federal court. • For example, a state prisoner must exhaust all state remedies before a federal court will hear a petition for habeas corpus. [Cases: Habeas Corpus 5319–352.]

ex mutuo (eks myoo-chooh-oh). [Latin] Hist. From or out of loan. • In old English law, a debt was said to arise ex mutuo when one lent another anything that consisted in number, weight, or measure.

ex naturali jure (eks nach-oh-ray-lee-juor-ee), adv. [Latin] By or according to natural law <ex naturali jure some time may be needed after a declaration of war before the war begins>. See natural law.

ex necessitate legis (eks na-ses-i-tay-tee-lee-jis). From or by necessity of law.

ex necessitate rei (eks na-ses-i-tay-tee-re). From the necessity or urgency of the thing or case.

ex officio (eks ə-fish-ee-oh). [Latin "by virtue of its noble office"] Scots law. (Of a judicial act) done as a matter of equity. See NOBILITI OFFICIO.

ex officio (eks ə-fish-ee-oh), adv. & adj. [Latin] (16c) By virtue or because of an office; by virtue of the authority implied by office. • The term is often misused as a synonym for "nonvoting." Some meetings mistakenly label their regularly invited guests as "ex officio members" when in fact they are not members at all; others mistakenly refer to the nonvoting members as "ex officio members" even though some nonvoting members are present only in an individual capacity and not by virtue of office, or even though some voting members also serve ex officio. But an ex officio member is a voting member unless the applicable governing document provides otherwise.

"Frequently boards include ex-officio members — that is, persons who are members of the board by virtue of an office or committee chairmanship held in the society, or in the parent state or national society or federation or some allied group. — sometimes in boards outside of organized societies — by virtue of a public office. In the executive board of a society, if the ex-officio member of the board is under the authority of the society (that is, if he is a member, officer, or employee of the society), there is no distinction between him and the other board members. If the ex-officio member is not under the authority of the society, he has all the privileges of board membership, including the right to make motions and to vote, but none of the obligations — just as in a case, for example, where the governor of a state is ex officio a trustee of a private academy." Henry M. Robert, Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised § 49, at 466 (10th ed. 2000).

ex officio information. English law. A criminal information filed by the attorney general ex officio on behalf of the Crown, in the Court of King's Bench, for offenses more immediately affecting the government, as distinguished from informations in which the Crown is the nominal prosecutor.

ex officio justice. (1855) A judge who serves on a commission or board only because the law requires the presence of a judge rather than because the judge was selected for the position.

ex officio member. See member ex officio under member.

ex officio service (eks ə-fish-ee-oh). (1845) A service that the law imposes on an official by virtue of the office held, such as that of a local justice of the peace or in the parent state or national society or federation or some allied group. — sometimes in boards outside of organized societies — by virtue of a public office. In the executive board of a society, if the ex-officio member of the board is under the authority of the society (that is, if he is a member, officer, or employee of the society), there is no distinction between him and the other board members. If the ex-officio member is not under the authority of the society, he has all the privileges of board membership, including the right to make motions and to vote, but none of the obligations — just as in a case, for example, where the governor of a state is ex officio a trustee of a private academy." Henry M. Robert, Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised § 49, at 466 (10th ed. 2000).

exoneration (eg-zon-ə-ray-shan). (16c) 1. The removal of a burden, charge, responsibility, or duty. 2. The right to be reimbursed by reason of having paid money that another person should have paid. 3. The equitable right of a surety — confirmed by statute in many states — to proceed to compel the principal debtor to satisfy the obligation, as when, even though the surety would have a right of reimbursement, it would be inequitable for the surety to be compelled to perform if the principal debtor can satisfy the obligation. • When a testator leaves a gift of property encumbered by a mortgage or lien, the doctrine of exoneration operates to satisfy the encumbrance from the general assets of the estate. Many states have abandoned the common-law rule in favor of exoneration. See EQUITY OF EXONERATION; QUIA TIMET. [Cases: Principal and Surety C 179; Wills C 1736, 736, 821.] exoneration, suit for. See suit for exoneration.

exonerationes sectae ad curiam baron (eg-zon-ə-ray-shan-see-tee ad kyoor-ə-ee-am bar-an). [Latin "by exoneration of the suit to the lord's court"] Hist. A writ issued by the guardian of the Crown's ward, forbidding the sheriff or steward of a particular court from distraining or taking other action against the ward.

exonorative fact. See fact.

exoneretur (eg-zon-ə-ray-tor). Hist. [Latin "let him be relieved or discharged"] A note, recorded on a bailpiece, of a court order to release a bail obligation after the court has sentenced the defendant to prison. Cf. BAILPIECE (1).

exor. abbr. executor.

ex. ord. (often cap.) abbr. EXECUTIVE ORDER.

exordium (eg-zor-dium). [Latin] (16c) An introduction in a discourse or writing, esp. in a will. • In a will, the exordium usu. contains statements of the testator's name and capacity to make the will. — Also termed exordium clause; introductory clause.

ex parte (eks pahr-tee), adv. [Latin "from the part"] (18c) On or from one party only, usu. without notice to or argument from the adverse party <the judge conducted the hearing ex parte>.

ex parte, adj. (17c) Done or made at the instance and for the benefit of one party only, and without notice to, or argument by, any person adversely interested; of or relating to court action taken by one party without notice to the other, usu. for temporary or emergency relief <an ex parte hearing> <an ex parte injunction>. • Despite the traditional one-sidedness of ex parte matters, some courts now require notice to the opposition before what they call an "ex parte hearing." — Sometimes spelled ex parte. — ex parte, adv.

expression unius est exclusio alterius (ek-spres[h]-ee-oh fal-sl or fawl-sl). [Latin] A false statement. — Such a statement might result in rescission of a contract. Cf. ALLEGATIO FALSI.

expression unius est exclusio alterius (ek-spres[h]-ee-oh yoo-ni-oos est ek-skloo-zhee-oh al-to-tro). [Law Latin] A canon of construction holding that to express or include one thing implies the exclusion of the other, or of the alternative. ● For example, the rule that "each citizen is entitled to vote" implies that noncitizens are not entitled to vote. — Also termed inclusio unius est exclusio alterius; expressum facit cessare tacitum. Cf. EFUSDEM GENERIS; NOSCITUR A SOCIIS; RULE OF RANK.

 Several Latin maxims masquerade as rules of interpretation while doing nothing more than describing results reached by other means. The best example is probably expression unius est exclusio alterius, which is a rather elaborate, mysterious sounding, and anachronistic way of describing the negative implication. Far from being a rule, it is not even lexicographically accurate, because it is simply not true, generally, that the mere express conferment of a right or privilege in one kind of situation implies the denial of the equivalent right or privilege in other kinds. Sometimes it does and sometimes it does not, and whether it does or does not depends on the particular circumstances of context. Without contextual support, therefore, there is not even a mild presumption here. Accordingly, the maxim is at best a description, after the fact, of what the court has discovered from context. "Reed Dickerson, The Interpretation and Application of Statutes 234-35 (1975).

"The canon expressio unius est exclusio alterius is ... based on the assumption of legislative omniscience, because it would make sense only if all omissions in legislative drafting were deliberate. Although this canon seemed dead for a while, it has been resurrected by the Supreme Court to provide a basis for refusing to create private remedies for certain statutory violations. Its recent disparagement by a unanimous Court in Herman & MacLean v. Huddleston, 459 U.S. 378, 386 n.23, 103 S.Ct. 683, 690 n. 23 (1983) puts its future in some doubt but more likely confirms that judicial use of canons of construction is opportunistic." Richard A. Posner, The Federal Courts: Crisis and Reform 282 (1985).

expunge (ek-spanj), vb. (17c) 1. To erase or destroy <the trustee wrongfully expunged the creditor's claim against the debtor>. 2. Parliamentary law. To declare (a vote or other action) null and outside the record, so that it is noted in the original record as expunged, and redacted from all future copies. — Also termed rescind and expunge; rescind and expunge from the minutes; rescind and expunge from the record. — expungement (ek-spanj-mant), expunction (ek-spank-shan), n.

"Where it is desired not only to rescind an action but to express very strong disapproval, legislative bodies have voted to rescind the objectionable action and expunge it from the record. When a record has been expunged, the chief legislative officer should cross out the words or draw a line around them in the original minutes and write across them the words, 'Expunged by order of the senate (or house),' giving the date of the order. This statement should be signed by the chief legislative officer. The word 'expunged' must not be so blotted as not to be readable, as otherwise it would be impossible to determine whether more was expunged than ordered. When the minutes are printed or published, the expunged portion is omitted." National Conference of State Legislatures, Mason's Manual of Legislative Procedure § 444, at 296–97 (2000).

expungement of record. (1966) The removal of a conviction (esp. for a first offense) from a person's criminal record. — Also termed expunction of record; erasure of record. [Cases: Criminal Law C— 1226(3).]

ex turpi causa (eks tor-pi kaw-za). [Latin] From an immoral consideration. • This phrase, a shortened form of the maxim ex turpi causa non oritur actio ("from an immoral consideration an action does not arise"), expresses the principle that a party does not have a right to enforce performance of an agreement founded on a consideration that is contrary to the public interest.

[Cases: Action C=4; Contracts C=158(I).]

The doctrine ex turpi causa has made its way into the law as an extension of a moral principle. If it is misused, the principle suffers. Moreover, its misuse is a symptom of a disease of thought that debilitates the law and morals. This is the failure to recognize that there is a fundamental difference between the law that expresses a moral principle and the law that is only a social regulation. If only in the growth of English law that distinction had been maintained, much of the arbitrariness and the absurdities in the cases I have cited would have been avoided. There is a dictum of Lord Wright's which may some day be used as a foundation for a change of heart. Speaking of the maxim ex turpi causa, he said: 'In these days there are many statutory offences which are the subject of the criminal law and in that sense are crimes, but which would, it seems, afford no moral justification for a court to apply the maxim'. Beresford v. Royal Insurance (1937), 2 KB. at 220. Patrick Devlin, The Enforcement of Morals 60 (1968).

Exeere patriam (eks-[y]-a-lair-ee), vb. [Latin] To renounce one's country or native allegiance; to expatriate oneself.

Eyewitness identification. (1939) A naming or description by which one who has seen an event testifies from memory about the person or persons involved.

Eygne (ayn), n. See Eigne.

Eyre (air). [Old French eire "journey, march"] (12c) Hist. A system of royal courts sent out into the counties by the Crown to investigate allegations of wrongdoing, to try cases, and to raise revenue for the Crown through the levy of fines. • The eyre system was abolished in the 13th century. See Articles of the Eyre; Justice in Eyre.

'In 1176 the itinerant justices were organised into six circuits . . . . The justices assigned to these circuits, who numbered as many as twenty or thirty at a time in the 1180s, were known as justiciae errantes (later justiciarii in itinere, justices in eyre); and the French word 'eyre' became the name of one of the most prominent forms of royal justice until the time of Edward III. Every so often a "general eyre" would visit a county, bringing the king's government with it . . . . The general eyres were not merely law courts; they were a way of supervising local government through itinerant central government." J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 19 (3d ed. 1990).

Eyrer (air-or), vb. [Law French] (12c) Hist. To travel or journey; to go about.

A fact that confers rights or causes the loss of rights. • A dispositive fact may be either an investitive or a divestitive fact. — Also termed vestitive fact (ves-tay-tiv). 2. A fact that is decisive of a legal matter; evidence that definitively resolves a legal issue or controversy. See disposition.

divestitive fact (di-vest-ə-tiv or di-tiv). (1973) A fact that causes the loss of rights; an act or event modifying or extinguishing a legal relation. — Also termed extinctive fact; destitutive fact; ablative fact.

elemental fact. See ultimate fact.

evaluative fact. (1986) A fact used to assess an action as being reasonable or negligent.

evidentiary fact (ev-i-den-sha-ree) (1855) 1. A fact that is necessary for or leads to the determination of an ultimate fact. — Also termed predicate fact. 2. A fact that furnishes evidence of the existence of some other fact. — Also termed evidential fact. 3. See fact in evidence.

exonerative fact (eg-zon-ə-tiv or ay-tiv). (1980) A divestive fact that extinguishes a duty.

extinctive fact. See divestitive fact.

fabricated fact. See fabricated evidence under evidence.

fact in evidence. (18c) A fact that a tribunal considers in reaching a conclusion; a fact that has been admitted into evidence in a trial or hearing. — Also written fact-in-evidence. — Also termed evidentiary fact.

"A fact-in-evidence, or, briefly, evidence, signifies any facts considered by the tribunal as data to persuade them to reach a reasoned belief upon a probandum. This process of thought by which the tribunal reasons from fact to probandum is termed inference." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 7 (1935).

ablative fact. See divestitive fact.

adjudicative fact (ə-joo-di-kay-tiv or -ka-tiv). (1959) A controlling or operative fact, rather than a background fact; a fact that concerns the parties to a judicial or administrative proceeding and that helps the court or agency determine how the law applies to those parties. • For example, adjudicative facts include those that the jury weighs. Cf. legislative fact. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure c-442.]

alienative fact (ay-lee-a-nay-tiv or ay-lee-a-na-tiv). A fact that divests a person of a right by transferring it to another.

fabricated evidence. See fabricated fact. term 'probandum' (thing to be proved) will here be used as the convenient single word.” John H. Wigmore, A Students’ Textbook of the Law of Evidence 7 (1935).

fact in pais. See ancient fact.

fact material to risk. Insurance. A fact that may increase the risk and that, if disclosed, might induce the insurer either to decline to insure or to require a higher premium. [Cases: Insurance C=2958, 2963.]

foundational fact. See predicate fact.

immaterial fact. A fact that is not relevant to a matter in issue.

impositive fact. An investitive fact that imposes duties.

inferred fact. (1858) A fact established by conclusions drawn from other evidence rather than from direct testimony or evidence; a fact derived logically from other facts. [Cases: Criminal Law C=559; Evidence C=595.]

investive fact (in ves-ta-tiv). (1939) A fact that confers rights. — Also termed collative fact (ka-lay-tiv).

judicial fact. (1862) See judicially noticed fact.

judicially noticed fact. A fact that is not established by admissible evidence but may be accepted by the court because the fact is generally known within the trial court’s territorial jurisdiction, or because its validity can be determined from sources whose accuracy cannot be reasonably questioned. See Fed. R. Evid. 201(b). — Also termed judicial fact. See judicial notice. [Cases: Criminal Law C=304; Evidence C=1.]

jurisdictional fact. (usu. pl.) (1837) A fact that must exist for a court to properly exercise its jurisdiction over a case, party, or thing. See jurisdictional fact doctrine.

legal fact. (18c) A fact that triggers a particular legal consequence.

legislative fact. (1828) A fact that explains a particular law’s rationality and that helps a court or agency determine the law’s content and application. — Legislative facts are not ordinarily specific to the parties in a proceeding. Cf. adjudicative fact.

“[L]egislative fact includes matters needed to construe statutes or regulations, and factual assumptions a court makes when called upon to ‘legislate.’ Examples of the latter might include the fact that spouses will communicate less if they are not granted a privilege covering their confidences, or that marital harmony will be strained if spouses can be compelled to testify against each other — facts which might be useful in helping a court decide whether to create or continue a common-law marital privilege . . . . Obviously, legislative facts of this nature do not and cannot meet the indisputability criterion of the Rule [Fed. R. Evid. 201], nor are they required to.” Paul F. Rothstein, The Federal Rules of Evidence 35-36 (3d ed. 2003).

material fact. (1848) A fact that is significant or essential to the issue or matter at hand. [Cases: Evidence C=143; Federal Civil Procedure C=2470.1; Judgment C=181(2).]

operative fact. (1857) 1. A fact that affects an existing legal relation, esp. a legal claim. • When applying the hearsay rule, this term distinguishes between out-of-court statements that are operative facts (e.g., a party’s saying "I agree to reimburse you" in a case for breach of contract), and hearsay, out-of-court statements that only relate to operative facts (e.g., "Joel told me Mike said he would reimburse me"). [Cases: Evidence C=267.] 2. A fact that constitutes the transaction or event on which a claim or defense is based.

physical fact. (1857) A fact having a physical existence, such as a fingerprint left at a crime scene.

predicate fact (pred-ekt). (1899) 1. A fact from which a presumption or inference arises. [Cases: Criminal Law C=305.1; Evidence C=53.] 2. A fact necessary to the operation of an evidentiary rule. • For example, there must actually be a conspiracy for the co-conspirator exception to the hearsay rule to apply. — Also termed foundational fact; evidentiary fact. [Cases: Evidence C=53.]

presumed fact. A fact whose existence can be justifiably inferred from facts established by evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law C=305; Evidence C=53.]

primary fact. (18c) A fact that can be established by direct testimony and from which inferences are made leading to ultimate facts. See ultimate fact.

principal fact. 1. See fact in issue. 2. See ultimate fact.

private fact. (16c) A fact that has not been made public. • Whether a fact is private often arises in invasion-of-privacy claims. Cf. public fact.

probative fact (proh-ba-tiv). (1858) A fact in evidence used to prove an ultimate fact, such as skid marks used to show speed as a predicate to a finding of negligence.

psychological fact. A fact that is related to mental state, such as motive or knowledge.

public fact. (1955) For the purpose of an invasion-of-privacy claim, a fact that is in a public record or in the public domain. Cf. private fact. [Cases: Torts C=357.]

relative fact. A fact incidental to another fact; a minor fact.

simulated fact. (1943) A fabricated fact intended to mislead; a lie.

translative fact (trans- or tranz-lay-tiv). A fact by means of which a right is transferred from one person to another; a fact that fulfills the double function of terminating one person’s right to an object and of originating another’s right to it.

transvestive fact. A fact that is simultaneously investive and divestive.

“When a person transfers the rights he has to another, the transfer divests him of the potestas, and invests that other with it. This is quite distinct from the creation or extinction of the potestas. A new descriptive term is wanted, and after the analogy of the other words, ‘transvestive’ has been coined for the purpose.” W.A. Hunter, A Systematic and Historical Exposition of Roman Law 141 (4th ed. 1902).
ultimate fact. (18c) A fact essential to the claim or the defense. — Also termed elemental fact; principal fact.

undisputed fact. (18c) An uncontested or admitted fact.

vestitative fact. See dispositive fact (1).

fact-finder. (1926) One or more persons — such as jurors in a trial or administrative-law judges in a hearing — who hear testimony and review evidence to rule on a factual issue. — Also termed finder of fact; fact-trier or trier of fact (in a judicial proceeding); fact-finding board (for a group or committee). See finding of fact.

fact-finding. (1909) 1. The process of taking evidence to determine the truth about a disputed point of fact. 2. An agent who is employed to sell property for the principal and who possesses or controls the property; a person who receives and sells goods for a commission (a factor was employed to sell goods for the company). • A factor differs from a broker because the factor possesses or controls the property. — Also termed commission merchant; del credere bailiff. Cf. broker. [Cases: Factors C—1, 1.] A factor by the rules of common law and of mercantile usage is an agent to whom goods are consigned for the purpose of sale, and he has possession of the goods, power to sell them in his own name, and a general discretion as to their sale. He may sell them on the usual terms of credit, may receive the price, and give a good discharge to the buyer.” William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 523 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

3. One who buys accounts receivable at a discount (the company sold its receivables to a factor at only 5% of their stated value). [Cases: Factors C—1, 3.] 4. A garnishee (the factor held $400 of the debtor’s property when the writ of garnishment was served). [Cases: Garnishment C—13—24.] 5. A person in charge of managing property, esp. real property.

judicial factor. Scots law. An administrator or factor specially appointed by the Court of Session to manage an estate.

factorage. (17c) 1. The compensation paid to a factor for his or her services. [Cases: Factors C—44.] 2. The business of a factor. [Cases: Factors C—1, 3, 5.]

factoring, n. The buying of accounts receivable at a discount. • The price is discounted because the factor (who buys them) assumes the risk of delay in collection and loss on the accounts receivable. [Cases: Factors C—1, 5, 10.]

factorizing process. (1837) A procedure or legal process by which a third party, rather than the creditor, attaches a debtor’s property; garnishment. — Also termed trustee process; process by foreign attachment. [Cases: Garnishment C—1.]

factor’s act. A statute protecting one who buys goods from a factor or agent by creating the presumption that the agent was acting on the owner’s behalf and with the owner’s approval. [Cases: Factors C—58.]

factor’s lien. See lien.

factory act. A statute that regulates workers’ hours, health, and safety. See fair labor standards act.

fact pleading. See code pleading under pleading (2).

fact question. See question of fact.

fact-trier. See fact-finder.

factual cause. See but-for cause under cause (1).

factual impossibility. See impossibility.

factual presumption. See presumption of fact under presumption.

facto et animo (fak toh et an a-moh). [Latin] In fact and intent <taking possession facto et animo>.

factor, n. (15c) 1. An agent or cause that contributes to a particular result <punishment was a factor in the court’s decision>. 2. An agent who is employed to sell property for the principal and who possesses or controls factum (fak-tam), n. [Latin] (18c) 1. A fact, such as a person's physical presence in a new domicile. 2. An act or deed, such as the due execution of a will. • Over time, factum in this sense came to mean "charter" — that is, the act or deed of conveying land, reduced to written form. See fraud in the factum under FRAUD.

"It is only a short step to holding as a matter of law that a 'deed' — and by a deed, factum — men are beginning to mean a sealed piece of parchment — has an operative force of its own which intentions expressed, never so plainly, in other ways have not. The sealing and delivering of the parchment is the contractual act. Further, what is done by 'deed' can only be undone by 'deed.'" 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederick W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 220 (2d ed. 1899).

factum probandum (fak-tam pro-ban-dam). [Latin] A fact to be proved.

"Evidence is always a relative term. It signifies a relation between two facts, the factum probandum, or proposition to be established, and the factum probans, or material evidencing the proposition. The former is necessarily to be conceived of as hypothetical; it is that which the one party affirms and the other denies, the tribunal being as yet not committed in either direction. The latter is conceived of for practical purposes as existent and is offered as such for the consideration of the tribunal. The latter is brought forward as a reality for the purpose of convincing the tribunal that the former is also a reality." John Henry Wigmore, Evidence in Trials at Common Law § 2, at 14–15 (Peter Tillers ed., 1983).

factum probans (fak-tam proh-banz). [Latin] A probative or evidentiary fact; a subsidiary fact tending to prove a principal fact in issue.

factum of a will. The formal ceremony of making a will; a will's execution by the testator and attestation by the witnesses.

fact work product. See WORK PRODUCT.

facultative certificate (fak-al-tay-tiv). Insurance. A contract of reinsurance separately negotiated to cover risks under a single insurance policy. • Facultative reinsurance allows the reinsurer the "faculty" of assessing and possibly rejecting a particular risk (esp. if underwriting information is inadequate). [Cases: Insurance 3605.]

facultative reinsurance. See REINSURANCE.

faculties. (16c) Hist. Eccles. law. 1. An authorization granted to a person to do what otherwise would not be allowed. 2. The extent of a husband's estate; esp., the ability to pay alimony. See ALLEGATION OF FACULTIES.

Faculties, Master of the. See MASTER OF THE FACULTIES.

Faculty of Advocates. Scots law. The society comprising the members of the Scottish bar. • Unlike the English bar, the advocates do not have chambers, but all share the facilities of Advocates' Library in Parliament House.

faderfium (fah-thar-fee-am). Hist. A marriage gift to the bride from her father or brother.

faeder-foo (fah-thor-fee). Hist. Property brought by a wife to her husband at marriage. • If the husband died, the property reverted to the widow if the heir of the deceased husband refused consent to her second marriage. The property reverted to the widow's family if she returned to them.

faggot. Hist. 1. A piece of firewood used to burn a heretic alive. 2. An embroidered figure of a faggot, required to be worn by heretics who had recanted.

fail, n. A transaction between securities brokers in which delivery and payment do not occur at the prescribed time, usu. on the settlement date. — Also termed fail contract.

fail to deliver. The nondelivery of securities from a selling broker to a buying broker by the settlement date.

fail to receive. The failure of a buying broker to receive delivery of securities from the selling broker by the settlement date.

fail, vb. (13c) 1. To be deficient or unsuccessful; to fall short <they failed to settle the dispute>. 2. To become insolvent or bankrupt <two banks failed last week>. 3. To lapse <the bequest failed as a result of ademption>.

fail contract. See FAIL.

failed devise. See lapsed devise under DEVISE.

failed gift. 1. See lapsed devise under DEVISE. 2. See lapsed legacy under LEGACY.

failed legacy. See lapsed legacy under LEGACY.

failing circumstances. See insolvency.

failing-company doctrine. Antitrust. The rule that allows an otherwise proscribed merger or acquisition between competitors when one is bankrupt or near failure. 15 USCA §§ 12–27. — Also termed failing-firm defense. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation 398–99 (4th ed. 1994)]

"The 1992 guidelines provide a limited defense for failing firms and failing divisions of firms. The defense is available if impending failure would cause the assets of one party to leave the market if the merger does not occur. Thus to establish a failing-firm defense, the parties must show that the failing firm cannot (1) meet its financial obligations, (2) reorganize in bankruptcy, and (3) find another buyer whose purchase of the firm would pose lesser anticompetitive risks. The parties must further show that (4) without the merger, the failing firm's assets will exit the market." Ernest Gellhorn & William E. Kovacic, Antitrust Law and Economics in a Nutshell 398–99 (4th ed. 1994).

fail position. A situation existing when, after all transactions in a security have been netted out, a broker owes another broker more securities than it has coming in from other firms.

failure. (17c) 1. Deficiency; lack; want. 2. An omission of an expected action, occurrence, or performance. See LAPSE (2).

failure of a condition. The nonoccurrence of an event that has been made a condition of the contract. • The usual result is that one or both of the parties do not have to perform because of the failure of the condition.

failure of consideration. See failure of consideration.

failure of good behavior. A civil servant's act that is ground for removal. [Cases: Officers and Public Employees ⊕69.7.]

failure of issue. See failure of issue.

failure of justice. See miscarriage of justice.

failure of proof. A party's not having produced evidence establishing a fact essential to a claim or defense.

failure of title. A seller's inability to establish a good claim to the property contracted for sale. C[. clear title under title (2). [Cases: Vendor and Purchaser ⊕129(1).]

failure of trust. The invalidity of a trust because the instrument creating it has a defect or because of its illegality or other legal impediment. [Cases: Trusts ⊕68.]

failure of will. The invalidity of a will that was not executed with necessary statutory formalities.

failure otherwise than on the merits. The defeat of a plaintiff's claim by a procedural device without a decision on the existence of the claim's elements.

failure to bargain collectively. An employer's refusal to discuss labor issues with a union. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⊕1479.]

failure to claim. Patents. A finding by the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office or by a court that a patent applicant or patentee has forfeited the right to broader protection by not seeking protection for some disclosed subject matter. • Any art outside the explicit claims, including foreseeable alteration of the claimed structure, is considered dedicated to the public domain.

failure to make delivery. Nondelivery or misdelivery.

failure to meet obligations. 1. See bankruptcy (4). 2. See insolvency. failure to perform. A party's not meeting its obligations under a contract. See contract (4). [Cases: Contracts ⊕261(1), 312(1), 315.]

failure to state a cause of action. A plaintiff's not having alleged facts in the complaint sufficient to maintain a claim. • This failure warrants dismissal of the complaint. [Cases: Pleading ⊕48; Pretrial Procedure ⊕622.]

failure to testify. A party's — esp. a criminal defendant's — decision not to testify. • Under the Fifth Amendment, the prosecutor and the judge cannot comment to the jury on a criminal defendant's failure to testify. But comments on the failure are usu. permissible in a civil case. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊕2129; Evidence ⊕76; Witnesses ⊕88.]

failure of consideration. (1803) A seriously deficient contractual performance that causes a contract's basis or inducement to cease to exist or to become worthless. • Scholars disapprove of this term as misleading, since failure of performance is more accurate. Unlike consideration, the phrase failure of consideration relates not to the formation of a contract but to its performance. See consideration (1). Cf. want of consideration. [Cases: Contracts ⊕83, 260, 309(1).]

“An illustration will help indicate how the term is used. If C promises to build a structure for O and O promises to make payment when the work is completed, it is clear that there is consideration on both sides of this contract and that therefore a contract was formed upon the exchange of promises. If C fails to perform, the result is sometimes described as a ‘failure of consideration.’ ‘Failure of consideration’ simply means a failure to perform and as used covers both a material breach of constructive conditions and a failure to perform an express condition. The use of the term ‘failure of consideration’ in this sense appears to be an unnecessary invitation to confusion because the word consideration is being used in two different senses. Fortunately, the use of this phrase has gradually fallen into disuse. It is, however, still sufficiently widespread to be mentioned here. This volume nowhere utilizes ‘failure of consideration’ as an operative concept.” John D. Calamari & Joseph M. Perillo, The Law of Contracts § 11·21, at 474-75 (3d ed. 1987).

partial failure of consideration. (1808) A party's incomplete performance of a contract with multiple, severable performances, so that if some of the performances are not accomplished, the appropriate part of the agreement can be apportioned to whatever has been completed. [Cases: Contracts ⊕86, 260.]

total failure of consideration. (1809) A situation in which the contract is indivisible so that a complete lack of consideration voids the contract. [Cases: Contracts ⊕85, 260.]

failure of good behavior. See failure.

failure of issue. (17c) Archaic. The fact of a person's dying when the person has no surviving children or other descendants who are eligible to inherit the person's estate. — Also termed dying without issue; definite failure of issue; default of issue. See issue (3). [Cases: Descent and Distribution ⊕14-16.]

"There has been considerable litigation during the past several centuries over the meaning of a gift to ‘A and his heirs, but if A shall die without issue, to B and his heirs.’ First of all, what does ‘die without issue’ mean? The answer appears simple — you look to the time of A’s death to determine whether or not he has any children or grandchildren. But that is not the way the English courts originally construed this language. The English adopted the so-called ‘indefinite failure of issue’ construction — if at any time in the future A’s line of descent should come to an end, then there was a gift over to B and his heirs. The effect of this was a fee tail in A and a remainder in B. This seems a distortion of the language, and particularly unsuited to American circumstances since the fee tail never found a real home here. Most of our jurisdictions, by judicial failure of justice. See miscarriage of justice.

failure of proof. See failure.

failure-of-proof defense. (1982) The defense that a party's proof does not establish a fact essential to a claim or defense.

failure of record. Hist. In a trial by record, a party's inability to produce the record and thereby prove a pleading; an absence of proof to support a party's pleading. • The other party was entitled to summary judgment. See trial by record under trial.

failure of title. See failure.

failure of trust. See failure.

failure of will. See failure.

failure otherwise than on the merits. See failure.

failure to bargain collectively. See failure.

failure to claim. See failure.

failure-to-disclose-best-mode rejection. See rejection.

failure to make delivery. See failure.

failure to meet obligations. 1. See bankruptcy (4). 2. See insolvency.

failure to perform. See failure.

failure-to-perform exclusion. See exclusion (3).

failure to protect. Family law. The refusal or inability of a parent or guardian to prevent abuse of a child under his or her care. [Cases: Infants C=156, 179.]

failure to state a cause of action. See failure.

failure-to-supervise statute. See parental-liability statute.

failure to testify. See failure.

failure to thrive. (1967) Family law. 1. A medical and psychological condition in which a child's height, weight, and motor development fall significantly below average growth rates. • Failure to thrive is sometimes asserted as a ground for alleging abuse or neglect by a parent or caregiver. 2. A condition, occurring during the first three years of a child's life, in which the child suffers marked retardation or ceases to grow. — Abbr. FTT.

faint pleader. (17c) A false, fraudulent, or collusive manner of pleading.

fair, adj. (bef. 12c) 1. Impartial; just; equitable; disinterested <everyone thought that Judge Jones was fair>. 2. Free of bias or prejudice <in jury selection, the lawyers tried to select a fair and impartial jury>.

fair, n. (13c) Hist. A privileged market for the buying and selling of goods. • A fair was an incorporeal hereditament granted to a town by royal patent or franchise or established by prescription. The franchise to hold a fair conferred important privileges, and a fair, as a legally recognized institution, possessed distinctive legal characteristics, most of which are now obsolete. Cf. market overt under market.

fair-and-equitable requirement. (17c) Bankruptcy. A Bankruptcy Code standard requiring a forced, non-consensual Chapter 11 plan (a "cramdown" plan) to provide adequately for each class of interests that has not accepted the plan. • In determining whether a cramdown plan is fair and equitable and thus can be confirmed, a bankruptcy court must apply the Code's detailed statutory criteria, consider the plan as a whole, and weigh all the circumstances surrounding the treatment of each impaired class of interests. In addition to the fair-and-equitable requirement, the Chapter 11 cramdown plan must (1) be accepted by at least one impaired class of claims, and (2) not discriminate unfairly among impaired classes that have not accepted the plan. 11 USCA § 1129(b). See cramdown. [Cases: Bankruptcy C=3563.] fair and impartial jury. See impartial jury under jury.

fair and impartial trial. See fair trial.

fair and proper legal assessment. See equalization (2).

fair and reasonable value. See fair market value under value (2).

fair and valuable consideration. See fair consideration (1) under consideration (1).

fair averaging. The process of assessing taxes by using the average of the amount and price of goods acquired over a 12-month period rather than the amount and price at a particular time of the year.

fair cash market value. See fair market value under value (2).

fair cash value. See fair market value under value (2).

fair comment. (18c) A statement based on the writer's or speaker's honest opinion about a matter of public concern. • Fair comment is a defense to libel or slander. [Cases: Libel and Slander C=48(1).]

fair competition. See competition.

fair consideration. See consideration (1).

Fair Credit Billing Act. A federal law that facilitates the correction of billing errors by credit-card companies and makes those companies more responsible for the quality of goods purchased by cardholders. 15 USCA §§ 1666–1666j. [Cases: Consumer Credit C=37.]
fair-credit-reporting act. (1971) A federal or state law that regulates disclosure and use of consumer-credit information and ensures the right of consumers to have access to and to correct their credit reports. • The federal Fair Credit Reporting Act was enacted in 1970. 15 USCA §§ 1681–1681u. — Abbr. FCRA. [Cases: Credit Reporting Agencies 1–4.]

fair-cross-section requirement. (1975) Constitutional law. The principle that a person's right to an impartial jury, guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment, includes a requirement that the pool of potential jurors fairly represent the composition of the jurisdiction's population. • The pool of potential jurors need not precisely match the composition of the jurisdiction. But the representation of each group must be fair — no group should be systematically excluded or underrepresented. A minimal disparity in a particular group's representation, such as an absolute disparity of 10%, will not ordinarily violate this principle unless some aggravating factor exists. See Duren test; absolute disparity; comparative disparity; statistical-decision theory. [Cases: Jury 33(1).]

fair dealing, n. (17c) 1. The conduct of business with full disclosure, usu. by a corporate officer with the corporation. [Cases: Corporations 314, 316.] 2. A fiduciary's transacting of business so that, although the fiduciary might derive a personal benefit, all interested persons are fully apprised of that potential and of all other material information about the transaction. Cf. self-dealing. 3. Canadian law: fair use.

Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. A federal statute that regulates debt-collection practices, and defines the rights of consumers who are contacted by debt collectors. 15 USCA §§ 1692–1692p. — Abbr. FDCPA. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation 210.]

fair hearing. See hearing.

fairly-debatable rule. 1. Insurance. In some states, a test that requires an insurer to have a plausible basis for denying a claim to avoid bad-faith liability. [Cases: Insurance 3336.] 2. Zoning. A doctrine that bars a court from interfering with a zoning decision that is supported by substantial evidence, although it is one on which reasonable minds can differ. • A court will not interfere with a decision supported by substantial evidence. [Cases: Zoning and Planning 602, 605, 703.] fair market price. See fair market value under value (2).

fair market value. See value (2).

fairness doctrine. (1965) Hist. A federal law, based on an FCC rule, requiring the broadcast media to furnish a reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views on issues of public importance. • The FCC abandoned the fairness doctrine in 1987. — Also termed equal-time doctrine. Cf. equal time act. [Cases: Telecommunications 1153(2).] fair notice. See notice.

fair on its face. (18c) (Of a document) having the appearance of being regular or legal and not capable of being shown to be defective without extraneous evidence.

fair persuasion. See persuasion.

fair play. Equity, candor, and fidelity in dealings with another.

fair preponderance of the evidence. See preponderance of the evidence.

fair presentation. 1. Commercial law. A materially accurate disclosure of a company's financial condition, achieved by selecting and using appropriate accounting policies, reasonably reflecting transactions that underlie the financial data, and making any additional necessary disclosures. 2. Criminal law. The requirement that an applicant for a writ of habeas corpus in a state's custody must show (1) he or she has exhausted all available remedies in the state courts, (2) the state has offered no corrective process, or (3) circumstances exist that render a state's corrective process insufficient to protect the applicant's rights. [Cases: Habeas Corpus 380.] fair rate of return. See rate of return.

fair-report privilege. (1980) A defense to liability for publishing defamatory matter from a report of an official or judicial proceeding, when the report is full, fair, and accurate account of the proceeding. [Cases: Libel and Slander 39, 42.]

fair representation. Labor law. Union representation that adequately covers all union members in collective bargaining and in the lodging of grievances. [Cases: Labor and Employment 1208, 1209.]

fair return on investment. See return.

fair sale. See sale.

fair-share membership. See financial-core membership.

fair trade, n. Commerce conducted under a fair-trade agreement.

fair-trade agreement. (1937) A commercial agreement that a seller will sell all of a producer's goods at or above a specified minimum price. • Fair-trade agreements were valid until 1975, when the Consumer Goods Pricing Act made them illegal. 15 USCA §§ 1, 45.

fair-trade law. A state statute that protects and enforces fair-trade agreements. • At one time, many states had fair-trade laws. But when applied to interstate commerce, the laws may violate the Sherman Antitrust Act, so most states have repealed them.

fair trial. (17c) A trial by an impartial and disinterested tribunal in accordance with regular procedures; esp., a criminal trial in which the defendant’s constitutional and legal rights are respected. — Also termed fair and impartial trial.

fair use. (1869) Copyright. A reasonable and limited use of a copyrighted work without the author’s permission, such as quoting from a book in a book review or using parts of it in a parody. • Fair use is a defense to an infringement claim, depending on the following statutory factors: (1) the purpose and character of the use, (2) the nature of the copyrighted work, (3) the amount of the work used, and (4) the economic impact of the use. 17 USCA § 107. — Also termed (in Canadian law) fair dealing. [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property C–53.2.]

"[Fair use is] the most troublesome [problem] in the whole law of copyright." Dellor v. Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., 104 F.2d 661, 662 (2d Cir. 1939) (per curiam).

"Fair use is a judicial safety valve, empowering courts to excuse certain quotations or copies of copyrighted material even though the literal terms of the Copyright Act prohibit them." Paul Goldstein, Copyright’s Highway 84 (1994).

fair value. See fair market value under value (2).

fair-value accounting method. See ACCOUNTING METHOD.

fair-value law. A statute allowing a credit against a deficiency for the amount that the fair market value of land exceeds the price at foreclosure. — Also termed fair-value legislation. [Cases: Mortgages C–559(7), 561.7.]

fair warning. (1931) Criminal law. The requirement that a criminal statute define an offense with enough precision so that a reasonable person can know what conduct is prohibited and so that a reasonably skilled lawyer can predict what conduct falls within the statute's scope. — Also termed fair notice. [Cases: Criminal Law C–13.1.]

fait (fay). [Law French fr. Latin factum] Anything done; an act or deed. • The term fait accompli (fay or fe ta-kom-plee), meaning “a deed accomplished,” which is not merely legal, is related to this word.

fait enrolle (fay or fe tion-roh), [Law French] Hist. An enrolled deed of a sale of a freehold estate.

faith and trust. See FIDELITY.

Faithfully Executed Clause. (1967) The clause of the U.S. Constitution providing that the President must take care that the laws are carried out faithfully. U.S. Const. art. II, § 3. [Cases: United States C–26.]

faith-healing exemption. Family law. In a child-abuse or child-neglect statute, a provision that a parent who provides a child with faith healing (in place of standard medical treatment) will not, for that reason alone, be charged with abuse or neglect. • Nearly all states have enacted some form of faith-healing exemption. But the statutes differ greatly. For example, they differ on whether the exemption is available as a defense to manslaughter or murder charges brought against a parent whose child dies as a result of the parent’s having refused to consent to medical treatment. — Also termed religious-exemption statute; spiritual-treatment exemption. Cf. medical neglect under NEGLECT.

fake, n. (19c) Something that is not what it purports to be. See FORGERY (2); IMPOSTOR.

fake, vb. (19c) To make or construct falsely. See COUNTERFEIT.

Falcidian law (fal-sid-ee-an). (17c) Roman law. A law prescribing that one could give no more than three-fourths of one’s property in legacies and that the heirs should receive at least one-fourth (the Falcidian portion). • If the testator violated this law, the heir had the right to deduct proportionally from each legatee as necessary. The law, proposed by the Roman tribune Falcidius, was enacted in 40 B.C. — Also termed lex Falcidia. See LEGITIME.

“A large number of small legacies might [either] leave nothing for the heir . . . [or] make his part so small as to seem valueless in his eyes. But a Falcidian law, passed in the year 40 B.C., put an end to the whole difficulty. This law secured to the heir a quarter of the net value of the estate; the legatees could obtain only three-quarters: if the legatees named in the will amounted to more than this, they were diminished by proportional reductions. . . . Few measures have accomplished their purpose more satisfactorily than the Falcidian law, which remained in force through the history of the empire, and holds an important place in the system of Justinian.” James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 321–22 (1981).

Falcidian portion. Roman law. The one-fourth part of an estate that one or more instituted heirs are entitled to retain. La. Civ. Code art. 1494. — Also termed quarta Falcidiana. See forced heir under HEIR; LEGITIME. Cf. QUARTA TREBELLIANICA.

Falconer error. A trial court’s failure to instruct the jury that a guilty finding on a manslaughter charge requires acquittal on a murder charge. Falconer v. Lane, 905 F.2d 1129 (7th Cir. 1990).

faldage (fahl-dij), n. Hist. 1. A landowner’s right to require tenants to graze their sheep in designated temporary folds so that the manure will fertilize the field. — Also termed faldage; fold soc. 2. A sum of money paid to the landowner by a sheep-owning tenant in lieu of keeping the animals in the landowner’s temporary fold. — Also termed faldfree.

fald fee (fahl fed), n. Hist. See FALDAGE (2).

fald worth (fahld-worth), n. Hist. A person who resides in a rural community where everyone above a certain age is responsible for the good conduct of all other members of the community and has reached that age of responsibility. • This was part of the frankpledge system. See DECENARY; FRANKPLEDGE.

fallacy. Any unsound, and usu. deceptive, argument or inference. • Both “formal” and “material” fallacies occur in a variety of recognized categories, knowledge of which is fundamental in the analysis of the validity of legal reasoning employed in any legal argument, esp. in judicial opinions. The presence of a fallacy in a legal argument is a defect — often fatal and usu. deceptive — in the legal reasoning.

formal fallacy. A fallacy involving flaws in the form of the argument, such as a violation of the formal rules of syllogistic reasoning.

material fallacy. A fallacy involving flaws in the factual content of a logical argument.

falso (fahl-yoh), n. Spanish law. The mandate in a court’s judgment; the dispositive sentence in a judicial pronouncement.

fall of the hammer. An auctioneer’s closing of bidding <the bureau will be sold at the fall of the hammer>. Traditionally, an auctioneer bangs a hammer, gavel, or other object when bidding is closed. In some circumstances, such as online auctions, a verbal announcement that bidding is closed substitutes. [Cases: Auctions and Auctioneers ⊑ 7.]

falsa demonstratio (fal-sa or fawl-sa dem-an-stray-shee-oh). Roman law. A false designation; an erroneous description of a person or thing in a legal instrument. Generally, a simple error in description, grammar, or spelling will not void an instrument or even a single provision in it (such as a bequest by will). — Also termed false demonstration.

falsa moneta (fal-sa or fawl-sa mo-nee-ta). Roman law. Counterfeit money.

falsare (fal-sair-e or fawl-), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. To counterfeit; to falsify.

falsarius (fal-sair-e-as or fawl-). [Law Latin] Hist. A counterfeiter. — Also spelled falcarious. — Also termed felsonarius.

false, adj. (12c) 1. Untrue . 2. Deceitful; lying . 3. Not genuine; inauthentic <false coinage>. 4. What is false can be so by intent, by accident, or by mistake.

false, vb. 1. Scots law. To make or prove false. 2. Archaic. Falsify (1).

false action. See feigned action.

false advertising. n. (1911) 1. The tortious and sometimes criminal act of distributing an advertisement that is untrue, deceptive, or misleading; esp., under the Lanham Trademark Act, an advertising statement that tends to mislead consumers about the characteristics, quality, or geographic origin of one’s own or someone else’s goods, services, or commercial activity. • Under § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, false advertising is actionable by anyone who reasonably believes that he or she has been or is likely to be damaged by the statement. An exaggerated opinion (“ puffing ”) is an immaterial statement and therefore not actionable. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⊑ 21, 163; Fraud ⊑ 11(1)]. 2. At common law, a statement in a defendant’s advertising about its own goods or services intended to deceive or confuse customers into buying those goods or services instead of the plaintiff’s, and causing actual damage to the plaintiff, esp. the loss of sales. — Also termed (in both senses) deceptive advertising.

false answer. See answer (1).

false arrest. See arrest.

false-association claim. Intellectual property. A claim based on the wrongful use of a distinctive name, mark, trade dress, or other device to misrepresent sponsorship, origin of goods or services, or affiliation. The power to assert a false-association claim is not limited to trademark registrants. Any person who claims an injury caused by deceptive use of a trademark or its equivalent may have standing to bring suit. See 15 USCA § 1129(a)(1)(A). [Cases: Trademarks ⊑ 9106, 1117, 1563.]

false character. Hist. The crime of impersonating a servant’s master or mistress. See impostor.

false check. See bad check under check.

false claim. An assertion or statement that is untrue; esp., overbilling.

False Claims Act. A federal statute establishing civil and criminal penalties against persons who bill the government falsely, deliver less to the government than represented, or use a false record to decrease an obligation to the government. 18 USCA §§ 286–287; 31 USCA §§ 3729–3733. • The Act may be enforced either by the attorney general or by a private person in a qui tam action. See qui tam action. [Cases: United States ⊑ 120.]

false conflict of laws. See conflict of laws.

false demonstration. See false demonstratio.

false designation of origin. Trademarks. A mark, design, or similar element that creates a misleading or erroneous impression of a good or product’s source. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⊑ 29; Trademarks ⊑ 1419.]

falsehood. 1. See lie. 2. See perjury.

false impersonation. See impersonation.

false-implication libel. See libel.

false imprisonment. (14c) A restraint of a person in a bounded area without justification or consent. • False imprisonment is a common-law misdemeanor and a tort. It applies to private as well as governmental detention. Cf. false arrest under arrest. [Cases: False Imprisonment ⊑ 2, 43.]

"[In the phrase false imprisonment,] false is . . . used not in the ordinary sense of mendacious or fallacious, but in the less common though well-established sense of erroneous or wrong; as in the phrases false quantity, false step, false taste, etc." R.F.V. Heuston, Salmond on the Law of Torts 123 n.38 (17th ed. 1977).

"False imprisonment was a misdemeanor at common law and is recognized by some states today. It differs from kidnapping in that asportation is not required. If the imprisonment is secret, some jurisdictions treat it as kidnapping.” Arnold H. Loevy, Criminal Law in a Nutshell 65 (2d ed. 1987)."
false judgment. Hist. A writ filed to obtain review of a judgment of a court not of record. "After judgment given, a writ also of false judgment lies to the courts at Westminster to rehear and review the cause, and not a writ of error; for this is not a court of record . . . ." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 34 (1768).

false light. (1962) 1. Torts. In an invasion-of-privacy action, a plaintiff's allegation that the defendant attributed to the plaintiff views that he or she does not hold and placed the plaintiff before the public in a highly offensive and untrue manner. • If the matter involves the public interest, the plaintiff must prove the defendant's malice. See invasion of privacy by false light under INVASION OF PRIVACY. [Cases: Torts C:='352.] 2. (usu. pl.) Maritime law. A signal displayed intentionally to lure a vessel into danger. 18 USCA § 1658(b). — Also termed false light or signal.

false-memory syndrome. The supposed recovery of memories of traumatic or stressful episodes that did not actually occur, often in session with a mental-health therapist. • This term is most frequently applied to claims by adult children that repressed memories of prolonged and repeated child sexual abuse, usu. by parents, have surfaced, even though there is no independent evidence to substantiate the claims. Cf. REPRESSION SYNDROME.

False Memory Syndrome Foundation. An organization of parents who claim that their adult children have falsely accused them of childhood sexual abuse. • The organization was formed for the purpose of aiding persons who claim to have been wrongly accused as a result of the recovery of repressed memories. — Abbr. FMSF. Cf. VICTIMS OF CHILD ABUSE LAWS.

false misrepresentation. See MISREPRESENTATION. • This phrase is redundant because misrepresentation includes the idea of falsity.

false news. Hist. The misdemeanor of spreading false information that causes discord between the monarch and the people or between important people in the realm. 3 Edw., ch. 34.

false oath. See PERJURY.

false personation. See false impersonation under IMPersonation.

false plea. See sham pleading under PLEADING (1).

false pretenses. (18c) The crime of knowingly obtaining title to another's personal property by misrepresenting a fact with the intent to defraud. • Although unknown to English common law, false pretenses became a misdemeanor under a statute old enough to make it common law in the United States. Modern American statutes make it either a felony or a misdemeanor, depending on the property's value. — Also termed obtaining property by false pretenses; fraudulent pretenses. Cf. Larceny by trick under LARCENY; EMBEzzLEMENT. [Cases: False Pretenses C:='1.]

false promise. See PROMISE.

false report. (1827) Criminal law. The criminal offense of informing law enforcement about a crime that did not occur. [Cases: Obstructing Justice C:='7.]

false representation. See MISREPRESENTATION.

false return. (16c) 1. A process server's or other court official's recorded misrepresentation that process was served, that some other action was taken, or that something is true. See return (2). [Cases: Process C:='132–144, 153, 160.] 2. A tax return on which taxable income is incorrectly reported or the tax is incorrectly computed. See TAX RETURN. [Cases: Internal Revenue C:='4480.]

false statement. See STATEMENT.

false swearing. See perjury.

false testimony. See TESTIMONY.

false token. See TOKEN.

false verdict. See VERDICT.

false weight. (usu. pl.) A weight or measure that does not comply with governmentally prescribed standards or with the prevailing custom in the place and business in which the weight or measure is used. [Cases: Weights and Measures C:='10.]

falsi crimen. See crimen falsi under CRIMEN.

falsify, vb. (15c) 1. To make something false; to counterfeit or forge <the chiropractor falsified his records to help the plaintiff>. — Also termed (archaically) false. See COUNTERFEIT; FORGERY. 2. Rare. To prove something to be false or erroneous <their goal in the appeal was to falsify the jury's verdict>. — falsification, n.

falsifying a record. (18c) The crime of making false entries or otherwise tampering with a public record with the intent to deceive or injure, or to conceal wrongdoing. 18 USCA §§ 1506, 2071, 2073; Model Penal Code § 224.4. [Cases: Fraud C:='68; Records C:='22.]

falsifying of dooms, n. See APPEAL (1).

falsity, n. (13c) 1. Something (such as a statement) that is false. See LIE. 2. The quality of being false. See FALSE.

falsonarius. See falsarius.

falsum (fal-sam or fafh-sam), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. A false statement. See crimen falsi under CRIMEN. 2. A crime involving forgery or falsification. • Until the later Roman empire, the term applied to both documents and counterfeited coins.
falsus in uno doctrine (fal-sas [or fawl-sas] in yoo-noh). [fr. Latin falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus "false in one thing, false in all""] The principle that if the jury believes that a witness's testimony on a material issue is intentionally deceitful, the jury may disregard all of that witness's testimony. [Cases: Trial ⊔ 187, 210; Witnesses ⊔ 317.]

"The is an old maxim 'falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus' (false in one thing, false in all), which is often much overemphasized by counsel; though it is recognized by many courts in their charges to the jury. But this is only primitive psychology, and should be completely discarded." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 181 (1935).

centering-company exception. A provision in the Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification Act exempting an employer from giving the required 60-day notice for a plant shutdown if (1) at the time notice was due, the employer was seeking capital or resources that would have allowed the employer to avoid a shutdown, and (2) the employer reasonably believed that providing the notice would have precluded the employer from obtaining the necessary capital or other resources. 29 USCA § 2102(b)(1). See workbook ADJUSTMENT AND RETRAINING NOTIFICATION ACT. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⊔ 3232.]

fama publica (fay-mah poob-li-ka). [Latin "public repute"]. Hist. A person's reputation in the community. • A person's fama publica could be used against him or her in a criminal proceeding. Cf. ill. fame.

"Now in the thirteenth century we find in the sheriff's turn a procedure by way of double presentment, and we may see it often, though not always, when a coroner is holding an inquest over the body of a dead man. The fama publica is twice distilled. The representatives of the vills make presentments to the jury of twelve freeholders which represents the hundred, and then such of these presentments as the twelve jurors are willing to 'avow,' or make their own, are presented by them to the sheriff. . . . From the very first the legal forefathers of our grand jurors are not in the habit of conveying all their property ... to a person who is described as the familiae emptor, and who is said by Gaius to be in loco heredis. Instructions were no doubt given to him as to the disposal of the property or part of it, but it is not clear that these were enforceable . . . ." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 175 (2d ed. 1953).

familiae emptor (fo-mil-ee-ee emp-tor). [Latin "estate purchaser"] Roman law. A trustee who received an inheritance by a fictitious purchase and distributed it as the testator instructed. — Also termed emptor familias. See mancipatory will under will.

"At some date, probably long before the XII Tables, men on the point of death, unable to make a true will because there was no imminent sitting of the Comitia, adopted the practice of conveying all their property . . . to a person . . . ." Henry S. Maine, Ancient Law 170 (17th ed. 1901).

familiae erciscundae (fo-nil-ee-ee ee-ree kan-dee). See actio familiae erciscundae under actio.

family, n. (14c) 1. A group of persons connected by blood, by affinity, or by law, esp. within two or three generations. 2. A group consisting of parents and their children. 3. A group of persons who live together and have a shared commitment to a domestic relationship. See relative. — familial, adj.

blended family. (1985) The combined families of persons with children from earlier marriages or relationships.

Family Division. English law. A section of the High Court that has jurisdiction over family matters such as divorce and custody and over uncontested probate matters.

Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act. An act that prescribes minimum standards for the maintenance and dissemination of student records by educational institutions. 20 USCA § 1232g. It applies only to schools that receive federal funding. — Abbr. FERPA. — Also termed Buckley Amendment. [Cases: Colleges and Universities <9.40; Records <31.]

family-expense statute. (1901) 1. A state law that permits a charge against the property of a spouse for family debts such as rent, food, clothing, and tuition. [Cases: Husband and Wife <19(1).] 2. A section of the federal tax code providing that a person may not deduct expenses incurred for family living, or personal purposes. IRC (26 USCA) § 262. See necessary expenses. [Cases: Internal Revenue <3364.]

family farmer. See farmer.

family-farmer bankruptcy. See chapter 12 (2).

family home. A house that was purchased during marriage and that the family has resided in, esp. before a divorce. • In some jurisdictions, the court may award the family home to the custodial parent until (1) the youngest child reaches the age of 18 or is otherwise emancipated, (2) the custodial parent moves, or (3) the custodial parent remarries. In making such an award, the court reasons that it is in the best interests of the child to remain in the family home. • Also termed marital home; marital residence. [Cases: Divorce <252.5] family-income insurance. See insurance.

family law. (1919) 1. The body of law dealing with marriage, divorce, adoption, child custody and support, child abuse and neglect, paternity, juvenile delinquency, and other domestic-relations issues. • Also termed domestic relations; domestic-relations law. 2. (More broadly) the bodies of law dealing with wills and estates, property, constitutional rights, contracts, employment, and finance as they relate to families.

family leave. (1981) An unpaid leave of absence from work taken to have or care for a baby or to care for a sick family member. See family and medical leave act. [Cases: Labor and Employment <350, 351.]

family meeting. Hist. Civil law. 1. An advisory council called to aid the court in a family-law matter, such as arrangement of a guardianship for a minor or an incompetent adult. • If a person had no relatives, the court could summon friends of the person instead. 2. A council of relatives of a minor assembled to advise the minor in his or her affairs and to help administer the minor’s property. • Also termed family council. [Cases: Guardian and Ward <9.]

family of marks. Trademarks. A group of trademarks that share a recognizable characteristic so that they are recognized by consumers as identifying a single source. • An example of a family of marks is the variety of marks beginning with Mc- and identifying items served at McDonald’s restaurants. [Cases: Trademarks <1060.]

family of nations. Int’l law. The community of countries to which international law applies. • This term is now obsolete. It is increasingly rejected as Eurocentric.

‘‘The family of nations’ is an aggregate of States which, as the result of their historical antecedents, have inherited a common civilisation, and are at a similar level of moral and political opinion.” Thomas E. Holland, The Elements of Jurisprudence 396 (13th ed. 1924).

family partnership. See partnership.

family-partnership rules. (1946) Laws or regulations designed to prevent the shifting of income among partners, esp. family members, who may not be dealing at arm’s length.

family-pot trust. See trust.

family-purpose rule. (1927) Torts. The principle that a vehicle’s owner is liable for injuries or damage caused by a family member’s negligent driving. • Many states have abolished this rule. • Also termed family-pur­pose doctrine; family-automobile doctrine; family-car doctrine. Cf. guest statute. [Cases: Automobiles <195(5).]

‘‘A number of jurisdictions have adopted the so-called ‘family purpose’ doctrine, under which the owner of a motor vehicle purchased or maintained for the pleasure of his family is liable for injuries inflicted by the negligent operation of the vehicle while it is being used by members of the family for their own pleasure, on the theory that the vehicle is being used for the purpose or business for which it was kept, and that the person operating it is therefore acting as the owner’s agent or servant in using it.’’ 8 Am. Jur. 2d Automobiles and Highway Traffic § 715, at 296 (1997).

family reunification. See reunification.

family settlement. See family arrangement.

family shelter. See women’s shelter under shelter.

farm, n. (14c) 1. Land and connected buildings used for agricultural purposes. 2. Hist. Rent. • By extension, the term came to mean the land for which the rent was paid. — Also termed and spelled ferm; farm; firme.

farm, vb. (15c) 1. To cultivate land; to conduct the business of farming. 2. To lease. See FARM OUT.

Farm Credit Administration. An independent federal agency that regulates and examines the borrower-owned banks and cooperative associations that make up the Federal Farm Credit System. • The agency was created in 1929 under the title "Federal Farm Board," became an agency in the Department of Agriculture in 1933, and again became independent in 1971. — Abbr. FCA. See FEDERAL FARM CREDIT SYSTEM. [Cases: United States ☐= 53(7).]

farmee. See FARMOUTEE.

farmlet, vb. Hist. To lease; to let land for rent. • To farm let is a phrasal verb that commonly appeared in real-estate leases; it corresponds with its Latin root, ad fermam tradidi.

“...a lease is properly a conveyance of any lands or tenements, (usually in consideration of rent or other annual recompense) made for life, for years, or at will, but always for a less time than the lessor hath in the premises: for if it be for the whole interest, it is more properly an assignment than a lease. The usual words of operation in it are, 'demise, grant, and to farm let. dimisi, concessi, et ad fermam tradidi.'” William Blackstone. Commentaries on the Laws of England, 1766.

farmor. See FARMOUTOR.

farm out, vb. (17c) 1. To turn over something (such as an oil-and-gas lease) for performance by another. • The term evolved from the Roman practice of transferring the right to collect taxes to a third party for a fee. That practice continued in England, Scotland, and France, but it has been long abolished. 2. Hist. To lease for a term. 3. To exhaust farmland, esp. by continuously raising a single crop.

farmout agreement. Oil & gas. An agreement by which one who owns an oil-and-gas lease (the farmor or farmer) agrees to assign to another (the farmoutee or farmee) an interest in the lease in return for drilling and testing operations on the lease. • For the farmor, the agreement either (1) maintains the lease by securing production or complying with the implied covenant to develop or offset, or (2) obtains an interest in production without costs. For the farmee, the agreement obtains acreage that is not otherwise available or at lower cost than would otherwise be possible. A farmout agreement may also serve as a device to keep people and equipment gainfully employed. — Often shortened to farmout. — Also written farm out agreement; farm-out agreement. See ASSIGNMENT. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ☐= 74(8)]. farmoutee (fahrm-ow-tee). An oil-and-gas sublessee to whom the lease is assigned for purposes of drilling a farmoutor (fahrm-ow-tor or -tor). An oil-and-gas lessee who assigns the lease to another, who agrees to drill a well. — Also spelled farmouter. — Also termed farmor, farm minor. [Cases: Mines and Minerals C−74(8).]

Farm Service Agency. An agency in the U.S. Department of Agriculture responsible for administering farm-commodity, crop-insurance, and resource-conservation programs for farmers and ranchers and for making or guaranteeing farm emergency and operating loans through a network of state and county offices. — Abbr. FSA. [Cases: United States v. 30.]

farthing of land (fahr-thing). An area of land measured as one-quarter of a larger area (much as a farthing was one-quarter of a penny). • A farthing of land ranged from a quarter of a hide to a quarter of an acre.

FAS. abbr. 1. FREE ALONGSIDE SHIP. 2. FETAL ALCOHOL SYNDROME. 3. FOREIGN AGRICULTURAL SERVICE.

fas (fas). [Latin] Roman law. 1. Moral law of divine origin; divine law. • Jus, by contrast, is created by man. See jus. 2. What is right, proper, lawful, and permitted. Cf. nefas.

"The first element to be noted in the Roman composite existing in primitive times, when religion and law were not distinguished, is fas — the will of the gods, embodied in rules that regulated not only ceremonial but the conduct of all men as such." Hannis Taylor, The Science of Jurisprudence 65 (1908).

"It is true that the two spheres of ius and fas overlapped. . . . All this, however, concerned merely the question of where to draw the line between ius and fas; it did not blur the distinction between the two. From the standpoint of the history of Roman law, this distinction, consciously made from very early times, was of great importance, since it enabled the Romans to delimit the scope and the contents of strictly legal rules. This attitude may occasionally have caused a certain cold aloofness from purely human problems, but it undoubtedly contributed to the clarity of the legal system." Hans Julius Wolff, Roman Law: An Historical Introduction 51–52 (1951).

FASB (faz-bee). abbr. FINANCIAL ACCOUNTING STANDARDS BOARD.

FASB statement. An official pronouncement from the Financial Accounting Standards Board establishing a given financial-accounting practice as acceptable. [Cases: Securities Regulation C−25.18.]

fascism. A totalitarian political ideology under which all economic and social aspects of life come under rigid government control or direction, and the state's interests supersede individual interests.

fast estate. See real property under property.

fasti (fas-ti). [Latin] Roman law. 1. The days on which court can be held. • In this sense, fasti is a shortened form of dies fasti. 2. A calendar of days on which court can be held. See dies fasti under dies.

fast land. See land.

fast-tracking, n. (1996) A court's method of accelerating the disposition of cases in an effort to clear its docket. • For example, a judge might order that all discovery must be finished within 90 days and that trial is set for 30 days later. See ROCKET DOCKET. — fast-track, vb.

genetic father. See biological father.

godfather. See godparent.

intentional father. See intentional parent under parent.

legal father. (16c) The man recognized by law as the male parent of a child. • A man is the legal father of a child if he was married to the child's natural mother when the child was born, if he has recognized or acknowledged the child, or if he has been declared the child's natural father in a paternity action. If a man consents to the artificial insemination of his wife, he is the legal father of the child that is born as a result of the artificial insemination even though he may not be the genetic father of the child. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock C−12, 68; Parent and Child C−1, 20.] natural father. See biological father.

presumed father. (1937) The man presumed to be the father of a child for any of several reasons: (1) because he was married to the child's natural mother when the child was conceived or born (even though the marriage may have been invalid), (2) because the man married the mother after the child's birth and agreed either to have his name on the birth certificate or to support the child, or (3) because the man welcomed the child into his home and held out the child as his own. • This term represents a complicated category, and state laws vary in their requirements. See presumption of paternity. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock 3–3, 43; Infants 155, 172.] psychological father. See psychological parent under PARENT.

putative father (pyoo-ta-tiv). (16c) The alleged biological father of a child born out of wedlock. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock 1.]

feal (fee-al). adj. Archaic. Faithful; truthful. — Also termed feele.

fealty (feel-tee or fee-al-tee). (14c) Hist. In feudal law, the allegiance that a tenant or vassal owes to a lord. — Also termed feodality.

“There was the possibility that if the entire top layer of the structure revolved, the king might be deprived of all support. To meet this possibility, the king also bound directly to himself all the important men in the lower strata of the [feudal] structure by an oath of loyalty. This was particularly effective for in medieval times the oath of fealty had all the sanction of the church, and in addition due to the necessity for feudal organization in times of disorder, had also a popular sanction in public opinion so that the man who broke his oath to his lord was one of the most execrable men to be found in the whole social organization.” Charles Herman Kinnane, A First Book on Anglo-American Law 248 (2d ed. 1952).

fear. See FARM.

fear-of-cancer claim. Torts. A tort claim founded on a plaintiff's mental anguish or emotional distress arising from the fear of developing cancer, where either (1) the plaintiff was exposed to asbestos or other carcinogenic agents, or (2) a physician's negligence gave rise to a potentially cancerous condition or permitted a cancer to develop unchecked. • The plaintiff must demonstrate (1) actual exposure to a disease-causing agent, and (2) the reasonableness of the emotional distress. See Winik v. Jewish Hosp. of Brooklyn, 293 N.E.2d 95 (N.Y. 1972); Ferrara v. Galluchio, 152 N.E.2d 249 (N.Y. 1958). — Also termed cancerphobia claim.

federal-juvenile-delinquency jurisdiction. See Jurisdiction.

Federal Kidnapping Act. A federal law punishing kidnapping for ransom or reward when the victim is transported interstate or internationally. • The law presumes that a victim has been transported in violation of the law if the victim is not released within 24 hours. The Federal Kidnapping Act, by express provision, does not apply to the kidnapping of a minor by either parent. The law was enacted in 1932 after the son of aviator Charles Lindbergh was kidnapped and murdered. For this reason, it is also termed the Lindbergh Act. 18 USCA § 1201. — Also termed Lindbergh Act. Cf. parental kidnapping prevention act. [Cases: Kidnapping $\rightarrow$ 14.]

"The Federal Kidnapping Act was passed in 1932 to close a dangerous loophole between state and federal law. At that time, marauding bands of kidnappers were preying upon the wealthy with ruthless abandon, seizing their victims for ransom while operating outside the reach of existing state laws. Knowing that authorities in the victim's home state were powerless once a hostage was transported across state lines, the criminals would kidnap their target in one state, then move quickly to the next. In response, Congress made kidnapping a federal crime when the victim was moved from one state to another, and comprehensive language was used to cover every possible variety of kidnapping followed by interstate transportation." 1 Am. Jur. 2d Abduction and Kidnapping § 14, at 185 (1994).

Federal Labor Relations Authority. An agency that protects the right of federal employees to organize, engage in collective bargaining, and select their own union representatives. • It was established under Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1978 and began operating in 1979. 5 USCA §§ 7101–35. — Abbr. FLRA. [Cases: Labor and Employment $\rightarrow$ 1650.]

federal land. See land.

Federal Land Bank. (1914) One of a system of 12 regional banks created in 1916 to provide mortgage loans to farmers. • The system is now merged with federal intermediate credit banks to create the Federal Farm Credit System. [Cases: Banks and Banking $\rightarrow$ 401; United States $\Rightarrow$ 53(7).]

federal law. (18c) The body of law consisting of the U.S. Constitution, federal statutes and regulations, U.S. treaties, and federal common law. Cf. state law.

Federal Law Enforcement Training Center. An interagency law-enforcement training facility responsible for serving over 70 law-enforcement organizations in the federal government. • The Center was transferred from the Department of the Treasury to the Department of Homeland Security in 2003. — Abbr. FLETC.

federal magistrate. United States magistrate judge.

Federal Maritime Commission. An independent federal agency that regulates the waterborne foreign and domestic commerce of the United States by (1) ensuring that U.S. international trade is open to all countries on fair and equitable terms, (2) guarding against unauthorized monopolies in U.S. waterborne commerce, and (3) ensuring that financial responsibility is maintained to clean up oil spills and indemnify injured passengers. • The Agency was established in 1961. Its five commissioners are appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. — Abbr. FMC. [Cases: Shipping $\rightarrow$ 3, 14.]

Federal Maritime Lien Act. A statute that confers an automatic lien on anyone who provides a vessel with any of a wide range of goods and services. 46 USCA §§ 31341–43. — Abbr. FMI.A. [Cases: Maritime Liens $\rightarrow$ 17.]

The Federal Reserve Banks issue the notes in denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100. Until 1945, the United States Mint also printed $500, $1,000, $5,000, and $10,000 bills. Although the Federal Reserve System discontinued using bills larger than $100 in 1969, the outstanding bills remain legal tender. 31 USCA § 5103. Cf. GOLD CERTIFICATE; SILVER CERTIFICATE.

Federal Reserve System. The central bank that sets credit and monetary policy by fixing the reserves to be maintained by depository institutions, determining the discount rate charged by Federal Reserve Banks, and regulating the amount of credit that may be extended on any security. • The Federal Reserve System was established by the Federal Reserve Act of 1913. 12 USCA § 221. It comprises 12 central banks supervised by a Board of Governors whose members are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. — Abbr. FRS; Fed. [Cases: Banks and Banking C=351-359.]

"The Federal Reserve System of 1913 evolved out of a search for consensus among bankers, politicians, and some academic experts. It was a move toward 'central bank' regulation in the European sense . . . . [The System] seemed to resolve the outstanding problems in money and banking. Federal Reserve banknotes could grow with expanding commercial paper and economic prosperity, and assure a more adequate, reliable monetary growth.

Federal Retirement Thrift Investment Board. A board that administers the Thrift Savings Plan that allows federal employees to save additional funds for retirement. It was established in 1986. 5 USCA § 8472. — Abbr. FRTIB. [Cases: United States ⊕= 39(15).

Federal Rules Enabling Act. A 1934 statute granting the U.S. Supreme Court the authority to adopt rules of civil procedure for federal courts. For the rulemaking power of federal courts today, see 28 USCA §§ 2071, 2072. See also Fed. R. Civ. P. 83; Fed. R. Crim. P. 57. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⊕= 31.]

Chief Justice Hughes in 1935 appointed fourteen lawyers and law teachers as the Advisory Committee for the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, with William D. Mitchell, former Attorney General, as chairman, and Charles E. Clark, then dean of the Yale Law School, as reporter, to recommend a draft of rules uniting law and equity. The committee proposed a system of rules that was approved by the Court with certain changes. In accordance with the Enabling Act, the rules were submitted to Congress for its acquiescence and, Congress having taken no exception to them, they became effective September 16, 1938.

The rules thus produced bear the unmistakable imprint of the reporter, Charles E. Clark, and represent the largest single accomplishment in American civil procedure since the Field Code of 1848. Although they were not perfect and have been amended many times, experience with them has on the whole been satisfactory, and more than half of the states have adopted them in their entirety or in large part. Fleming James, Geoffrey C. Hazard Jr. & John Leubsdorf, Civil Procedure § 1.8, at 24-25 (5th ed. 2001).

Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. A federal agency created in 1934 to insure deposits in savings-and-loan associations and savings banks. — When this agency became insolvent in 1989, its assets and liabilities were transferred to an insurance fund managed by the FDIC. — Abbr. FSLIC. See RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION. [Cases: Building and Loan Associations ⊕= 48.]

Federal Supply Service. A unit in the General Services Administration responsible for providing supplies to federal agencies worldwide. In procuring supplies the agency takes advantage of the government’s aggregate buying power. Abbr. FSS.

Federal Technology Service. A unit in the General Services Administration that provides communications services worldwide to other federal departments and agencies. — Abbr. FTS.

Federal Tort Claims Act. A statute that limits federal sovereign immunity and allows recovery in federal court for tort damages caused by federal employees, but only if the law of the state where the injury occurred would hold a private person liable for the injury. 28 USCA §§ 2671-2680 — Abbr. FTCA. See sovereign immunity under IMMUNITY (1). [Cases: United States ⊕= 78.]

"Although it has been suggested that the maxim, ‘the King can do no wrong’ never had an existence in the United States, it has also been declared that in enacting the Federal Tort Claims Act, Congress recognized the manifold injustice that springs from the delimiting effect of the rule represented by that maxim. And it is said that in passing the Act, Congress intended to compensate the victims of negligence in the conduct of governmental activities in circumstances in which a private person would be liable, rather than leave just treatment to the caprice and legislative burden of individual private laws, and to eliminate the burden on Congress of investigating and passing on private bills seeking individual relief." 35 Am.Jur. 2d Federal Tort Claims Act § 1, at 296 (1967).

Federal Trade Commission. An independent five-member federal commission that administers various laws against business monopolies, restraint of trade, and deceptive trade practices. It was established by the Federal Trade Commission Act of 1914, 15 USCA §§ 41-58. The Commission’s body of rulings reaches into many state-law actions because many so-called “Little FTC Acts” of the states specify that FTC interpretations should provide a model for state-court decisions. — Abbr. FTC. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation ⊕= 300.]

Federal Trademark Dilution Act. A 1995 amendment to the Lanham Act (Trademark Act of 1946) that provides additional remedies against the dilution of famous trademarks. 15 USCA § 1125(c). — Sometimes shortened to Dilution Act. — Abbr. FTDA. [Cases: Trademarks ⊕= 1450-1473.]
federal transfer. The federal district court's right to move a civil action filed there to any other district or division where the plaintiff could have brought the action originally. 28 USCA § 1404(a). See CHANGE OF VENUE. [Cases: Federal Courts \(\Rightarrow\) 101-146, 1152.]

Federal Transit Administration. A unit in the U.S. Department of Transportation responsible for increasing public transit ridership through demonstration projects and financial assistance. — Abbr. FTA.

Federal Unemployment Tax Act. The federal statute requiring employers to remit taxes based on employees' wages and salaries. 18 USCA § 1201 et seq. — Abbr. FUTA. [Cases: Internal Revenue \(\Rightarrow\) 4351.]

federation. (18c) A league or union of states, groups, or peoples united under a strong central authority but retaining limited regional sovereignty, esp. over local affairs. Cf. confederation.

to a jury trial. [Cases: Jury \(\Rightarrow\) 26.]

load-origination fee. A fee charged by a lender for preparing and processing a loan. [Cases: Usury \(\Rightarrow\) 53.]

probate fee. Compensation paid with a probate court's approval to an attorney who performs probate-related services to the estate. [Cases: Executors and Administrators \(\Rightarrow\) 216(2).]

success fee. A bonus paid to a representative who performs exceptionally well in gaining favorable results; esp., a bonus that a client pays to an attorney if the attorney obtains something of value to the client.

For instance, a client might agree to pay a success fee for success in litigation, for favorable negotiations in a transaction, or for the successful conclusion of a corporate merger, acquisition, or loan. See CONDITIONAL FEE AGREEMENT. [Cases: Attorney and Client \(\Rightarrow\) 130, 143.]

witness fee. 1. A statutory fee that must be tendered with a subpoena for the subpoena to be binding. [Cases: Witnesses \(\Rightarrow\) 23.] 2. A fee paid by a party to a witness as reimbursement for reasonable expenses (such as travel, meals, lodging, and loss of time) incurred as a result of the witness's having to attend and testify at a deposition or trial. • Any other payment to a nonexpert witness is considered unethical. — Also termed (in English law) conduct money. Cf. expert-witness fee.

2. A heritable interest in land; esp., a fee simple absolute. — Also termed fee estate; fee; feodum; feu; feu; feu; feudum; fief. See FEE SIMPLE. Cf. FEU. [Cases: Estates in Property \(\Rightarrow\) 5-7.]

"To enfeoff someone was to transfer to him an interest in land called a fief — or, if you prefer, a feu, feu, or feud. Our modern word fief, a direct lineal descendant of fief, implies the characteristic of potentially infinite duration when used to describe an interest in land today; but in the earliest part of the feudal period, a fief might have been as small as a life interest. We shall see later that feoffment was not used to transfer interests 'smaller' than life interests — e.g., so-called terms for years — but for our purposes now we may simply note that transfers of interests for life or 'larger' were accomplished by livery of seisin." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 11 (2d ed. 1984).

arriere fee (ar-ee-air or ar-ee-ar). Hist. A fee dependent on a superior one; a subfief. — Also termed arriere fief.

base fee. (16c) A fee that has some qualification connected to it and that terminates whenever the qualification terminates. • An example of the words creating a base fee are "to A and his heirs, tenants of the manor of Tinsleydale," which would terminate when A or his heirs are no longer tenants of the manor.
fee simple. An estate in land held by ordinary feudal tenure, such as socage, rather than by ecclesiastical tenure through frankalmoine. See FRANKALMOIN; SOCAGE.

limited fee. See base fee.

plowman's fee. Hist. A species of tenure for peasants or small farmers by which the land descended in equal shares to all the tenant's sons.

qualified fee. See base fee.

fee farm. Hist. A species of tenure in which land is held in perpetuity at a yearly rent (fee-farm rent), without fealty, homage, or other services than those in the feoffment. — Also termed feoff, firma; firma feoff. See EMTYPTUSIS.

'Now to all appearance the term socage, a term not found in Normandy, has been extending itself upwards; a name appropriate to a class of cultivating peasants has begun to include the baron or prelate who holds land at a rent but is not burdened with military service. . . . He is sometimes said to have feodum censuale, far more commonly he is said to hold in fee farm.' This term has difficulties of its own, for it appears in many different guises; a feufofe is to hold in feoff, in feuism, in fedprimam, in feodo primam, in feudo firma, ad feudem firmam, but most commonly, in feodifirma. The Old English language had both of the words of which this term is compounded, both feoh (property) and færm (rent); but so had the language of France, and in Normandy documents the term may be found in various shapes, firmam fédiam, feudfirmam. But, whatever may be the precise history of the phrase, to hold in fee farm means to hold heritably, perpetually, at a rent: the fee, the inheritance, is let to farm.' 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 293 (2d ed. 1899).

feemail (fee-mail). (1994) Slang. An attorney's fee extorted by intimidation, threats, or pressure. 2. The act or process of extorting such a fee. Cf. BLACKMAIL (1); GRAYMAIL; GREENMAIL (1), (2).

fee-sharing. See FEE SPLITTING.

fee-shifting, n. The transfer of responsibility for paying fees, esp. attorney's fees, from one party to another. See AMERICAN RULE (1); ENGLISH RULE. [Cases: Internal Revenue C:4351.]

fee simple. (15c) An interest in land that, being the broadest property interest allowed by law, endures until the current holder dies without heirs; esp., a fee simple absolute. — Often shortened to fee. — Also termed estate in fee simple; tenancy in fee; fee-simple title; exclusive ownership; feodum simplex. See and his heirs. [Cases: Estates in Property C:5—7.]

"(Fee simple) is a term not likely to be found in modern conversation between laymen, who would in all probability find it quite unintelligible. Yet to a layman of the 14th century the term would have been perfectly intelligible, for it refers to the elementary social relationship of feudalism with which he was fully familiar: the words 'fee' and 'feudal' are closely related. . . . The estate in fee simple is the largest estate known to the law, ownership of such an estate being the nearest approach to ownership of the land itself which is consonant with the feudal principle of tenure. It is 'the most comprehensive estate in land which the law recognises,' it is the 'most extensive in quantum, and the most absolute in respect to the rights which it confers, of all estates known to the law.' Traditionally, the fee simple has two distinguishing features: first, the owner ('tenant' in fee simple) has the power to dispose of the fee simple, either inter vivos or by will; second, on intestacy the fee simple descends, in the absence of lineal heirs, to collateral heirs — to a brother, for example, if there is no issue. 'Peter Butt, Land Law 35 (2d ed. 1988).

"Fee simple. Originally this was an estate which endured for as long as the original tenant or any of his heirs survived. 'Heirs' comprised any blood relations, although originally ancestors were excluded; not until the Inheritance Act 1833 could a person be the heir of one of his descendants. Thus at first a fee simple would terminate if the original tenant died without leaving any descendants or collateral blood relations (e.g., brothers or cousins), even if before his death the land had been conveyed to another tenant who was still alive. But by 1306 it was settled that where a tenant in fee simple alienated the land, the fee simple would continue as long as there were heirs of the new tenant and so on, irrespective of any failure of the original tenant's heirs. Then the fee simple was virtually eternal.' Robert E. Megarry & M.P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 24-25 (6th ed. 1993).

fee simple absolute. (18c) An estate of indefinite or potentially infinite duration (e.g., "to Albert and his heirs"). — Often shortened to fee simple or fee. — fee simple title

Also termed fee simple absolute in possession. [Cases: Estates in Property C-5.]

"Although it is probably good practice to use the word 'absolute' whenever one is referring to an estate in fee simple that is free of special limitation, condition subsequent, or executory limitation, lawyers frequently refer to such an estate as a 'fee simple' or even as a fee."

fee simple conditional. (17c) An estate restricted to some specified heirs, exclusive of others (e.g., "to Albert and his female heirs"). • The fee simple conditional is obsolete except in Iowa, Oregon, and South Carolina. — Also termed general fee conditional; conditional fee. [Cases: Estates in Property C-7.]

"The reader should be careful not to confuse this estate with estates having similar labels, such as the 'estate in fee simple subject to a condition subsequent'..." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 29 n.19 (2d ed. 1984).

fee simple defeasible (di-fee-zah-bal). (18c) An estate that ends either because there are no more heirs of the person to whom it is granted or because a special limitation, condition subsequent, or executory limitation takes effect before the line of heirs runs out. — Also termed defeasible fee simple; qualified fee. [Cases: Estates in Property C-6.]

fee simple determinable. (18c) An estate that will automatically end and revert to the grantor if some specified event occurs (e.g., "to Albert and his heirs while the property is used for charitable purposes"); an estate in fee simple subject to a special limitation.

• The future interest retained by the grantor is called a possibility of reverter. — Also termed determinable fee; qualified fee; fee simple subject to common-law limitation; fee simple subject to special limitation; fee simple subject to special interest; base fee; estate on limitation. [Cases: Estates in Property C-6.]

"In theory, it should be easy to determine whether an instrument creates a fee simple determinable or a fee simple subject to a condition subsequent. If the instrument includes a special limitation (introduced by words such as 'so long as' or 'until'), it creates a fee simple determinable, whether or not it also includes an express reverter clause. If the instrument includes an express condition or proviso (on condition that or 'provided that') and an express right to re-enter for breach of the stated condition, it creates a fee simple subject to a condition subsequent. But deeds and wills often fail to employ the appropriate words to create one of the two types of defeasible estate or the others. Instead deeds and wills often contain a confusing mixture of words appropriate for creation of both types of defeasible estate." William B. Stoebuck & Dale A. Whitman, The Law of Property 43 (3d ed. 2000).

fee simple subject to a condition subsequent. (1874) An estate subject to the grantor’s power to end the estate if some specified event happens (e.g., "to Albert and his heirs, upon condition that no alcohol is sold on the premises"). • The future interest retained by the grantor is called a power of termination (or a right of entry). — Also termed fee simple on a condition subsequent; fee simple subject to a power of termination; fee simple upon condition. [Cases: Estates in Property C-7.] fee simple subject to an executory limitation. (1856) A fee simple defeasible that is subject to divestment in favor of someone other than the grantor if a specified event happens (e.g., "to Albert and his heirs, but if the property is ever used as a parking lot, then to Bob"). — Also termed fee simple subject to an executory interest. [Cases: Estates in Property C-9.]

fee-splitting. 1. The division of attorney’s fees between two or more lawyers, esp. between the lawyer who handled a matter and the lawyer who referred the matter. • Some states consider this practice unethical. 2. The division of attorney’s fees between two or more lawyers who represent a client jointly but are not in the same firm. • Under most states’ ethics rules, an attorney is prohibited from splitting a fee with a nonlawyer. — Also termed fee-sharing, division of fees. [Cases: Attorney and Client C-151.]

fee statement. A lawyer’s bill for services either already rendered or to be rendered, usu. including itemized expenses.

fee tail. (15c) An estate that is heritable only by specified descendants of the original grantee, and that endures until its current holder dies without issue (e.g., "to Albert and the heirs of his body"). • Most jurisdictions — except Delaware, Maine, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island — have abolished the fee tail. — Also termed entailable estate; estate tail; estate in tail; estate in fee tail; tenancy in tail; entail; feudum talliatum. See ENTAIL; TAIL. [Cases: Estates in Property C-12.]

"The old legal estate tail was throughout its history invariably associated with family settlements, and in particular with marriage settlements.... Medieval landowners sought to achieve [familial continuity and status] by perfecting a single estate which in itself would conform to three requirements: (1) While it should be an estate of inheritance it should devolve on lineal heirs only, and not on collateral — in other words that it should descend only to the heirs of the body of the first grantee. (2) As a corollary, the estate should be such that at any time the first grantee's issue should fail the estate itself should come to an end and the land revert to the original settlor or his heirs. (3) No owner of the estate for the time being should have power to dispose of the land in such a way as to prevent it descending on his death to the next heir of the body of the original grantee. All this was attempted by limiting land, not to 'A and his heirs,' which would give A a fee simple, but to 'A and the heirs of his body.'" L. Crispin Warmington, Stephen's Commentaries on the Laws of England 130 (L. Crispin Warmington ed., 21st ed. 1950).
fee

fee advertised in a tailored estate. We can at least argue that it is not a pun. Our word 'tailor' and the word 'tall,' as used in 'fee tail,' come from the same source — the French tailleur, to cut. The word 'tail' in 'fee tail' has nothing to do with that which wags the dog. The estate in fee tail was a cut estate — either cut in the sense that the collateral heirs were cut out, or cut in the sense that the estate was carved into a series of discrete life-possession periods to be enjoyed successively by A and his lineal heirs. . . . We know of no state in the United States that recognizes the estate in fee tail in its strict 1285-1472 form. Wherever it is recognized, the tenant in tail in possession may disentail it by simple deed." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 30, 32 (2d ed. 1984). fee tail general. A fee tail that is heritable by all of the property owner's issue by any spouse. • Formerly, a grant "to A and the heirs of his body" created a fee tail general. [Cases: Estates in Property ⊂–12.]

fee tail special. A fee tail that restricts the eligibility of claimants by requiring a claimant to prove direct descent from the grantee and meet the special condition in the grant. • For example, the words "to A and the heirs of his body begotten on his wife Mary" meant that only descendants of A and Mary could inherit; A's children by any other wife were excluded. An estate tail special could also be restricted to only male or only female descendants, as in "to A and the heirs male of his body." [Cases: Estates in Property ⊂–12.]

feign (fayn), vb. (13c) To make up or fabricate; to make a false show of <he feigned an illness>. feigned, adj. Pretended; simulated; fictitious.

feigned accomplice. See informant.

feigned action. Hist. An action brought for an illegal purpose on a pretended right. • Also termed faint action; false action.

feigned issue. Hist. A proceeding in which the parties, by consent, have an issue tried by a jury without actually bringing a formal action. • The proceeding was done when a court either lacked jurisdiction or was unwilling to decide the issue. • Also termed fictitious issue.

"The chancellor's decree is either interlocutory or final. It very seldom happens that the first decree can be final, or conclude the cause; for, if any matter of fact is strongly controverted, this court is so sensible of the deficiency of trial by written depositions, that it will not bind the parties thereby, but usually directs the matter to be tried by jury . . . . But, as no jury can be summoned to attend this court, the fact is usually directed to be tried at the bar of the court of king's bench or at the assises, upon a feigned issue. For, (in order to bring it there, and have the point in dispute, and that only, put in issue) an action is feigned to be brought, wherein the pretended plaintiff declares that he laid a wager of $1 with the defendant that A was heir at law to B; and then avers that he is so; and therefore demands the $1. The defendant allows the wager, but avers that A is not the heir to B; and thereupon the issue is joined . . . . These feigned issues seem borrowed from the sponsio judicialis of the Romans: and are also frequently used in the courts of law, by consent of the parties, to determine some disputed rights without the formality of pleading . . . . " William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 452 (1768).

fellow, n. 1. One joined with another in some legal status or relation. 2. A member of a college, board, corporate body, or other organization.

fellow-officer rule. (1971) Criminal procedure. The principle that an investigative stop or an arrest is valid even if the law-enforcement officer lacks personal knowledge to establish reasonable suspicion or probable cause as long as the officer is acting on the knowledge of another officer and the collective knowledge of the law-enforcement office. • Also termed Whiteley rule; collective-knowledge rule. [Cases: Arrest ⊂–63.4(11).]

fellow servant. A coworker having the same employer; esp., an employee who is so closely related to another employee's work that there is a special risk of harm if either one is negligent. See fellow-servant rule; different-department rule.

superior fellow servant. A worker that has the power of control or direction over a coworker. • Also termed superior servant.

fellow-servant rule. (1905) A common-law doctrine holding that an employer is not liable for an employee's injuries caused by a negligent coworker. • This doctrine has generally been abrogated by workers' compensation statutes. In some jurisdictions, employees were considered fellow servants when they were working with one aim or result in view. In others, the relation of fellow servant was tested by the "doctrine of vice principal" or the "superior-servant rule," meaning that an employer is liable for injuries to an employee if they result from the negligence of another employee who is given power of control or direction over the injured employee. • Also termed common-employment doctrine. Cf. different-department rule. [Cases: Labor and Employment ⊂–292.11.]

feo-de-se (fee-loh or fel-oh de see), n. (17c) See suicide (2). Pl. felones de se.

"Felo de se," or felon of himself is freely spoken of by the early writers as self-murder. Hence one who killed himself before he arrived at the age of discretion or while he was non compos mentis, was not a feo de se, or suicide . . . . By the early common law suicide was a felony and was punished by ignominious burial and forfeiture of goods and chattels to the king." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 120 (3d ed. 1982).

felon, n. (13c) A person who has been convicted of a felony. • Also termed (redundantly) convicted felon.

felon-de-se. See suicide (2). felonia (fa-loh-ne-a), [Latin “felony”] Hist. An offense that results in a vassal’s forfeiting his fee.

“The attempt to derive felonia from fel’ poison’ is merely a folk etymology which came into vogue when ‘felony’ meant a serious crime, and differed from treason. The word was well established in Feudal Law as the characteristic offense against the Feudal relationship. It will hardly do, therefore, to try to determine its meaning merely by reference to English usage. . . .” Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 148 n.7 (1936).

felonious (fa-loh-nee-as), adj. (16c) 1. Of, relating to, or involving a felony. 2. Constituting or having the character of a felony. 3. Proceeding from an evil heart or purpose; malicious; villainous. 4. Wrongful; (of an act) done without excuse or color of right.

felonious assault. See assault.

felonious homicide. See homicide.

felonious intent. See criminal intent under intent (1).

felonious restraint. (1971) 1. The offense of knowingly and unlawfully restraining a person under circumstances that expose the person to serious bodily harm. Model Penal Code § 212.2(a). 2. The offense of holding a person in involuntary servitude. Model Penal Code § 212.2(b). [Cases: False Imprisonment 1254, 1276.] A serious crime usu. punishable by imprisonment for more than one year or by death. • Examples include burglary, arson, rape, and murder. — Also termed major crime; serious crime. Cf. misde­meanor. [Cases: Criminal Law § 22.] "Felony, in the general acceptance of our English law, com­prises every species of crime, which occasioned at common law the forfeiture of lands or goods." 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 94 (1769).

“Amongst indictable crimes, the common law singled out some as being so consciously heinous that a man adjudged guilty of any of them incurred — not as any express part of his sentence but as a consequence that necessarily ensued upon it — a forfeiture of property, whether of his lands or of his goods or of both (in the case of treason). Such crimes came to be called ‘feligies.’ The other, and lesser, crimes were known as ‘transgressions’ or ‘trespasses,’ and did not obtain their present name of mis­demeanours until a much later date. A felony is, therefore, a crime which either involved by common law such a forfeiture, or else has been placed by statute on the footing of treason felony. . . .” J.W. Cecil Turner, Outlines of Criminal Law 93 (16th ed. 1952).

At common law, an offense for which conviction results in forfeiture of the defendant’s lands or goods (or both) to the Crown, regardless of whether any capital or other punishment is mandated. • At early common law, the term felony included any offense for which a defendant who fled before trial could be summarily convicted, attainted, and outlawed, or that carried a right of appeal after conviction. Although treason carried the same penalties as a common-law felony, it was usu. defined as a separate class of crime.

felony injury to a child. The act of causing or allowing a child to suffer in circumstances likely to produce great bodily harm or death, or inflicting unjustifiable pain or mental suffering in those circumstances. [Cases: Infants 1251.] A grave act that resulted in the forfeiture of land grant­ed by a superior.

felony-murder rule. (1943) The doctrine holding that any death resulting from the commission or attempted commission of a felony is murder. • Most states restrict this rule to inherently dangerous felonies such as rape, arson, robbery, and burglary. Cf. mis­demeanor-man­slaughter rule. [Cases: Homicide § 575.] "It seems fair to suggest that the future of felony murder is uncertain. England, where the doctrine originated, has abolished it. The Model Penal Code recommends its abolition except for the purpose of creating a rebuttable presumption of malice for killings perpetrated during the course of a felony. Although most states have not yet adopted this position, many of the judicial limitations on felony murder discussed above seem to insure that in many states it will be an unusual case in which one is convicted of felony murder, who absent this doctrine, would not have been convicted of murder." Arnold H. Loewy, Criminal Law n a Nutshell 46 (2d ed. 1987).

female genital mutilation. (1979) 1. Female circumcision. The act of cutting, or cutting off, one or more female sexual organs. • Female genital mutilation is practiced primarily among certain tribes in Africa, but it also occurs among some immigrant populations in the United States and in other Western nations. There are three commonly identified types: sunna, in which the hood of the clitoris is cut off; excision, in which the entire clitoris is cut off; and infibulation, in which the clitoris, the labia minora, and much of the labia majora are cut off. In the United States, Congress has outlawed female genital mutilation, specifically prohibiting the use of a cultural defense for persons accused of performing the act. 18 USCA § 16. — Abbr. FGM. fence, n. (14c) 1. A person who receives stolen goods, usu. with the intent to sell them in a legitimate market. [Cases: Receiving Stolen Goods C=:::4.

"The receivers of stolen goods almost never 'know' that they have been stolen, in the sense that they could testify to it in a courtroom. The business could not be so conducted, for those who sell the goods — the 'fences' — must keep up a more respectable front than is generally possible for the thieves." United States v. Werner, 160 F.2d 438, 441-42 (2d Cir. 1947).

"The typical 'fence' takes over the stolen property and pays the thief a price. He purports to 'buy' the goods from the thief." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 395 (3d ed. 1982).

2. A place where stolen goods are sold. See receiving stolen goods.

feoffment to uses. An enfeoffment of land to one person for the use of a third party. • The feoffor was bound in conscience to hold the land according to the prescribed use and could derive no benefit from the holding.

"Conveyances of freehold land could originally be made only by a feoffment with livery of seisin. This was a solemn ceremony carried out by the parties entering on the land, and the feoffor, in the presence of witnesses, delivering the seisin to the feoffee either by some symbolic act, such as handing him a twig or sod of earth, or by uttering some words such as 'Enter into this land and God give you joy' and leaving him in possession of the land." Robert E. Megarry & H.W.R. Wade, The Law of Real Property 47 (5th ed. 1984).

The right, usu. exclusive, given by government franchise, to carry persons or property across water for a fee. — Also termed ferry franchise. [Cases: Ferries C=9.]

ferry, vb. To carry persons or property, usu. across water, for a fee.

ferry franchise. See FERRY (4).

fertile-octogenarian rule. (1856) The legal fiction, a woman can become pregnant as long as she is alive. • The case that gave rise to this fiction was Leach v. Audley, 1 Cox 324, 29 Eng. Rep. 1186 (ch. 1787). See W. Barton Leach, Perpetuities. New Hampshire Defertilizes Octogenarians, 77 Harv. L. Rev. 729 (1963). — Also termed presumption-of-fertility rule.

"Suppose testator bequeaths in trust to pay the income to A for her life, then to pay the income to the children of A for their lives, and upon the death of the survivor of such children, to pay the principal to the grandchildren of A. At the time of the testator's death A is 79 years old, and she has two children. Believe it or not, it has been held that the remainder to the grandchildren of A is violative of the rule against perpetuities and invalid. The law adopted the conclusive presumption that every person is capable of having children until the day he or she dies, as far as the rule against perpetuities is concerned. Consequently, A could have an additional child who would not be a life in being at the testator's death, and that child could have a child who would be born beyond the permissible period. The result of this hypothesis is to invalidate the remainder festing-penny. Hist. Earnest, or payment, given to a servant when hired.

festinum remedium (fe-sti-num re-me-di-um). [Latin] Hist. A speedy remedy. • It was used in cases, such as actions for dower or assize, where the redress of injury was given without unnecessary delay.

festuca (fe-stu-ka). Hist. A rod, staff, or stick used as a pledge (or gage) of good faith by a party to a contract or as a token of conveyance of land. • In Roman law, a festuca was a symbol of ownership. — Also termed fistuca; vindicta. See livery of seisin.

“...The wed or gage, however, was capable of becoming a symbol; an object which intrinsically was of trifling value might be given and might serve to bind a contract. Among the Franks, whom we must regard as being for many purposes our ancestors in law, it took the shape of the festuca. Whether this transition from the 'real' to the 'formal' can be accomplished without the intervention of sacral ceremonies seems doubtful. There are some who regard the festuca as a stout staff which has taken the place of a spear and is a symbol of physical power. Others see in it a little bit of stick on which impregnatory runes have been cut. It is hard to decide such questions, for, especially under the influence of a new religion, symbols lose their old meanings and are mixed up. Popular etymology confounds confusion.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 186 (2d ed. 1899).

fetal (fe-tal). Adjective; pertaining to a fetus or to pregnancy.

fetal alcohol syndrome. A variety of birth defects caused by the mother's alcohol consumption during pregnancy. • The birth defects include facial abnormalities, mental retardation, and growth deficiencies. — Abbr. FAS. [Cases: Infants ⊂ – 156, 179] fetale (fe-shay-leez), n. pl. Roman law. The order of priests whose duties concerned international relations and treaties, including the declaration of war and peace. — Also spelled fectale.

“Feclales [were] ... priests among the Romans, Etruscans, and other ancient nations of Italy, who acted as heralds of peace and war. Their persons were sacred from injury when engaged on any mission to a hostile state, as the persons of ambassadors, and messengers, under a flag of truce, are inviolate in the present time. Their duties in some few particulars resembled those of the heralds of the Middle Ages. The Roman fectales ... formed a kind of college of heralds, instituted by Numa Pompilius, the second king of Rome, about 710 B.C.” Beeton's Illustrated Dictionary of Religion, Philosophy, Politics, and Law 240 (ca. 1880).

fetal law (fe-shal). (16c) Roman law. A branch of law concerned with matters (such as treaties, embassies, and war declarations) affecting relations between peoples or nations. — Also spelled fectial law. — Also termed jus fetialae.

feticide (fe-ti-sid). (1842) 1. The act or an instance of killing a fetus, usu. by assaulting and battering the mother; esp., the act of unlawfully causing the death of a fetus. 2. An intentionally induced miscarriage. — Also spelled foeticide. — Also termed child destruction. Cf. infanticide (1). — feticidal, adj.

fetter, n. (usu. pl.) (bef. 12c) A chain or shackle for the feet. — fetter, vb.

fettering of property. The act of making the disposition or ownership of property more complex so that those with separate interests must cooperate if they are to handle their interests reasonably. • Fettering of property occurs whenever ownership is split into two or more interests, as when present and future interests are divided or when a tenancy in common is created. [Cases: Perpetuities ⊂ – 1] fetus. (14c) A developing but unborn mammal, esp. in the latter stages of development. — Also spelled foetus. Cf. Embryo; Zygote. [Cases: Abortion and Birth Control ⊂ – 106] feu (fyoo), n. [fr. Law Latin feudum "a fee"] (15c) 1. A right to land given to a person in exchange for service to be performed. 2. Scots law: Land held by a vassal in return for an annual payment in money, crops, or services(called feu duty). • This type of tenure was abolished in Scotland in 2000. 3. Scots law. A perpetual grant of land to be held in exchange for grain or money. 4. A perpetual lease for a fixed rent. 5. A piece of land held under a perpetual lease for a fixed rent. — Also spelled faw. See fee (2). — feu, vb. — feu, adj.

“Feu: In Latin feudum, was used to denote the feudal-holding, where the service was purely military; but the term has been used in Scotland in contradistinction to ward-holding, the military tenure of this country ... for, even in the purest ages of the military system, innumerable instances are to be found of grants of land in the feudal form, where the vassal annually delivered victual, or performed agricultural services to his superior.” William Bell, Bell's Dictionary and Digest of the Law of Scotland 456 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

feu, vb. Scots law. To grant (land) by feu.

feu annual. Scots law. The yearly return generated by a feu.

feuar (fyoo-ar), n. (16c) Scots law. One who holds a feu. Cf. FEU; VASSAL.

feu charter. Scots law. The charter creating a feu tenure.

feud, n. (15c) Hist. 1. A heritable estate in land conveyed from a feudal superior to a grantee or tenant, held on the condition of rendering services to the superior.

"'It is believed that the terms feud and fief appear in England but late in the day under the influence of foreign books; they never became terms of our law. It is noticeable also that feudum was constantly used in the sense that our fee has when we speak of a lawyer's or doctor's fee; payments due for services rendered, at least if they are permanent periodic payments, are feuda; the judges, for example, receive feoda not salaries. The etymological problem presented by the English fee seems no easy one, because at the Conquest the would-be Latin feodium or feudum (the d in which has puzzled philologists and does not always appear in Domesday Book) is introduced among a people which already has: feoh as a word for property in general and cattle in particular. Feudal Action. 1. A nonmilitary feud; a feud that is base or servile in nature. These were the principal, and very simple, qualities of the genuine or original feuds; being then all of a military nature, and in the hands of military persons: though the feudatories, being under frequent incapacities of cultivating and manumuring their own lands, soon found it necessary to commit part of them to inferior tenants. But this at the same time demolished the ancient simplicity of feuds; and an inroad being once made upon their constitution, it subjected them, in a course of time, to great varieties and innovations. Feuds came to be bought and sold, and deviations were made from the old fundamental rules of tenure and succession, which were held no longer sacred, when the feuds themselves no longer continued to be purely military. Hence these tenures began now to be divided into feoda propria et impropria, proper and improper feuds. Feudal Tenure. Also spelled (archaically) feodal. Cf. feudal. 2. The social, political, and economic system of medieval Europe. Also termed feudal system, feodal system. — feudalistic. adj. Feudal Law. Hist. A real action; an action that concerned only real property. Feudalism (fyoo-dal-iz-əm). (19c) 1. A landholding system, particularly applying to medieval Europe, in which all are bound by their status in a hierarchy of reciprocal obligations of service and defense. a. The lord was obligated to give the vassal (1) some land, (2) protection, and (3) justice. The lord guaranteed the quiet occupation of the land by the vassal and guaranteed to do right if the vassal became involved in a dispute. In return, the vassal owed the lord some type of service, called "tenure" (literally "means of holding"), because the different types of service were the methods by which the vassals held the property. b. The social, political, and economic system of medieval Europe. — Also termed feudal system, feodal system. — feudal. adj. 1. Of, relating to, or growing out of feudalism <feudal law>. 2. Of or relating to a feud <feudal tenure>. — Also spelled (archaically) feodal. Cf. feudal. 2. The interest of the tenant in the land conveyed. — Also termed (in senses 1, 2) the land itself conveyed. — The interest of the tenant in the land conveyed. — Also termed (in senses 1, 2) the land itself conveyed. — Also termed (in senses 1, 2) the land itself conveyed. See feudum individuum under FEUD. 3. A nonmilitary feud; a feud that is base or servile in nature. 4. An enmity or private war existing between families or clans, esp. as a result of a murder. Where wrong done to an individual is not regarded as an injury to the entire tribe, the wrongdoer is out of the peace only as regards the wronged party and his kin. The situation created by such wrongful deed is feudal. (Anglo-Saxon feoθθ, Latin faedo). The root meaning of the word is "hatred." Feud is legally sanctioned hostility. The recognition of feud by the law is found in the fact that revenge taken in lawful feud is not a breach of the peace. It is not a wrongful deed. It furnishes no basis for any claim for fine or punishment. The man slain in lawful feud is not to be avenged nor has compensation to be paid for his slaying. Munroe Smith, The Development of European Law 29 (1928). Feudary. See Feudatory. feudatory, adj. (16c) Hist. (Of a vassal) owing feudal allegiance to a lord.

feudatory, n. (17c) Hist. The grantee of a feud; the vassal or tenant who held an estate by feudal service. — Also termed feudury; feudatory.

“Every receiver of lands, or feudatory, was therefore bound, when called upon by his benefactor, or immediate lord of his feud or fee, to do all in his power to defend him.” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 46 (1766).

feude. See FEUD.

feudee (fyoo-dee), n. Hist. The grantee of a feud; a feudal tenant.

feudist. (17c) A writer on feuds (for example, Cujacius, feudatory, 699). See FEUD (1)-(3); FIEF; FEE (2).

Feudorum Libri (fyoo-dor-am li-brit). [Latin “the books of the feuds”] Hist. The Books of Feuds, a five-book compilation of Lombardic feudal law published in Milan around 1152, during the reign of Henry III. • This unofficial compilation was the main source of tenure law among the nations in Europe. It was widely used in medieval law schools and courts in Italy, France, and Germany. The Feudorum Libri were probably known in England but had little effect other than influencing English lawyers to study their own tenure system more critically. — Also termed Consuetudines Feudorum; Usus Feudorum.

feudum (fyoo-dam). [Law Latin] A fief or feud; a feudum. — Also termed feudum; feum. Pl. feuda (fyoo-da). See FEUD (1)-(3); FEE; FEE (2).

“The Latin equivalent of feudum or feudum is the root of the words ‘feudal’ and ‘subinfeudation’. The French form féief is favoured by some English historians, but it was not used in law-French.” J.H. Baker, An Introduction to English Legal History 256 n.4 (3d ed. 1990).

feudum antiquum (fyoo-dam an-ti-kwam), n. [Law Latin “ancient feud”] Hist. 1. A feud that passed to a vassal from an intestate ancestor. 2. A feud that ancestors had possessed for more than four generations. 3. An ancient feud. Pl. feuda antiqua (fyoo-da an-ti-kwa). — Also termed feudum antiquum (fee-a-dam or fyoo-dam). See FEUD (1).

feudum apertum (fyoo-dam a-par-tam). Hist. A feud that reverted to the lord because of a tenant’s failure of issue, a crime by the tenant, or some other legal cause. — Also termed feudum apertum.

feudum burgale (fyoo-dam bar-gay-lee). [Law Latin] Hist. Land held feudally by burgage tenure — that is, tenure given in exchange for a tenant’s watching and warding in a burg. See WATCH and WARD.

feudum francum (fyoo-dam fran-gk-am). Hist. A free feud; a feud or fee that was noble and free from tallage and subsidies that vulgar feuds (plebeia feuda) were subject to.

feudum hauberticum (fyoo-dam haw-bar-ta-kam). Hist. A feud that was held on the military service of appearing fully armed when summoned by the lord. See ARRIÈRE-BAN.

feudum improprium (fyoo-dam im-proh-pree-am). Hist. A feud that was improper.

feudum individuum (fyoo-dam in-da-vij-oo-am). Hist. A feud that was indivisible and descendible only to the eldest son.

feudum laicum (fyoo-dam lay-a-kam). Hist. A lay feud. — Also termed feudum laicum.

feudum ligium (fyoo-dam lij-ee-am). Hist. 1. A liege feud; a feud held immediately of the sovereign. 2. A feud for which the vassal owed fealty to his lord against all other persons.

feudum maternum (fyoo-dam ma-par-nam). Hist. A feud that descended to the feudatory from the maternal side.

feudum militare (fyoo-dam mil-a-tair-ee). Hist. A knight’s feud. • It was held by knight-service and esteemed the most honorable species of tenure. — Also termed feudum militis; (in Norman law) fief d’haubert or fief d’hauberk.

feudum nobile (fyoo-dam noh-bo-lee). Hist. A feud for which the tenant did guard and owed fealty and homage. — Also termed feudum nobile.

feudum novum (fyoo-dam noh-vam). [Law Latin] Hist. A new feu; a fee that began with the person of the feudatory, and that was not acquired by succession. — Also spelled feudum novum.

“For if the feud, of which the son died seised, was really feudum antiquum, or one descended to him from his ancestors, the father could not possibly succeed to it, because it must have passed him in the course of descent, before it could come to the son. . . . And if it were feudum novum, or one newly acquired by the son, then only the descendants from the body of the feudatory himself could succeed, by the known maxim of the early Feodal constitutions . . . which was founded as well upon the personal merit of the vassal, which might be transmitted to his children but could not ascend to his progenitors . . . .” 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 211-12 (1766).

feudum novum ut antiquum (fyoo-dam noh-vam at an-ti-kwam). Hist. A new feud held with the qualities of an ancient feud.

feudum paternum (fyoo-dam pa-par-nam). Hist. 1. A feud that the tenant’s paternal ancestors had held for four generations. 2. A feud descendible only to the heirs on the paternal side. 3. A feud that could be held only by males.

feudum proprium (fyoo-dam proh-pree-am). Hist. An original feud that is military in nature and held by military service.

feudum talliatum (fyoo-dam tal-ee-ay-tam). See FEE TAIL.

feu duty. Scots law. The annual rent paid by the tenant of a feu. — Also termed ground annual.

fiant, n. (16c) Hist. 1. A decree; commission. 2. A warrant to the Chancery of Ireland for a grant under the great seal.

far, n. Scots law. One who holds an estate in fee, in contrast to a liferenter.

fiat (fee-aht or fee-at or fi-at or fi-at), n. [Latin "let it be done"] (17c) 1. An order or decree, esp. an arbitrary one <judicial fiat>. 2. A court decree, esp. one relating to a routine matter such as scheduling <the court requires all motions to contain a fiat — to be filled in by the court — setting the hearing date> — Also termed faunt.

fiat justitia (ft at jas-tish-ee-oh). [Latin] Hist. Let justice be done. • This phrase signaled the Crown's commission to the House of Lords to hear an appeal.

"Fiat justitia, rust coelum, says another maxim, as full of extravagance as it is of harmony: Go heaven to wreck — so justice be but done: — and what is the ruin of kingdoms.

fiat money. See MONEY.

fiat ut petitur (fi-at at pet-a-tar). [Latin] Let it be done as it is asked. • An order granting a petition.

faunt. See FIAT.

FICA (fi-ka). abbr. FEDERAL INSURANCE CONTRIBUTIONS ACT.

fickle-fiduciary rule. The principle that a partner or employee who breaches a fiduciary duty should forfeit all compensation, bonuses, and other benefits received for as long as the breach continues. • The rule usually applies to a person who engages in or assists a competing business, or resigns from employment to set up or work for a competing business. Traditionally, mitigating factors, including the absence of harm to the employer or partnership, are not considered in applying the rule. But some courts have found that if a strict application would produce unjustly harsh results, mitigating factors must be weighed.

ficta traditio (fik-ta tro-dish-ee-oh). [Latin] Scots law. A fictitious delivery. • The phrase invoked the rule that if the parties so intended, an item could be treated as having been delivered to a buyer in possession of it without the need for physical transfer. — Also termed fictio brevis manus.

fictio (fik-shee-oh), n. [Latin fr. fingere "to feign"] Roman law. A legal fiction; a legal assumption or supposition (such as that the plaintiff or defendant was a citizen) necessary to achieve certain legal results that otherwise would not be obtained. • Legal fictions allowed Roman magistrates (praetors) to expand the law beyond what was strictly allowed by the jus civile. This practice also occurred in English law — for example, the action of common recovery, which allowed a landowner to convey land that by law could not be alienated (such as land held in fee tail). P. fictiones (fik-shee-oh-nay-zee).

fictio brevis manus (fik-shee-oh bree-vis may-nas). [Law Latin] FICTA TRADITIO.

fictitious party. See PARTY (2).

fictitious-payee rule. Commercial law. The principle that if a drawer or maker issues commercial paper to a payee whom the drawer or maker does not actually intend to have any interest in the instrument, an ensuing forgery of the payee's name will be effective to pass good title to later transferees. — Also termed padded-payroll rule. [Cases: Banks and Banking §§ 148, 174; Bills and Notes §§ 279.]

ficitious person. See artificial person under person (3).

ficitious promise. See implied promise under promise.

ficitious seisin. See seisin in law under seisin.

fide-committee. A beneficiary; cestui que trust. — Also termed fidei-commissarius.

"In a particular case, a cestui que trust is called by the Roman law, fideicommissarius. In imitation of this, I have seen him somewhere or other called in English a fide-committee. This term, however, seems not very expressive. A fide-committee, or, as it should have been, a fidei-committee, seems, literally speaking, to mean one who is committed to the good faith of another." Jeremy Bentham, An Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation 226 n.1 (1823).

fideicomise (fee-day-koh-mee-soh). Mexican law. A trust; esp., a trust that is established for the purpose of acquiring property in Mexico with a Mexican bank as trustee and a non-Mexican (who may be the settlor) as beneficiary. The property is held in the name of the trust, but the beneficiary has all the rights and obligations of direct ownership, including the power to lease, sell, or devise the property. A Mexican fideicomiso usu lasts 50 years and can be renewed for 50 more. Cf. FIDEICOMISSUM.

fidei-commissarius. See cestui que trust.

fidei-commissary (f-dee-i kom-i-ser-e). See CESTUI QUE TRUST.

fideicommissary heir. See heir.

fideicommissary substitution. 1. substitution (6). 2. substitution (7).

fideicommissum (fi-dee-i ka-mis-um). [Latin] (18c) 1. Roman law. A direction to an heir asking the heir to carry out. The beginning of fideicommissa, therefore, was very like the early practice with regard to trusts in English law, and, as in the case of trusts, a time came when trusts were made binding legally as well as morally. ... For brevity, the fideicommissum will here be called 'the trust', the person upon whom it was imposed (fideicus) 'the trustee', and the person in whose favour it was imposed (fideicommissarius) 'the beneficiary'. R.W. Leage, Roman Private Law 252 (C.H. Ziegler ed., 2d ed. 1930).

fidejubere (fi-dee-yah-beer-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To become a surety.

fidejussio (fi-dee-jus-so). [fr. Latin fidejussio] (16c) Roman law. An act by which a person becomes an additional security for another. The act does not remove the principal's liability but only adds to the surety's security. Fidejussio was one of the three types of adpromission, and the only type remaining in Justinian's law. — Also spelled fidejussio; fideissio. See ADPROMISSIO (1). — fidejussionary, adj.

fidejussor (fi-dee-jus-sor or -jas-ar). (16c) 1. Roman law (ital.) A guarantor; a person who binds himself to pay another's debt. 2. Hist. Maritime law. A person who acts as bail for a defendant in the Court of Admiralty. — Also spelled fideissor. Cf. ADPROMISSOR. — fidejusory, adj.

"The proceedings of the court of admiralty bear much resemblance to those of the civil law, but are not entirely founded thereon, and they likewise adopt and make use of other laws, as occasion requires; such as the Rhodian law, and the laws of Oleron. For the law of England, as has frequently been observed, doth not acknowledge or pay any deference to the civil law considered as such; but merely permits its use in such cases where it judged its determinations equitable, and therefore blends it, in the present instance, with other marine laws .... The first process in these courts is frequently by arrest of the defendant's person, and they also take recognizances or stipulation of certain fidejussors in the nature of bail, and in case of default may imprison both them and their principal." 3 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 108-09 (1768).

fidelitas (fi-del-a-tas). [Latin "fidelity"] See fealty.

fidelity and guaranty insurance. See fidelity insurance under insurance.

fidelity bond. See bond (2).

fidelity guaranty insurance. See fidelity insurance under insurance.

fidelity insurance. See insurance.

fidem mentiri (fi-da-men-tiґ-ri), [Latin] Hist. To betray faith or fealty. • The term refers to a feudal tenant who did not keep the fealty sworn to the lord.

fidepromission (fi-dee-proh-mishґ-an), n. [Latin “faith-promise”] (19c) Roman law. A contract of guaranty by stipulation. • Fidepromission was one of the three types of adpromission. See adpromission (1); stipulation (3). — fidepromissor, n.

fides facta (fi-deeґ fakґ-ta), [Latin] Hist. Faith-making; faith-pledging. • Among the Franks and Lombards, certain transactions were guaranteed by symbolic, formal acts — making one’s faith — such as the giving of a rod when property was transferred. See FESTUCA.

fiducia (fi-dukґ-sheґ-a), n. [Latin “an entrusting”] Roman law. An early form of transfer of title by way of mortgage, deposit, etc., with a provision for reconveyance upon payment of the debt, termination of the deposit, etc.

‘The Roman mortgage (fiducia) fell wholly out of use before the time of Justinian, having been displaced by the superior simplicity and convenience of the hypotheca; and in this respect modern Continental law has followed the Roman.” John Salmond, Jurisprudence 443 (Glanville L. Williams ed., 10th ed. 1947).

fiducial, adj. (16c) Of, relating to, or characterized by confidence in and reliance on another person or thing <there must be a fiducial bond between a patient and a doctor>. [Cases: Fraud C==7; Health C==578.]

fiducial relationship. See trust relationship under RELATIONSHIP.

fiduciarius heres (fi-dukґ-iґ-areґs heerґ-eґs), [Latin “fiduciary heir”] Roman law. A person formally named an heir in a testament, but in a fiduciary capacity, and charged to deliver the succession to the person designated by the testament.

fiduciarius tutor (fi-dukґ-iґ-areґs tґoґ-tar), Roman law. A fiduciary guardian; a person who by fulfilling a trust to free someone in power became his or her guardian.

fiduciary (fi-dukґ-iґ-erґ-eґ), n. (17c) 1. A person who is required to act for the benefit of another on all matters within the scope of their relationship; one who owes to another the duties of good faith, trust, confidence, and candor <the corporate officer is a fiduciary to the corporation>. 2. One who must exercise a high standard of care in managing another’s money or property <the beneficiary sued the fiduciary for investing in speculative securities>. — fiduciary, adj. [Cases: Fraud C==7].

‘Fiduciary’ is a vague term, and it has been pressed into service for a number of ends. . . . My view is that the term ‘fiduciary’ is so vague that plaintiffs have been able to claim that fiduciary obligations have been breached when in fact the particular defendant was not a fiduciary stricto sensu but simply had withheld property from the plaintiff in an unconscionable manner.” D.W.M. Waters, The Constructive Trust 4 (1964).

dilatory fiduciary (dilґ-a-torґ-eґ). A trustee or other fiduciary who is unreasonably slow in administering an estate.

successor fiduciary. A fiduciary who is appointed to succeed or replace a prior one.

temporary fiduciary. An interim fiduciary appointed by the court until a regular fiduciary can be appointed.

fiduciary bond. See bond (2).

fiduciary contract. Hist. An agreement by which one party delivers something to another on condition that the second party will return the thing to the first.

fiduciary debt. A debt founded on or arising from a fiduciary relationship, rather than from a solely contractual relationship.

fiduciary duty. See duty (2).

fiduciary heir. See heir.

fiduciary-out clause. Mergers & acquisitions. A merger-agreement provision that allows the target corporation to terminate the agreement without committing a breach if a specified condition occurs. • The most common condition is the receipt of a more favorable offer, but other conditions may also be specified. [Cases: Corporations C==582.]

fiduciary relationship. See relationship.

fiduciary-shield doctrine. Corporations. The principle that a corporate officer’s act cannot be the basis for jurisdiction over the officer in an individual capacity. [Cases: Courts C==12(2,20); Federal Courts C==76,20.]

fief (feef), n. 1. See fee. 2. See feud. • Metaphorically, the term refers to an area of dominion, esp. in a corporate or governmental bureaucracy.

fief d’hauberk (feef doґ-bairґk). See feudum militare under FEUDUM.

fief d’haubert. See feudum militare under FEUDUM.

field-of-use restriction. Intellectual property. A license provision restricting the licensee’s use of the licensed property to a defined product or service market or to a designated geographical area.

field sobriety test. See sobriety test.

field stop. See stop and frisk.

field-warehouse financing agreement. The loan agreement in a field-warehousing arrangement.

field warehousing. An inventory-financing method by which a merchant pledges its inventory, which is in the possession of a third person (a warehouser). • This is a method of financing an inventory that cannot economically be delivered to the creditor or third party. The borrower segregates part of the inventory and places it under the nominal control of a lender or third party, so that the lender has a possessor's interest. Cf. floor-plan financing under financing; pledge.

"Field warehousing is a way of bringing about the security relationship of a pledge. It is an arrangement for allowing the pledgor a more convenient access to the pledged goods, while the goods are actually in the custody and control of a third person on the pledgor's premises." Business Factors, Inc. v. Taylor-Edwards Warehouse & Transfer Co., 585 P.2d 825, 828 (Wash. Ct. App. 1978).

"Field warehousing is . . . an arrangement whereby a wholesaler, manufacturer, or merchant finances his business through the pledge of goods remaining on his premises. The arrangement is valid and effective where there is an actual delivery to the warehouseman by the bailor who has hired the warehouseman and given him exclusive possession of the warehouse goods." In re Cavington Grain Co., 638 F.2d 1362, 1365 (5th Cir. 1981).

fieri (fi-ar-diing or feer-diing). Hist. An ancient court of inferior jurisdiction. • Four courts were in each district or hundred.

fieri (fi-ar-diing). [Latin] To be made; to be done. • Fieri usu. appears as part of the phrase in fieri. See in fieri.

fieri facias (fi-ar-diing fay-shee-as). [Latin] "that you cause to be done" (quod fieri facias). A writ of execution that directs a marshal or sheriff to seize and sell a defendant's property to satisfy a money judgment. - Abbr. fi. fa.; Fi. Fa. Cf. levati facias. [Cases: Execution § 1, 15.]

"It receives its name from the Latin words in the writ (quod fieri facias de bonis et catallis, that you cause to be made of the goods and chattels). It is the form of execution in common use in levying upon the judgment debtor's personal property." John Bouvier, Bouvier's Law Dictionary (8th ed. 1914).

"The writ of 'fieri facias' (commonly called a writ of 'fi fa'), which commanded literally 'that you cause to be made,' was an early common-law means of enforcing payment on a judgment; it was, in effect, an order to the sheriff of the court to enforce a judgment against the debtor by levy, seizure, and sale of his property to the extent needed to satisfy a judgment." 30 Am. Jur. 2d Executions and Enforcement of Judgments § 14, at 50-51 (1994).

fieri facias de bonis ecclesiasticis (fi-ar-diing fay-shee-as dee boh-nis e-klee-ze-his-as). [Latin] "that you cause to be made of the ecclesiastical goods." Hist. A writ of execution — used when the defendant was a beneficed clerk who had no lay fee — that commanded the bishop to satisfy the judgment from the ecclesiastical goods and chattels of the defendant within the diocese. • This was accomplished by issuing a sequestration to levy the debt out of the defendant's benefice. This writ was issued after a fieri facias had been returned nulla bona.

fieri facias de bonis propriis (fi-ar-diing fay-shee-as dee boh-nis proh-pree-is). [Latin "that you cause to be made of his own goods"] Hist. A writ that executes on an executor's property when a writ fieri facias de bonis testatoris is returned by the sheriff nulla bona or devastavit (a wasting of the testator's goods by the executor).

fieri facias de bonis testatoris (fi-ar-diing fay-shee-as dee boh-nis tes-ta-tor-is). [Latin "that you cause to be made of the testator's goods"] Hist. A writ of execution served on an executor for a debt incurred by the testator.

fieri feci (fi-ar-diing fee-si). [Latin "I have caused to be made"] Hist. A sheriff's return on a fieri facias where the sheriff has collected, in whole or in part, the sum to be levied on. • The return is usu. expressed by the word "satisfied."

file-wrapper estoppel. See prosecution-history estoppel under ESTOPPEL.

filial consortium. See CONSORTIUM.

filiality. See filiation (1).

filiated father. See FATHER.

filiation (fi-ee-ay-shan). (15c) 1. The fact or condition of being a son or daughter; relationship of a child to a parent. • Despite Bentham's protest (see below), filiation is usual in this sense. — Also termed filiality.

"In English we have no word that will serve to express with propriety the person who bears the relation opposed to that of parent. The word child is ambiguous, being employed in another sense, perhaps more frequently than in this: more frequently in opposition to a person of full age, an adult, than in correlation to a parent. For the condition itself we have no other word than filiation: an ill-contrived term, not analogous to paternity and maternity: the proper term would have been filiality: the word filiation is as frequently, perhaps, and more consistently, put for the act of establishing a person in the possession of the condition of filiality.” Jeremy Bentham, An Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation 276 n.2 (1823).

2. Judicial determination of paternity. See PATERNITY; filiated father under FATHER. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock C=63.]

filiusfamilias (fī-lē-as fī-mē-lē-as). [Latin “son of a family”] Roman law. An unencumbered son or daughter, grandson or granddaughter. — Also termed homo alieni juris.

"Every Roman citizen is either a paterfamilias or a filiusfamilias, according as he is free from paternal power (homo sui juris) or not homo alieni juris. Paterfamilias is the generic name for a homo sui juris, whether child or adult, married or unmarried. Filiusfamilias is the generic name for a homo alieni juris, whether son or daughter, grandson or granddaughter, and so on." Rudolph Sohm, The Institutes: A Textbook of the History and System of Roman Private Law 177 (James Crawford Ledlie trans., 3d ed. 1907).

filius mulieratus (fī-lē-as myoo-lee-ə-ray-tas). [Law Latin] Hist. The eldest legitimate son of a woman who previously had an illegitimate son by the same father; a legitimate son, whose older brother is illegitimate; MULIER PUISNE. Cf. bastard eisne under EISNE.

"I proceed next to the rights and incapacities which appertain to a bastard. The rights are very few, being only such as he can acquire; for he can inherit nothing, being looked upon as the son of nobody; and sometimes called filius nullius, sometimes filius populi." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 447 (1765).

filius populi. See FILIUS NULLIUS.

floor-plan financing. A loan that is secured by merchandise and paid off as the goods are sold. — Usual such a loan is given by a manufacturer to a retailer or other dealer (as a car dealer). — Also termed floor planning. Cf. field warehousing.

gap financing. Interim financing used to fund the difference between a current loan and a loan to be received in the future, esp. between two long-term loans. See bridge loan under loan.

interim financing. A short-term loan secured to cover certain major expenditures, such as construction costs, until permanent financing is obtained. — Also termed construction financing.

internal financing. A funding method using funds generated through the company's operations rather than from stock issues or bank loans.

link financing. The obtaining of credit by depositing funds in another's bank account to aid the other in obtaining a loan.

outside financing. The raising of funds by selling stocks (equity financing) or bonds (debt financing).

permanent financing. A long-term loan obtained to repay an interim loan, such as a mortgage loan that is used to repay a construction loan.

project financing. A method of funding in which the lender looks primarily to the money generated by a single project as security for the loan. — This type of financing is usu. used for large, complex, and expensive single-purpose projects such as power plants, chemical-processing plants, mines, and toll roads. The lender usu. pays solely or primarily from the money generated by the contracts for the facility's output (sometimes paid by customers directly into an account maintained by the lender), such as the electricity sold by a power plant. The lender usu. requires the facility to be developed and owned by a special-purpose entity (sometimes called a bankruptcy-remote entity), which can be a corporation, limited partnership, or other legal entity, that is permitted to perform no function other than developing, owning, and operating the facility. See single-purpose project; special-purpose entity; bankruptcy-remote entity.

financing agency. See agency (1).

FinCEN. abbr. FINANCIAL CRIMES ENFORCEMENT NETWORK.

find, vb. (bef. 12c) To determine a fact in dispute by verdict or decision <find guilty> <found that no duty existed>. Cf. hold (2).

finder. (13c) 1. An intermediary who brings together parties for a business opportunity, such as two companies for a merger, a borrower and a financial institution, an issuer and an underwriter of securities, or a seller and a buyer of real estate. — A finder differs from a broker-dealer because the finder merely brings two parties together to make their own contract, while a broker-dealer usu. participates in the negotiations. See finder of fact. See fact-finder.

finder's fee. (1937) 1. The amount charged by one who brings together parties for a business opportunity. 2. The amount charged by a person who locates a lost or missing item and returns it to its owner.

finder's-fee contract. (1959) An agreement between a finder and one of the parties to a business opportunity.

finding. See finding of fact.

finding of fact. (18c) A determination by a judge, jury, or administrative agency of a fact supported by the evidence in the record, usu. presented at the trial or hearing <he agreed with the jury's finding of fact that the driver did not stop before proceeding into the intersection>. — Often shortened to finding. See fact-finder. Cf. conclusion of fact; conclusion of law.

concurrent finding. (usu. pl.) Identical factual findings by two different tribunals on a specific issue of fact.

general finding. An undifferentiated finding in favor of one party.

special finding. 1. (usu. pl.) A finding of the necessary and ultimate facts to support a judgment in favor of one party. 2. Military law. A military tribunal's finding that directly relates to the determination of guilt or innocence.

fine, n. (13c) 1. An amicable final agreement or compromise of a fictitious or actual suit to determine the true possessor of land. • The fine was formerly used as a form of conveyance to disentail an estate. — Also termed final concord; finalis concordia. See foot of the fine.

"A peculiar and persistent use of the writ [of covenant] was in levying a fine. A fine, finalis concordia — was the compromise of a suit, settled upon terms approved by the court. The dispute, while it might be a reality, was more often fictitious, and was chiefly used as a means of conveying land. . . . Soon after [Glanvill's] book was written, an innovation was made in the procedure which endured until 1833. The terms of the compromise, agreed by the parties and approved by the judges, were entered upon a threefold indenture, one of the parts being given to each of the litigants and the third — the 'foot' or bottom of the document — being kept among the records of the court. The parties thus obtained incontestable evidence and abundant security, and either could sue the other if the agreement were not implemented." C.H.S. Fifoot, History and Sources of the Common Law: Tort and Contract 256 (1949).

"Unlike the recovery, which was a real action, the fine was a compromised fictitious personal action, originally designed as a method of ensuring security in conveyancing and only later being employed for the purpose of barring estates tail. In outline, it operated in the following manner. The intending purchaser brought an action, begun by writ of covenant, against the intending vendor. The parties then applied to the court to compromise the action; by the terms of the compromise (finis) the intending vendor admitted that the land belonged to the intending purchaser because he had given it to him, and the terms of the compromise were recorded in the court records. The fine owed its popularity as a means of conveyancing to two factors, neither of which was present in the standard method of conveyance by means of feoffment. First, the enrolling in the court records provided evidence of the transaction which was both permanent and free from the danger of forgery. Secondly, the effect of the fine was to set running a short period of limitation at the expiration of which all claims to the land were barred. It was this second aspect which made the device attractive as a means of 'barring' fees tail." Peter Butt, Land Law 102-03 (2d ed. 1988).

executed fine. Hist. A fine made on acknowledgment of the right of the grantee to land given to him as a gift from the grantor. • This was abolished in England in 1833. 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 74.

2. fine for alienation. 3. A fee paid by a tenant to the landlord at the commencement of the tenancy to reduce the rent payments. 4. Hist. A money payment from a tenant to the tenant’s lord.

common fine. A sum of money due from a tenant to a lord to defray the cost of a court leet or to allow the litigants to try the action closer to home. — Also termed head silver.

5. A pecuniary criminal punishment or civil penalty payable to the public treasury. [Cases: Fines <$1.5] — fine, vb.

day fine. A fine payable over time, usu. as a percentage of the defendant’s earnings on a weekly or monthly basis.

excessive fine. (16c) 1. Criminal law. A fine that is unreasonably high and disproportionate to the offense committed. • The Eighth Amendment proscribes excessive fines. An example of an excessive fine is a civil forfeiture in which the property was not an instrumentality of the crime and the worth of the property was not proportional to the owner’s culpability. [Cases: Fines <$1.3] 2. A fine or penalty that seriously impairs one’s earning capacity, esp. from a business.

fresh fine. Hist. A fine levied within the past year.

fino. See fineable.

Fine and Recovery Act. Hist. An English statute, enacted in 1833, that abolished the use of fines as a method of conveying title to land. 3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 74. See fine (1).

fine annulando levato de tenemento quod fuit de antiquo dominico (f1-nee a-na-lan-doh la-vay-to dee ten-a-men-toh kwod fyoo-it dee an-tr-kwoh da-min-a-koh). [Latin “a fine to be annulled levied from a tenement which was of ancient demesne”] Hist. A writ for disannulling a conveyance of land in ancient demesne to the lord’s prejudice.

fine capiendo pro terris (f1-nee kap-ea-en-doh proh ter-is). [Latin “a fine to be taken for lands”] Hist. A writ that an imprisoned felon could use in some circumstances to obtain release from jail and to recover lands and goods taken during imprisonment.
fine for alienation. Hist. A fee paid by a tenant to the lord upon the alienation of a feudal estate and substitution of a new tenant. • It was payable by all tenants holding by knight's service or tenants in capite by socage tenure. — Often shortened to fine.

fine for endowment. Hist. A fee paid by a widow of a tenant to the tenant's lord. • If not paid, the widow could not be endowed of her husband's land.

finem facere (fi-nam-fay sa-rec). [Latin] Hist. 1. To make a composition or compromise; to relinquish a claim in exchange for consideration.

"In the thirteenth century the king's justices wield a wide and a 'common law' power of ordering that an offender be kept in custody. They have an equally wide power of discharging him upon his 'making fine with the king.' We must observe the language of the time. In strictness they have no power to 'impose a fine.' No tribunal of this period, unless we are mistaken, is ever said to impose a fine. To order the offender to pay so much money to the king — this the judge may not do. If he did it, he would be breaking or evading the Great Charter, for an amercement should be affeered, not by royal justices, but by neighbours of the wrong-doer. What the judges can do is this: they can pronounce a sentence of imprisonment and then allow the culprit to 'make fine,' that is to make an end (finem facere) of the matter by paying or finding security for a certain sum of money. In theory the fine is a bilateral transaction, a bargain; it is not 'imposed,' it is 'made.'" 2 Frederic Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 517 (2d ed. 1899).

2. To make a settlement of a penalty. • Magna Carta (ch. 55) specifically limited "[a]ll fines which were made with us unjustly and contrary to the law of the land ...." (Offices fines qui injuste et contra legem terrae facti sunt nobiscum).

fine non capiendo pro pulchre placitando (fi-nee non kap-ce-en-doh proh pal-kree plas-a-tan-doh). [Latin] "a fine not to be taken for pleading fairly" Hist. A writ prohibiting court officers from taking fines for fair pleading (i.e., beauxpleader).

fine print. (1951) The part of an agreement or document — usu. in small, light print that is not easily noticeable — referring to disclaimers, restrictions, or limitations.

fine pro re dissiseisina capiendo (fi-nee proh re-dis-see-si-zin-a kap-ce-en-doh). [Law Latin] "a fine to be taken for again dispossessing" Hist. A writ that entitled a person imprisoned for twice dispossessing someone (re dissiseisin) to release upon payment of a reasonable fine.

fines le roy (finz la roy). [Law French] Hist. The king's fines. • A fine or fee that was paid to the monarch for an offense or contempt.

fine sur cognizance de droit, comme ceo que il ad de son done (fin sar kon-a-zants da droyt kam say-oh kweel ad da sawn dawn). [Law French] "a fine upon acknowledgment of the right, as that which he has of his gift" Hist. The most common fine of conveyance, by which the defendant (also called the deforciant) acknowledged in court that he had already conveyed the property to the cognizee. • This form of conveyance took the place of an actual livery of seizin. See FINE (1).

"But, in general, the first species of fine, 'sur cognizance de droit come ceo, etc.,' is the most used, as it conveys a clean and absolute freehold, and gives the cognizee a seizin in law, without an actual livery; and is therefore called a fine executed, whereas the others are but executorial." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 353 (1766).

fine sur concessit (fin sar kan-se-sit). [Law French] Hist. A species of conveyance in which the cognizor does not acknowledge the cognizee's preceding right in land but grants the cognizee an estate de novo, usu. for life or a term of years, by way of supposed composition. See FINE (1).

fine sur done, grant et render (fin sar dawn, grant ay ren-dar). [Law French] "fine upon gift, grant and render" Hist. A double conveyance, consisting of a fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo que il ad de son done and a fine sur concessit, used to convey particular limitations of estates. • For example, after acknowledgment of the cognizee's right in the land, the cognizee would grant back to the cognizor or a third party some other estate in the land. See FINE (1).

finger, vb. (1930) Slang. To identify (a person) as a perpetrator, usu. of a crime <in his grand-jury testimony, Vinson fingered Bauer as the gunman>.

finger pillory. See PILLORY.

fingerprint, n. (1859) 1. The distinctive pattern of lines on a human fingertip <no two fingerprints are identical.> [Cases: Criminal Law C 2475.5.] 2. The impression of a fingerprint made on any surface <the detective found several fingerprints on the knife>. 3. An ink impression of the pattern of lines on a fingertip, usu. taken during the booking procedure after an arrest <after Dick had his fingerprints taken, he was put in the drunk tank>. — Also termed print; thumprint. Cf. DNA IDENTIFICATION — fingerprint, vb. — fingerprinting, n. fingerprint claim. See PATENT CLAIM.

finire (fi-ni-ree), vb. [Law Latin] Hist. 1. To fine; to pay a fine. 2. To end or finish a matter.

finis (fi-nis or fin-is). [Latin] (15c) Hist. 1. Boundary or limit. 2. The compromise of a fine of conveyance. See FINE (1).

"The parties then applied to the court to compromise the action; by the terms of the compromise (finis) the intending vendor admitted that the land belonged to the intending purchaser because he had given it to him, and the terms of the compromise were recorded in the court records." Peter Butt, Land Law 102 (2d ed. 1998).

3. A fine, or payment of money made to satisfy a claim of criminal penalty.

first-sale doctrine. (1963) 1. Copyright. The rule that the purchaser of a physical copy of a copyrighted work, such as a book or CD, may give or sell that copy to someone else without infringing the copyright owner's exclusive distribution rights. • With regard to that physical copy, the copyright owner's distribution right is said to be exhausted. 17 USCA § 109(a). [Cases: Copyrights and Intellectual Property ⊃ = 38.5.] 2. Patents. The principle that the buyer of a patented article has the right to use, repair, and resell the article without interference from the patentee. • The patentee may still retain control of the article through terms in the license or sale contract. See patent-exhaustion doctrine. [Cases: Patents ⊃ = 191.]

first taker. See taker.

first-to-file rule. (1969) Civil procedure. 1. The principle that, when two suits are brought by the same parties, regarding the same issues, in two courts of proper jurisdiction, the court that first acquires jurisdiction usu. retains the suit, to the exclusion of the other court. • The court with the second-filed suit ordinarily stays proceedings or abandons. But an exception exists if the first-filed suit is brought merely in anticipation of the true plaintiff's suit and amounts to an improper attempt at forum-shopping. See anticipatory filing. [Cases: Courts ⊃ = 475, 493, 514; Federal Courts ⊃ = 1145.] 2. The doctrine allowing a party to a previously filed lawsuit to enjoin another from pursuing a later-filed action. — Also termed first-filing rule; first-filed rule; priority-jurisdiction rule. [Cases: Courts ⊃ = 480, 507, 508, 516; Federal Courts ⊃ = 1145.]

first-to-file system. Patents. The practice of granting priority to the first person to file a patent application. • Most of the world uses a first-to-file patent system; the only major exception is the United States, which grants priority to the first inventor. Cf. first-to-invent system. [Cases: Patents ⊃ = 90(1).]

first-to-invent system. Patents. The practice of awarding a patent to the first person to create an invention, rather than the first to file a patent application. • Because the first inventor is not necessarily the first person to file for a patent, an interference hearing is held to decide who is entitled to the patent. This system is used only... in the United States. See CONCEPTION OF INVENTION; PRIORITY OF INVENTION. Cf. FIRST-TO-FILE SYSTEM. [Cases: Patents C=90(1).]

fixing a jury. See JURY-FIXING.

fixture. (18c) Personal property that is attached to land or a building and that is regarded as an irremovable part of the real property, such as a fireplace built into a home. See UCC § 9-102(a)(41). • Historically, personal property becomes a fixture when it is physically fastened to or connected with the land or building and the fastening or connection was done to enhance the utility of the land or building. If personal property has been attached to the land or building and enhances only the chattel's utility, it is not a fixture. For example, if bricks are purposely stacked to form a wall, a fixture results. But if the bricks are merely stacked for convenience until used for some purpose, they do not form a fixture. — Also termed permanent fixture; immovable fixture. Cf. IMPROVEMENT. [Cases: Fixtures (1)].

"A fixture can best be defined as a thing which, although originally a movable chattel, is by reason of its annexation to, or association in use with land, regarded as a part of the land. . . . The law of fixtures concerns those situations where the chattel annexed still retains a separate identity in spite of annexation, for example a furnace or a light fixture. Where the chattel annexed loses such identity, as in the case of nails, boards, etc., the problem becomes one of accession." Ray Andrews Brown, The Law of Personal Property § 137, at 698 & n.1 (2d ed. 1953).

"Broadly, goods can be classified for the purposes of [UCC §§ 9-311-313 into three categories: those that remain "pure goods," those so substantially integrated into real estate as to become real estate themselves, "pure reality," and those in the gray area that would pass in a deed to the real estate but that retain separate status as personal property. These last are fixtures." 4 James C. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 33-2, at 338 (4th ed. 1995).

agricultural fixture. A fixture erected on leased land for use in agricultural pursuits, such as tillng the land or keeping farm animals. • These fixtures may or may not be removable at the end of the lease. [Cases: Fixtures (16)].

domestic fixture. Removable personal property provided by a tenant for the tenant's personal comfort and convenience while occupying leased premises. • This term frequently applies to items such as large kitchen appliances. See tenant's fixture. Cf. ornamental fixture. [Cases: Fixtures (17, 18.3)].

ornamental fixture. Removable personal property that a tenant attaches to leased premises to make them more attractive and comfortable. • This term sometimes overlaps with domestic fixture when an object is decorative as well as functional. See tenant's fixture. Cf. domestic fixture. [Cases: Fixtures (17, 18.3)].

tenant's fixture. (1832) Removable personal property that a tenant affixes to the leased property but that the tenant can detach and take away. — Also termed movable fixture. See domestic fixture; ornamental fixture. [Cases: Fixtures (13)].

trade fixture. (1839) Removable personal property that a tenant attaches to leased land for business purposes, such as a display counter. • Despite its name, a trade fixture is not usu. treated as a fixture — that is, as irremovable. [Cases: Fixtures (15)].

fixture filing. (1972) The act or an instance of recording, in public real-estate records, a security interest in personal property that is intended to become a fixture. See UCC § 9-102(a)(40). • The creditor files a financing statement in the real-property records of the county where a mortgage on the real estate would be filed. A fixture-filing financing statement must contain a description of the real estate. [Cases: Secured Transactions (85, 94)].

FJC. abbr. FEDERAL JUDICIAL CENTER.

FKA. abbr. Formerly known as. — Also rendered F/K/A; f/k/a.

flag. n. (14c) 1. A usu. rectangular piece of cloth, bunting, or other material decorated with a distinctive design and used as a symbol or signal. 2. Something symbolized by the display of a flag, such as a ship or nationality. See DUTY OF THE FLAG; LAW OF THE FLAG.
flag of convenience. Int’l law. A national flag flown by a ship not because the ship or its crew has an affiliation with the nation, but because the lax controls and modest fees and taxes imposed by that nation have attracted the owner to register it there. • After World War II, shipowners began registering their ships in countries such as Panama, Liberia, and Honduras to avoid expensive and restrictive national regulation of labor, safety, and other matters. Since the late 1950s, there has been increasing international pressure to require a “genuine link” between a ship and its flag state, but this reform has been slow in coming. — Abbr. FOC. [Cases: Shipping 242-2.]

flag of truce. Int’l law. A white flag used as a signal when one belligerent wishes to communicate with the other in the field. • The bearers of such a flag may not be fired on, injured, or taken prisoner, as long as they carry out their mission in good faith.

flag mast. See mast (1).

flagrans bellum (flag-gran-tee bel-oh). [Latin “raging war”] A war currently being waged.

flagrans crimen (flag-gran-see crr-mon). [Latin] A crime in the very act of its commission or of recent occurrence; a fresh crime.

flagrant delicto. See in flagrant delicto.

flag state. Maritime law. The state under whose flag a ship is registered. • A ship may fly the flag of one state only. [Cases: Shipping 242-2.]

flag-state control. Maritime law. The exercise of authority by a state over vessels that fly under its flag to ensure compliance with domestic and international safety and environmental laws and regulations. Cf. coastal-state control; port-state control. [Cases: Shipping 242-2.]

flash-of-genius rule. Patents. The now-defunct principle that a device is not patentable if it was invented as the result of trial and error rather than as a “flash of creative genius.” • The rule, which takes its name from language in Cuno Engineering Corp. v. Automatic Devices Corp., 314 U.S. 84, 91, 62 S.Ct. 37, 41 (1941), was legislatively overturned in 1952. 35 USCA § 103. [Cases: Patents 25-17.]

fly for it. *Hist. To flee after allegedly committing a crime.
- The ancient custom in criminal trials was to ask the jury after its verdict — even a not-guilty verdict — "Did he fly for it?" The purpose was to enable the jury to find whether the defendant had fled from justice. A defendant who had fled would forfeit personal property, even though found not guilty on the underlying charge.

drugs, biological products, and medical devices are safe and effective; and that certain other products, such as electronic products that emit radiation, are safe. • Created by the Pure Food and Drug Act of 1906, the agency today enforces the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of 1938 and related statutes and regulations. 21 USCA §§ 301 et seq. — Abbr. FDA. [Cases: Food C—\ref{1.7}; Health C—\ref{302}] food-disparagement law. See agricultural-disparagement law.

Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act. A 1938 federal law prohibiting the transportation in interstate commerce of adulterated or misbranded food, drugs, or cosmetics. • The Act superseded the Pure Food and Drug Act of 1906. — Abbr. FDCA. [Cases: Food C—\ref{2}; Health C—\ref{302}]

Food, Nutrition, and Consumer Service. An agency in the U.S. Department of Agriculture responsible for reducing hunger by educating children and needy people about healthy diets and by providing them access to food through the food-stamp and other programs. — Abbr. FNS.

Food Safety and Inspection Service. An agency in the U.S. Department of Agriculture responsible for inspecting all types of meat, poultry, eggs, and related products to ensure safety and accurate labeling. — Abbr. FSIS. [Cases: Food C—\ref{1.7}] fool's test. The test formerly used by federal courts and by the Federal Trade Commission to determine whether an advertisement is deceptive, by asking whether even a fool might believe it. • The name comes from Isaiah: “wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein.” The test was announced in Charles of the Ritz Distrib. Corp. v. Fed. Trade Comm'n, 143 F.2d 676 (2d Cir. 1944). It was replaced by a “reasonable consumer” test by the FTC in 1984. Cf. reasonableness: consumer test. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation C—\ref{161}]

footage drilling contract. Oil & gas. A drilling contract under which the drilling contractor is paid to drill to a specified formation or depth, is paid a set amount per foot drilled, and is given broad control over how to do the work. • The risk of unexpected delays, as well as most liabilities, is on the contractor rather than the lease operator under this type of contract. Cf. daywork drilling contract; turnkey drilling contract drilling contract.

foot-frontage rule. Tax. A method of property-tax assessment — used esp. to pay for improvements such as sidewalks and sewers — that considers only the lot's actual frontage on the line of improvement and ignores the depth of the lot and the number and character of other improvements or their value.

footgeld (fuut-geld). Hist. In forest law, a fine imposed for not making a dog incapable of hunting by either cutting out the ball of its paw or cutting off its claws. • The cutting was known as “expeditating” the dog. To be “free” or “quit” of footgeld was to be relieved of the duty to expeditate one's dog.

foot of the fine. Hist. At common law, the fifth and last part of a fine of conveyance. • This part included the entire matter, reciting the names of the parties and the date, place, and before whom it was acknowledged or levied. — Also termed chirograph. See fine (1).

footprint. (16c) 1. Evidence. The impression made on a surface of soil, snow, etc., by a human foot or a shoe, boot, or any other foot covering. [Cases: Criminal Law C—\ref{475.6}]. 2. Real estate. The shape of a building's base.

for account of. (1826) A form of indorsement on a note or draft introducing the name of the person entitled to receive the proceeds.

Foraker Act (for-a-ker). The original (1900) federal law providing Puerto Rico with a civil government, but keeping it outside the U.S. customs area. See 48 USCA §§ 731-752.

foraneous (fo-ray-nee-ahs), n. [fr. Latin foris “without”] Hist. A foreigner; an alien; a stranger.

forathe (for-ayth). Hist. In forest law, one who can make an oath or bear witness for another.

forbanitus (for-ban-ah-tas). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A pirate; an outlaw. 2. One who was banished. — Also termed forbanitius.

forbarre (for-bahr), vb. [Law French] Hist. To preclude; to bar out; to estop.

forbatudus (for-ba-t(y)oo-dahs). [Law Latin] Hist. A person who provokes — and dies in — a fight.

forbearance, n. (16c) 1. The act of refraining from enforcing a right, obligation, or debt. • Strictly speaking, forbearance denotes an intentional negative act, while omission or neglect is an unintentional negative act. 2. The act of tolerating or abstaining. — forbear, vb.

forbidden degree. See prohibited degree under degree.

forbidden departure. See departure.

for cause. For a legal reason or ground. • The phrase expresses a common standard governing the removal of a civil servant or an employee under contract. — for-cause, adj.

for-cause, n. See challenge for cause under challenge (2).

force, n. (14c) Power, violence, or pressure directed against a person or thing.

actual force. (16c) Force consisting in a physical act, esp. a violent act directed against a robbery victim. — Also termed physical force. [Cases: Robbery C—\ref{6}] constructive force. (1802) Threats and intimidation to gain control or prevent resistance; esp., threatening words or gestures directed against a robbery victim. [Cases: Robbery C—\ref{6}]. force, vb. (14c) To compel by physical means or by legal requirement <Barnes used a gun to force Jillian to use her ATM card> <under the malpractice policy, the insurance company was forced to defend the doctor>. _Generally, a person may use deadly force in self-defense or in defense of another only if retaliating against another's deadly force. — Also termed extreme force. Cf. nondeadly force._

"Under the common law the use of deadly force is never permitted for the sole purpose of stopping one fleeing from arrest on a misdemeanor charge . . ." Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, _Criminal Law_ 1098 (3d ed. 1982).

force majeure (fors ma-zhar). [Law French "a superior force"] (1883) An event or effect that can be neither anticipated nor controlled. • The term includes both acts of nature (e.g., floods and hurricanes) and acts of people (e.g., riots, strikes, and wars). — Also termed force majesture; vis major; superior force. Cf. ACY OF GOD; VIS MAJOR (1).

force-majeure clause. (1916) A contractual provision allocating the risk of loss if performance becomes impossible or impracticable, esp. as a result of an event or effect that the parties could not have anticipated or controlled. [Cases: Contracts ◄= 309(1).]

force-the-vote provision. _Mergers & acquisitions._ A contractual clause requiring a company's board of directors to approve a merger transaction and submit it to the shareholders, who then vote on the merger regardless of whether the board recommends that the shareholders approve it when the vote is held.

forcible, adj. (15c) Effected by force or threat of force against opposition or resistance.

"[in the law of trespass, the] term 'forcible' is used in a wide and somewhat unnatural sense to include any act of physical interference with the person or property of another. To lay one's finger on another person without lawful justification is as much a forcible injury in the eye of the law, and therefore a trespass, as to beat him with a stick. To walk peacefully across another man's land is a forcible injury and a trespass, no less than to break into his house vi et armis. So also it is probably a trespass deliberately to put matter where natural forces will take it on to the plaintiff's land." R.F.V. Heuston, _Saimond on the Law of Torts_ 5 (17th ed. 1977).

forcible detainer. 1. The wrongful retention of possession of property by one originally in lawful possession, forcible entry. (17c) 1. The act or an instance of violently and unlawfully taking possession of lands and tenements against the will of those in lawful possession. 2. The act of entering land in another's possession by the use of force against another or by breaking into the premises.

forcible entry and detainer. (17c) 1. The act of violently taking and keeping possession of lands and tenements without legal authority. [Cases: Forcible Entry and Detainer <204.]

"To walk across another's land, or to enter his building, without privilege, is a trespass, but this in itself, while a civil wrong, is not a crime. However, if an entry upon real estate is accomplished by violence or intimidation, or if such methods are employed for detention after a peaceable entry, there is a crime according to English law, known as forcible entry and detainer. This was a common-law offense in England, although supplemented by English statutes that are old enough to be common law in this country. . . . It has sometimes been said that there are two separate offenses — (1) forcible entry and (2) forcible detainer. This may be true under the peculiar wording of some particular statute, but in general it seems to be one offense which may be committed in two different ways." — Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 487-88 (3d ed. 1982).

2. A quick and simple legal proceeding for regaining possession of real property from someone who has wrongfully taken, or refused to surrender, possession. — Also termed forcible detainer. See eviction; ejectment. [Cases: Forcible Entry and Detainer <206; Landlord and Tenant <207.]

"Forcible entry and detainer is a remedy given by statute for the recovery of possession of land and of damages for its detention. It is entirely regulated by statute, and the statutes vary materially in the different states." — Benjamin J. Shipman, Handbook of Common Law Pleading § 74, at 188 (Henry Winthrop Ballantine ed., 3d ed. 1923).

foreclose, vb. (15c) To terminate a mortgagor's interest in property; to subject (property) to foreclosure proceedings. [Cases: Mortgages <380.]

'Should the mortgagor default in his obligations under the mortgage, the mortgagee will seek to 'foreclose', — i.e., 'end' or 'close' the mortgagor's rights in the security. After taking the appropriate statutory steps, the mortgagee will sell the mortgaged property. If the sale is to someone other than the mortgagor or the mortgagee (a 'third party' sale) the proceeds will go: first, to pay the costs of the foreclosure proceedings; second, to pay off the principal indebtedness and accrued interest; third, if there is anything left over (i.e., any 'equity' existed) this is paid to the mortgagor." — Edward H. Rabin, Fundamentals of Modern Real Property Law 1087 (1974).

foreclosure (for-kloh-zhar). (18c) A legal proceeding to terminate a mortgagor's interest in property, instituted by the lender (the mortgagee) either to gain title or to force a sale in order to satisfy the unpaid debt secured by the property. Cf. repossession. [Cases: Mortgages <380.] equitable foreclosure. (1876) A foreclosure method in which the court orders the property sold, and the proceeds are applied first to pay the costs of the lawsuit and sale and then to the mortgage debt. — Any surplus is paid to the mortgagor. [Cases: Mortgages <380, 394.]

judicial foreclosure. (1839) A costly and time-consuming foreclosure method by which the mortgaged property is sold through a court proceeding requiring many standard legal steps such as the filing of a complaint, service of process, notice, and a hearing. — Judicial foreclosure is available in all jurisdictions and is the exclusive or most common method of foreclosure in at least 20 states. [Cases: Mortgages <380.]

mortgage foreclosure. (1842) A foreclosure of the mortgaged property upon the mortgagor's default. [Cases: Mortgages <380, 394.]

nonjudicial foreclosure. (1916) 1. See power-of-sale foreclosure. 2. A foreclosure method that does not require court involvement. [Cases: Mortgages <384.]

power-of-sale foreclosure. (1946) A foreclosure process by which, according to the mortgage instrument and a state statute, the mortgaged property is sold at a nonjudicial public sale by a public official, the mortgagee, or a trustee, without the stringent notice requirements, procedural burdens, or delays of a judicial foreclosure. — Power-of-sale foreclosure is authorized and used in more than half the states. — Also termed nonjudicial foreclosure; statutory foreclosure. [Cases: Mortgages <384.]

strict foreclosure. (1823) A rare procedure that gives the mortgagee title to the mortgaged property — without first conducting a sale — after a defaulting mortgagor fails to pay the mortgage debt within a court-specified period. — The use of strict foreclosure is limited to special situations except in those few states that permit this remedy generally. [Cases: Mortgages <384, 483.]

tax foreclosure. (1869) A public authority's seizure and sale of property for nonpayment of taxes. [Cases: Taxation <2922.]

foreclosure decree. (1847) 1. Generally, a decree ordering a judicial foreclosure sale. 2. A decree ordering the strict foreclosure of a mortgage. [Cases: Mortgages <384, 483.]

foreclosure sale. See sale.

foregift. Hist. A premium paid for a lease in addition to rent; forehand rent. See forehand rent (1).

foregoer (for-goh-er). (15c) Hist. A royal purveyor; a person who buys provisions for the Crown at an appraised (that is, reduced) price while the royal household travels about the country.

forehand rent. Hist. 1. A premium paid by the tenant on the making of a lease, esp. on the renewal of a lease by an ecclesiastical corporation. 2. Generally, rent payable before a lease begins.

Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act. A federal statute providing individuals with a right of action against foreign governments, under certain circumstances, to the extent the claim arises from the private, as opposed to the public, acts of the foreign state. 28 USCA §§ 1602-1611. — Abbr. FSIA. See RESTRICTIVE PRINCIPLE OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY. [Cases: International Law C 10.31-10.39.]

"The Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA) of 1976 was designed to provide a set of comprehensive regulations governing access to federal and state courts in this country for plaintiffs asserting claims against foreign states and instrumentalities thereof. The enactment of this legislation responded to the reality that increased contacts between American citizens and companies on the one hand, and foreign states and entities owned by foreign states on the other, as well as a constantly expanding range of government activities, had created the need for judicial fora in this country to resolve disputes arising out of these activities." 14A Charles Alan Wright et al., Federal Practice and Procedure § 3662, at 160-61 (2d ed. 1998).

foreign state. 1. A foreign country. 2. An American state different from the one under discussion.

forestall (for-stawl), vb. (bef. 12c) 1. To prevent (an event, result, etc.). 2. Hist. To intercept or obstruct (as a person on a royal highway). 3. Hist. To prevent (a tenant) from coming on the premises. 4. Hist. To intercept (as a deer reentering a forest). 5. Hist. To buy (goods) for the purpose of reselling at a higher price. • At common law, this was an indictable offense. See FORESTALLING THE MARKET. — Also spelled forstall.

"[A] growing town in England might have placed a higher value on grain than a neighboring town with a static population, yet traditional patterns of business might continue to send the same amount of grain to both towns. A forestaller would bid against the traditional buyer in the smaller town, obtain the grain, and resell it where it could command a higher price in the larger town. Forestalling did not harm allocative efficiency. Indeed, it was a highly effective means of reallocating scarce goods to their most highly valued uses — the very definition of efficiency. Rather, forestalling was objectionable, and thus prohibited as a restraint of trade, because the bidding process necessarily resulted in higher grain prices in many parts of the country," Stephen F. Ross, Principles of Antitrust Law 12 (1993). forestaller, n. 1. A person who forestalls. 2. Hist. One guilty of the offense of forestalling. See FORESTALL (5).

forestalling the market. Hist. 1. The taking possession of commodities on their way to the market. 2. The purchase of goods on their way to the market, with the intention of reselling them at a higher price. 3. The deterrence of having sellers offer their goods at market at a reasonable price; specif., the crime of inhibiting normal trading by persuading sellers to raise their prices on goods or dissuading them from offering the goods in a particular market, or by purchasing as much as possible of certain goods before they reach the market to drive up prices. forest law. Hist. The body of law protecting game and preserving timber.

forestry right. A land interest under which a person has the right to enter the land, establish and maintain a crop of trees, harvest them, and construct works for that purpose. [Cases: Logs and Logging ☞ 1.]

forfeiture (for-fi-chur), n. (14c) 1. The divestiture of property without compensation. 2. The loss of a right, privilege, or property because of a crime, breach of obligation, or neglect of duty. • Title is instantaneously transferred to another, such as the government, a corporation, or a private person. [Cases: Controlled Substances ☞ 162; Forfeitures ☞ 1.] 3. Something (esp. money or property) lost or confiscated by this process; a penalty. — forfeit, vb. — forfeitable, adj.

civil forfeiture. (1867) An in rem proceeding brought by the government against property that either facilitated a crime or was acquired as a result of criminal activity. [Cases: Controlled Substances ☞ 162; Forfeitures ☞ 1.] criminal forfeiture. (1866) A governmental proceeding brought against a person to seize property as punishment for the person's criminal behavior. [Cases: Controlled Substances ☞ 162; Forfeitures ☞ 1.]

forfeiture of marriage. Hist. A penalty exacted by a lord from a ward who married without the lord's consent. • The penalty was a money payment double the value that the marriage would otherwise have been worth to the lord.

forfeiture of pay. Military law. A punishment depriving the guilty party of all or part of his or her military pay.

4. A destruction or deprivation of some estate or right because of the failure to perform some contractual obligation or condition.

"[When a condition is not likely to occur until the obligee has relied on the expected exchange by, for example, performing or preparing to perform, ... nonoccurrence of the condition results in the obligee's loss of its reliance interest when the obligee loses the right to that exchange. This loss of reliance interest is often described as 'forfeiture.'" E. Allan Farnsworth, Contracts § 8.4, at 533 (3d ed. 1999).

forfeiture clause. (1804) 1. A contractual provision stating that, under certain circumstances, one party must forfeit something to the other. • Forfeiture clauses are often held to be void, although they are similar to conditions and other qualifications of estates in land. 2. NO-CONTEST CLAUSE.

forfeiture restraint. An attempt by an otherwise effective conveyance or contract to cause a later conveyance to terminate or to make some or all of the later conveyance subject to termination. — Sometimes shortened to restraint. [Cases: Deeds ☞ 149; Property ☞ 11.]

forgavel (for-gav-al). Hist. A small reserved rent in money; quit-rent.

forfeity, n. (16c) 1. The act of fraudulently making a false document or altering a real one to be used as if genuine <the contract was void because of the seller's forgery>. • Though forgery was a misdemeanor at common law, modern statutes typically make it a felony. — Also termed false making. [Cases: Forgery ☞ 1.] 2. A false or altered document made to look genuine by someone with the intent to deceive <he was not the true property owner because the deed was a forgery>. — Also termed fake. 3. Under the Model Penal Code, the act of fraudulently altering, authenticating, issuing, or transferring a writing without appropriate authorization. • Under the explicit terms of the Code, writing can include items such as coins and credit cards. Model Penal Code § 224.1(1). — forge, vb. — forger, n.

"While it is true that there is a distinction between fraud and forgery, and forgery contains some elements that are not included in fraud, forgeries are a species of fraud. In essence, the crime of forgery involves the making, altering, or completing of an instrument by someone other than the ostensible maker or drawer or an agent of the ostensible maker or drawer." 37 C.J.S. Forgery § 2, at 66 (1997).

double forgery. A draft having a forged payor signature and a forged indorsement.

foris disputaciones (for-i-dis-pyoo-tay-shhee-oh-neez). [Latin "arguments of the court"] Roman law. Arguments or discussions before a court.

forinsec service (for-in-sik). (18c) Hist. The feudal services owed by a mesne (i.e., intermediate) lord, esp. those of a military nature. — Also termed foreign service; forinsec servitium. Cf. INTRINSEC SERVICE.

"The terminology of Bracton's day and of yet earlier times neatly expresses the distinction between the service which the tenant owes to his immediate lord by reason of the bargain which exists between them, and the service which was incumbent on the tenant whilst it was in the lord's hand. The former is intrinsec service, the latter forinsec service; the former is the service which is created by, which (as it were) arises within, the bargain between the two persons, A and B, whose rights and duties we are discussing; the latter arises outside that bargain to that bargain . . . . [T]he term is a relative one; what is 'intrinsec' between A and B is 'forinsec' as regards C." 1 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 238, 239 n.2 (2d ed. 1898).

formedon (for-ma don). [fr. Latin forma doni "form of the gift"] (15c) Hist. A writ of right for claiming entailed property held by another. • A writ of formedon was the highest remedy available to a tenant in tail. — Also termed writ of formedon. [Cases: Real Actions $= 4.]

"Called formedon, because the writ comprehended the form of the gift. It was of three kinds, in the descender, in the remainder, and in the reverter." Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 650 (2d ed. 1867).

formedon in the descender. A writ of formedon brought by the issue in tail to recover possession of the land.

formedon in the remainder. A writ of formedon brought by a remainderman under a grant or gift in tail to recover possession of the land.

formedon in the reverter. A writ of formedon brought by a reversioner or donor of the grant or gift in tail to recover possession of the land.

former acquittal. See autrefois acquit under AUTREFOIS.

former adjudication. (18c) A judgment in a prior action that resulted in a final determination of the rights of the parties or essential fact questions and serves to bar relitigation of the issues relevant to that determination. • Collateral estoppel and res judicata are the two types of former adjudication. See COLLATERAL ESTOPPEL; RES JUDICATA. [Cases: Judgment $= 540, 634.]

former jeopardy. (1870) The fact of having previously been prosecuted for the same offense. • A defendant enters a plea of former jeopardy to inform the court that a second prosecution is improper. Cf. DOUBLE JEOPARDY. [Cases: Double Jeopardy $= 132.1.]

former punishment. Military law. The rule that nonjudicial punishment for a minor offense may bar trial by court-martial for the same offense.

formula. [Latin "set form of words"] (17c) 1. Roman law. A written document, prepared by a praetor and forwarded to a judex, identifying the issue to be tried and the judgment to be given by the judex. • It was based on model pleas formulated by the praetor in his edict and adapted by him or other magistrates in civil suits for the benefit of the judex who had to try the issue. These pleas were adapted to the circumstances of the case. The usual parts of a formula were (1) the demonstratio, in which the plaintiff stated the facts of the claim; (2) the intentio, in which the plaintiff specified the relief sought against the defendant; and (3) the condemnatio, in which the judex condemned (usu. to pay the plaintiff a sum) or acquitted the defendant. Pl. formulae (for-my-lee). — Also termed verba concepta (var-ba kan-sep-to).

"The Roman judges were not, as with us, the presiding officers in the administration of law and justice. This was the position of the magistrate, the praetor. When a suit at law was commenced, the parties appeared before the praetor, who made a preliminary examination, not to ascertain the merits of the case, but to find the precise points in controversy. He heard the statements of the plaintiff and the counter-statements of the defendant, and from the two he constructed a formula (as it was called), a brief technical expression of the disputed issues. He then appointed a judex . . . instructing him to investigate the matter, and if he found the facts to be so and so, as recited in the formula, then to condemn the accused party, but, if he did not find them so, to acquit him." James Hadley, Introduction to Roman Law 59-60 (1881). [This quotation describes only the period of formulary procedure, ca. 150 B.C.-A.D. 300. — Ed.]

2. Common-law pleading. A set form of words (such as those appearing in writs) used in judicial proceedings.

formula deal. An agreement between a movie distributor and an independent or affiliated circuit to exhibit a feature movie in all theaters at a specified percentage of the national gross receipts realized by the theaters.

formulae (for-my-lee). [Latin "set form of words"]

Roman law. Model pleas formulated by the praetor in his edict and adapted by him or other magistrates in civil suits for the benefit of the judex who had to try the issue. These pleas were adapted to the circumstances of the case. — Also termed verba concepta (var-ba kon-sep-ta).

foster, adj. (bef. 12c) 1. (Of a relationship) involving parental care given by someone not related by blood or legal adoption <foster home>. 2. (Of a person) giving or receiving parental care to or from someone not related by blood or legal adoption <foster parent> <foster child>.

foster, vb. (12c) To give care to (something or someone); esp., to give parental care to (a child who is not one’s natural or legally adopted child).

fosterage, n. (17c) 1. The act of caring for another’s child. 2. The entrusting of a child to another. 3. The condition of being in the care of another. 4. The act of encouraging or promoting.

foster care. (1876) 1. A federally funded child-welfare program providing substitute care for abused and neglected children who have been removed by court order from their parents’ or guardians’ care or for children voluntarily placed by their parents in the temporary care of the state because of a family crisis. 2. The entrusting of a child to another. 3. The condition of being in the care of another. 4. The act of encouraging or promoting.

long-term foster care. The placing of a child in foster care for extended periods, perhaps even for the child’s entire minority, in lieu of family reunification, termination and adoption, or guardianship. Although most courts do not generally find this arrangement to be a child’s best interests, sometimes it is the only possibility, as when the child, because of age or disability, is unlikely to be adopted or when, although the parent cannot be permanently reunited with the child, limited contact with the parent would serve the child’s best interests. Under the Adoption and Safe Families Act, long-term foster care is the permanent placement of last resort.

founder, n. (14c) 1. A person who founds or establishes; esp., a person who supplies funds for an institution’s future needs. 2. Settlor (1).

founding father. (1914) A prominent figure in the founding of an institution or esp. a country; specif., one who played a leading role in founding the United States of America, esp. in the Revolutionary War and the making of the U.S. Constitution.

founder’s share. (usu. pl.) In England, a share issued to the founder of a company as a part of the consideration for the business. Now rare, a founder’s share participates in profits only if the dividend on ordinary shares has been paid to a specified amount.

founding of an institution or esp. a country; specif., one who played a leading role in founding the United States of America, esp. in the Revolutionary War and the making of the U.S. Constitution.
four, rule of. See RULE OF FOUR.

four corners. (1874) The face of a written instrument. The phrase derives from the ancient custom of putting all instruments (such as contracts) on a single sheet of parchment, as opposed to multiple pages, no matter how long the sheet might be. At common law, this custom prevented people from fraudulently inserting materials into a fully signed agreement. The requirement was that every contract could have only four corners. [Cases: Contracts C=143(1), 147(2); Evidence C=397, 448.]

four-corners rule. (1948) 1. The principle that a document's meaning is to be gathered from the entire document and not from its isolated parts. [Cases: Contracts C=143(3); Evidence C=448.] 2. The principle that no extraneous evidence should be used to interpret an unambiguous document. Cf. PAROL-EVIDENCE RULE. [Cases: Evidence C=448.]

IV-D agency. See CHILD-SUPPORT-ENFORCEMENT AGENCY.

four-folding. Hist. The quadrupling of a property's taxable value for purposes of penalizing a person who falsely underreported the property's true taxable value.

"In the State of Connecticut a number of men are chosen annually by each town, to receive from each inhabitant a list of the taxable property in his possession. This list is required by law; and is made up by the proprietor. The men, who receive it, are from their employment called Listers. If the proprietor gives in a false list, he is punished by having the falsified article increased on the list four-fold. ... We therefore style this punishment 'four-folding.'" 4 Timothy Dwight, Travels in New-England and New-York 284 (1822).

Fourteenth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified in 1868, whose primary provisions effectively apply the Bill of Rights to the states by prohibiting states from denying due process and equal protection and from abridging the privileges and immunities of U.S. citizenship. The amendment also gave Congress the power to enforce these provisions, leading to legislation such as the civil-rights acts. [Cases: Constitutional Law C=2910-2932, 3000-3833, 3840-4841.]

Fourth Amendment. The constitutional amendment, ratified with the Bill of Rights in 1791, prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures and the issuance of warrants without probable cause. See PROBABLE CAUSE. [Cases: Searches and Seizures C=23.]

fourth estate. (1821) The journalistic profession; the news media. The term comes from the British Parliament's reporters' gallery, whose influence was said to equal Parliament's three traditional estates: the Lords Spiritual, the Lords Temporal, and the Commons. (In France, the three estates were the clergy, the nobility, and the commons.)

fourth-sentence remand. See REMAND.

four unities. (1852) The four qualities needed to create a joint tenancy at common law — interest, possession, time, and title. See UNITY (2). [Cases: Joint Tenancy C=1.]
francbordus. See FREE-BORD.

franchise (fran-chiz), n. (14c) 1. The right to vote. — Also termed elective franchise. [Cases: Elections (17) 1/2. The government-confferred right to engage in a specific business or to exercise corporate powers. — Also termed corporate franchise; general franchise. [Cases: Franchises (1–17.)

"When referring to government grants (other than patents, trademarks, and copyrights), the term 'franchise' is often used to connote more substantial rights, whereas the term 'license' connotes lesser rights. Thus, the rights necessary for public utility companies to carry on their operations are generally designated as franchise rights. On the other hand, the rights to construct or to repair, the rights to practice certain professions, and the rights to use or to operate automobiles are generally referred to as licenses."

franchise appurtenant to land. Rare. A franchise that is used in connection with real property and thus is sometimes characterized as real property.

general franchise. A corporation's charter.

special franchise. A right conferred by the government, esp. one given to a public utility, to use property for a public use but for private profit. [Cases: Franchises (1–17.)

3. The sole right granted by the owner of a trademark or tradename to engage in business or to sell a good or service in a certain area.

4. The business or territory controlled by the person or entity that has been granted such a right.

commercial franchise. A franchise using local capital and management by contracting with third parties to operate a facility identified as offering a particular brand of goods or services.

sports franchise. 1. A franchise granted by a professional sports league to field a team in that league. 2. The team itself.

trial franchise. A franchise having an initial term of limited duration, such as one year.

franchise, vb (14c) To grant (to another) the sole right of engaging in a certain business or in a business using a particular trademark in a certain area.

franchise agreement. (1905) The contract between a franchisor and franchisee establishing the terms and conditions of the franchise relationship. — State and federal laws regulate franchise agreements. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation (1–262); Contracts (1–202(1).] franchise appurtenant to land. See FRANCHISE (2).

franchise clause. Insurance. A provision in a casualty insurance policy stating that the insurer will pay a claim only if it is more than a stated amount, and that the insured is responsible for all damages if the claim is under that amount. • Unlike a deductible, which the insured always has to pay, with a franchise clause, once the claim exceeds the stated amount, the insurer pays the entire claim.

franchise court. Hist. A privately held court that (usu.) exists by virtue of a royal grant, with jurisdiction over a variety of matters, depending on the grant and whatever powers the court acquires over time. • In 1274, Edward I abolished many of these feudal courts by forcing the nobility to demonstrate by what authority (quo warranto) they held court. If a lord could not produce a charter reflecting the franchise, the court was abolished. — Also termed courts of the franchise.

"Dispensing justice was profitable. Much revenue could come from the fees and dues, fines and amerceements. This explains the growth of the second class of feudal courts, the Franchise Courts. They too were private courts held by feudal lords. Sometimes their claim to jurisdiction was based on old pre-Conquest grants . . . . But many of them were, in reality, only wrongful usurpations of private jurisdiction by powerful lords. These were put down after the famous Quo Warranto enquiry in the reign of Edward I." W.J.V. Windeyer, Lectures on Legal History 56–57 (2d ed. 1949).

franchisee. One who is granted a franchise.

franchise fee. See FEE (1).

franchiser. See FRANCHISOR.

franchise tax. See TAX.

franchisor. (19c) One who grants a franchise. — Also spelled franchiser.

francus bancus. See FREE BENCH.

francus tenens. See FRANK-TENANT.

frank, n. 1. (cap.) A member of the Germanic people who conquered Gaul in the 6th century. • France received its name from the Franks. 2. A signature, stamp, or mark affixed to mail as a substitute for postage. [Cases: Postal Service (15).] 3. The privilege of sending certain mail free of charge, accorded to certain government officials, such as members of Congress and federal courts. — Also termed (in sense 3) franking privilege. [Cases: United States (12). — frank, vb.
frankalmoin (frangk-al-moyn). [Law French "free alms"] (16c) Hist. A spiritual tenure by which a religious institution held land, usu. with a general duty to pray for the donor. • This tenure differed from the tenure by divine service, which required specific church services, such as a certain number of masses or alms distributions. • Also spelled frankalmoign; frankalmoigne. — Also termed almoign; almoin; free alms; libera eleemosyna. See spiritual tenure under TENURE.

"Frankalmoin, or free alms, was a survival of Anglo-Saxon law, and implied simply an indefinite promise to pray for the soul of the donor: but since it was deemed a tenure by which the land was held, the general doctrine of 'services' was applied. On the other hand, in the case of Divine Service, which was much less frequently met with, the tenant promised a definite number of prayers, a duty which might be enforced in the King's courts." A.K.R. Kiralfy, Potter's Outlines of English Legal History 210 (5th ed. 1958).

frank bank. See free bench.

frank-chase. Hist. Free chase; a person's liberty or right to hunt or log within a certain area. • Others holding land within the frank-chase area were forbidden from hunting or logging in it. See chase.

frank-fee. (1Sc) Hist. Freehold land — land that one held to oneself and one's heirs — exempted from all services except homage; land held other than by ancient demesne or copyhold.

frank ferm. Hist. An estate in land held in socage, the nature of the fee having been changed from knight's service by enfeoffment for certain yearly services. • Also spelled frank-ferme.

franking privilege. See frank (3).

frank-law. Hist. The rights and privileges of a citizen or freeman; specif., the condition of being legally capable of giving an oath (esp. as a juror or witness). See LEGALIS HOMO.

"Frank law ... may be understood from Bracton's description of the consequences of losing it, among which the principal one was, that the parties incurred perpetual infamy, so that they were never afterwards to be admitted to justice. (that is, not worthy of making oath,) nor allowed to give testimony." 1 Alexander M. Burrill, A Law Dictionary and Glossary 657-58 (2d ed. 1867).

frankpledge. (bef. 12c) Hist. A promise given to the sovereign by a group of ten freeholders (a tithing) ensuring the group's good conduct. • The frankpledge was of Saxon origin, but continued after the Norman Conquest. The members of the group were not liable for an injury caused by an offending member, but they did act as bail to ensure that the culprit would appear in court. They were bound to produce a wrongdoer for trial. — Also termed borrow; laugh. See VIEW OF FRANKPLEDGE. Cf. DECENARY.

"Since there was no elaborate group of royal officials, the policing of the country had to be arranged for in a special way. The commonest way was to hold each household responsible for the offenses of any member of it. A further step was taken when, in the time of Cnut, a group of ten men was formed who were responsible for each other, in the sense that every one was security, borh, for the good behavior of the others. This group was called fri-borh, frankpledge, and remained for a long time one of the chief police methods of England." Max Radin, Handbook of Anglo-American Legal History 33-34 (1936).

Franks hearing. (1979) A hearing to determine whether a police officer's affidavit used to obtain a search warrant that yields incriminating evidence was based on false statements by the police officer. Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154, 98 S.Ct. 2674 (1978).

frank-tenant. Hist. A freeholder. — Also termed franscus tenens. See freehold.

frank-tenement. Hist. A free tenement; a freehold. • This term described both the tenure and the estate.

FRAP (frap). abbr. FEDERAL RULES OF APPELLATE PROCEDURE.

frater (fray-tar), n. [Latin] Roman law. A brother.

frater consanguineus (fray-tar kon-sang-gwin-ea-as). A brother or half-brother having the same father.

frater germanus (fray-tar jar-may-nass). A brother having both parents in common.

frater nutricius (fray-tar nyljoo-trish-ee-ea-as). A foster brother who was suckled by the same wet nurse.

frater uterinus (fray-tar yoo-to-ri-nass). A brother or half-brother having the same mother.

fraternal, adj. (1Sc) 1. Of or relating to the relationship of brothers. 2. Of or relating to a fraternity or a fraternal benefit association.

fraternal benefit association. A voluntary organization or society created for its members' mutual aid and benefit rather than for profit, and whose members have a common and worthy cause, objective, or interest. • These associations usu. have a lodge system, a governing body, rituals, and a benefits system for their members. — Also termed fraternal benefit society; fraternity; fraternal lodge; fraternal order. Cf. friendly society. [Cases: Beneficial Associations ◄=1.]

fraternal insurance. See insurance.

fraternal lodge. See fraternal benefit association.

fraternal order. See fraternal benefit association.

fraternal society. See benevolent association under association.

fraternity. See fraternal benefit association.

frater nutricius. See frater.

frater uterinus. See frater.

fratres conjurati (f-ray-treez kon-ja-ray ti). [Latin “sworn brothers”] Hist. Sworn brothers or companions for the defense of their sovereign or for other purposes.

fratriage (fra-treej or f-ray). Hist. 1. A younger brother's portion of his father's estate, received as an inheritance.

fratricide (fra-tri-sid or fray). 1. The killing of one's brother or sister. 2. One who has killed one's brother or sister. Cf. sororicide. — fratricidal, adj.

fraud, n. (14c) 1. A knowing misrepresentation of the truth or concealment of a material fact to induce another to act to his or her detriment. • Fraud is usu. a tort, but in some cases (esp. when the conduct is willful) it may be a crime. — Also termed intentional fraud. [Cases: Fraud ◄=1, 3, 16, 68.] 2. A misrepresentation made recklessly without belief in its truth to induce another person to act. [Cases: Fraud ◄=13(3)]. 3. A tort arising from a knowing misrepresentation, concealment of material fact, or reckless misrepresentation made to induce another to act to his or her detriment. [Cases: Fraud ◄=13(2), 13(3), 16.] 4. Unconscionable dealing; esp., in contract law, the unfair use of the power arising out of the parties' relative positions and resulting in an unconscionable bargain. [Cases: Contracts ◄=1.] — fraudulent, adj.

"The use of the term fraud has been wider and less precise in the chancery than in the common-law courts. This followed necessarily from the remedies which they respectively administered. Common law gave damages for a wrong, and was compelled to define with care the wrong which furnished a cause of action. Equity refused specific performance of a contract, or set aside a transaction, or gave compensation where one party had acted unfairly by the other. Thus 'fraud' at common law is a false statement . . . ; fraud in equity has often been used as meaning unconscientious dealing — 'although, I think, unfortunately,' a great equity lawyer has said." William R. Anson, Principles of the Law of Contract 263 (Arthur L. Corbin ed., 3d Am. ed. 1919).

actual fraud. (17c) A concealment or false representation through a statement or conduct that injures another who relies on it in acting. — Also termed fraud in fact; positive fraud; moral fraud. [Cases: Fraud ◄=3.]

advance-fee fraud. A criminal fraud in which the victim is persuaded by the perpetrator to pay "fees" in anticipation of receiving a much larger benefit that is ultimately never delivered. • The perpetrator usu. claims to have, or to represent someone with, a large sum of money that must be immediately transferred out of a foreign country for some compelling reason, such as to avoid seizure by a government. The criminal promises the victim a portion of the money in return for the victim's agreement to open a bank account in the victim's name. The victim then must pay "upfront fees" to the designated "bank" and others. Although the Internet has become a favorite tool for this fraud, it has been around for years, beginning with handwritten or typed letters and later faxes. Because advance-fee fraud is believed to have originated in Nigeria, it is also termed 419 fraud after the section of the Nigerian penal code designed to punish those who defraud by this method. [Cases: Fraud ◄=68.]

affiliate click fraud. Click fraud committed by a third party who agrees to host the ad in exchange for payment based on the number of clicks. See click fraud.

affinity fraud. A fraud in which the perpetrator tailors the fraud to target members of a particular group united by common traits or interests that produce inherent trust. • The perpetrator often is or pretends to be a member of the group. Investment scams such as Ponzi or pyramid schemes are common forms of affinity fraud. When a religious group is targeted, it is usu. called religious-affinity fraud.

bank fraud. The criminal offense of knowingly executing, or attempting to execute, a scheme or artifice to defraud a financial institution, or to obtain property owned by or under the control of a financial institution, by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises. 18 USCA § 1344. [Cases: Banks and Banking ◄=509.10, 509.25.]

bankruptcy fraud. (1815) A fraudulent act connected to a bankruptcy case; esp., any of several proscribed acts performed knowingly and fraudulently in a bankruptcy case, such as concealing assets or destroying, withholding, or falsifying documents in an effort to defeat bankruptcy-code provisions. See 18 USCA § 152. — Also termed criminal bankruptcy; bankruptcy crime. [Cases: Bankruptcy ◄=3861.]

civil fraud. (18c) 1. FRAUD (3). 2. Tax. An intentional — but not willful — evasion of taxes. • The distinction between an intentional (i.e., civil) and willful (i.e., criminal) fraud is not always clear, but civil fraud carries only a monetary, noncriminal penalty. Cf. criminal fraud; tax evasion. [Cases: Internal Revenue ◄=5218; Taxation ◄=3563.]

actual fraud. (17c) A concealment or false representation through a statement or conduct that injures another who relies on it in acting. — Also termed fraud in fact; positive fraud; moral fraud. [Cases: Fraud ◄=3.]

click fraud. A scheme in which a person or robot repeatedly clicks on a merchant's pay-per-click advertisement on a website for purposes other than viewing the website or making a purchase. [Cases: Telecommunications C=1341.]

collateral fraud. See extrinsic fraud (1).

common-law fraud. See promissory fraud.

competitor click fraud. Click fraud committed by a business's competitor in order to increase the amount of money the advertising merchant must pay to the site hosting the ad. See click fraud.

constructive fraud. (18c) 1. Unintentional deception or misrepresentation that causes injury to another. — Also termed legal fraud; fraud in contemplation of law; equitable fraud; fraud in equity. 2. See fraud in law. [Cases: Fraud C=5.]

"In equity law the term fraud has a wider sense, and includes all acts, omissions, or concealments by which one person obtains an advantage against conscience over another, or which equity or public policy forbids as being to another's prejudice: as acts in violation of trust and confidence. This is often called constructive, legal, or equitable fraud, or fraud in equity." Encyclopedia of Criminology 175 (Vernon C. Branham & Samuel B. Kutash eds., 1949), s.v. "Fraud."

criminal fraud. (18c) Fraud that has been made illegal by statute and that subjects the offender to criminal penalties such as fines and imprisonment. • An example is the willful evasion of taxes accomplished by filing a fraudulent tax return. Cf. civil fraud; larceny by trick under larceny. [Cases: Internal Revenue C=5263, 20; Taxation C=3563.]

equitable fraud. See constructive fraud (1).

extrinsic fraud. (1851) 1. Deception that is collateral to the issues being considered in the case; intentional misrepresentation or deceptive behavior outside the transaction itself (whether a contract or a lawsuit), depriving one party of informed consent or full participation. • For example, a person might engage in extrinsic fraud by convincing a litigant not to hire counsel or answer by dishonestly saying the matter will not be pursued. — Also termed collateral fraud. 2. Deception that prevents a person from knowing about or asserting certain rights. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=2654; Judgment C=375, 443(1).]

419 fraud. See advance-fee fraud.

fraud in contemplation of law. See constructive fraud (1).

fraud in equity. See constructive fraud (1).

fraud in fact. See actual fraud.

fraud in law. (17c) Fraud that is presumed under the circumstances, as when a debtor transfers assets and thereby impairs creditors' efforts to collect sums due. — Also termed constructive fraud.

fraud in the execution. See fraud in the factum.

fraud in the factum. (1848) Fraud occurring when a legal instrument as actually executed differs from the one intended for execution by the person who executes it, or when the instrument may have had no legal existence. • Compared to fraud in the inducement, fraud in the factum occurs only rarely, as when a blind person signs a mortgage when misleadingly told that the paper is just a letter. — Also termed fraud in the execution; fraud in the making. Cf. fraud in the inducement. [Cases: Contracts C=94(1).]

fraud in the inducement. (1831) Fraud occurring when a misrepresentation leads another to enter into a transaction with a false impression of the risks, duties, or obligations involved; an intentional misrepresentation of a material risk or duty reasonably relied on, thereby injuring the other party without vitiating the contract itself, esp. about a fact relating to value. — Also termed fraud in the procurement. Cf. fraud in the factum. [Cases: Contracts C=94(1); Fraud C=3, 24.] fraud in the making. See fraud in the factum.

fraud in the procurement. See fraud in the inducement.

fraud on the community. Family law. In a community-property state, the deliberate hiding or fraudulent transfer of community assets before a divorce or death for the purpose of preventing the other spouse from claiming a half-interest ownership in the property. [Cases: Husband and Wife C=265.]

fraud on the court. (1810) In a judicial proceeding, a lawyer's or party's misconduct so serious that it undermines or is intended to undermine the integrity of the proceeding. • Examples are bribery of a juror and introduction of fabricated evidence. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C=2654; Judgment C=372, 440.]

fraud on the market. 1. Fraud occurring when an issuer of securities gives out misinformation that affects the market price of stock, the result being that people who buy or sell are effectively misled even though they did not rely on the statement itself or anything derived from it other than the market price. [Cases: Securities Regulation C=60, 25.] 2. The securities-law claim based on such fraud. See FRAUD-ON-THE-MARKET PRINCIPLE.

fraud on the Patent Office. Patents. A defense in a patent-infringement action, attacking the validity of the patent on the grounds that the patentee gave the examiner false or misleading information or withheld relevant information that the examiner would have considered important in considering patentability. • The scope of prohibited acts is wider than that covered by common-law fraud, and today the defense is generally called "inequitable conduct before the PTO." If the defense is established, the entire patent is rendered unenforceable. See defense of inequitable conduct under defense (1). [Cases: Patents C=97.] hidden fraud. See fraudulent concealment under CONCEALMENT.

insurance fraud. Fraud committed against an insurer, as when an insured lies on a policy application or fabricates a claim.

intrinsic fraud. (1832) Deception that pertains to an issue involved in an original action. • Examples include the use of fabricated evidence, a false return of service, perjured testimony, and false receipts or other commercial documents. [Cases: Judgment 373, 441.]

legal fraud. See constructive fraud (1).

long-term fraud. The act of obtaining goods or money on credit by falsely posing as an established business and having no intent to pay for the goods or repay the loan.

mail fraud. (1918) An act of fraud using the U.S. Postal Service, as in making false representations through the mail to obtain an economic advantage. 18 USCA §§ 1341-1347. [Cases: Postal Service 35.]

moral fraud. See actual fraud.

positive fraud. See actual fraud.

promissory fraud. (1934) A promise to perform made when the promisor had no intention of performing the promise. — Also termed common-law fraud. [Cases: Fraud 12.]

religion-affinity fraud. See affinity fraud.

tax fraud. See tax evasion.

wire fraud. (1955) An act of fraud using electronic communications, as by making false representations on the telephone to obtain money. • The federal Wire Fraud Act provides that any artifice to defraud by means of wire or other electronic communications (such as radio or television) in foreign or interstate commerce is a crime. 18 USCA § 1343. [Cases: Telecommunications 1014.]

fraud, badge of. See badge of fraud.

fraudare (fraw-dair-ee), vb. [Latin] Roman law. To defraud.

fraud by hindsight. Hist. Securities. A claim of fraud based on the assumption that a corporation deliberately misled investors by issuing optimistic financial statements or forecasts and later reporting worse-than-expected results. Suits for fraud by hindsight were common in the early 1990s. Congress eliminated this claim in the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act of 1995. 15 USCA §§ 78u-4(b). [Cases: Securities Regulation 60.25.]

frauds, statute of. See statute of frauds.

fraudulent act. Conduct involving bad faith, dishonesty, a lack of integrity, or moral turpitude. — Also termed dishonest act, fraudulent or dishonest act.

fraudulent claim. A false insurance claim. See FRAUD.

fraudulent concealment. See CONCEALMENT.

fraudulent-concealment rule. See CONCEALMENT RULE.

fraudulent conversion. See conversion (2).

fraudulent conveyance. (17C) 1. A transfer of property for little or no consideration, made for the purpose of hindering or delaying a creditor by putting the property beyond the creditor's reach; a transaction by which the owner of real or personal property seeks to place the property beyond the reach of creditors. — Also termed fraud on creditors. [Cases: Fraudulent Conveyances 1.]

“With respect to the general power which is exercisable by deed, it seems that the principle that the donee's creditors cannot reach the property subject to the power exercised by the donee after the donee's creditors will be able to reach the property subject to the exercise of the power will have application only to the so-called fraudulent conveyance. That is to say, if the owned assets of the donee after the donative inter vivos exercise are sufficient to satisfy the creditors, then the exercise of the power will not subject the appointive property to the claims of the creditors; if, on the other hand, the owned assets of the donee are inadequate to satisfy creditors' claims after the exercise of the power, then the transfer resulting from the exercise is likely to fall into the category of the fraudulent conveyance and the creditors will be able to reach the appointive property in the hands of the appointee.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 173 (2d ed. 1984).

2. Bankruptcy. A prebankruptcy transfer or obligation made or incurred by a debtor for little or no consideration or with the actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor. • A bankruptcy trustee may recover community assets before a divorce or death for the purpose of preventing the other spouse from claiming a half-interest ownership in the property.
such a conveyance from the transferee if the requirements of 11 USCA § 548 are met. — Also termed fraudulent transfer. Cf. preferential transfer. [Cases: Bankruptcy C=2641-2651.]

free, adj. (bft. 12c) 1. Having legal and political rights; enjoying political and civil liberty  . 2. Not subject to the constraint or domination of another; enjoying personal freedom; emancipated . 3. Characterized by choice, rather than by compulsion or constraint <free will>. 4. Unburdened <the land was free of any encumbrances>. 5. Not confined by force or restraint <free from prison>. 6. Unrestricted and unregulated <free trade>. 7. Costing nothing; gratuitous <free tickets to the game>. — freely, adv.

free, vb. 1. To liberate. 2. To remove (a person, animal, or thing) from a constraint or burden.

free agency, n. (ca. 1955) A professional athlete’s ability to negotiate an employment contract with any team in the league, rather than being confined to the league’s collective-bargaining system. • Free agency is usu. granted to veteran players who have been in the league for a certain number of years. Cf. reserve clause. — free agent, n.

free alms. See frankalmoine.

free alongside ship. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must clear the goods for export, and deliver the goods to the wharf beside the buyer’s chosen vessel. • The seller’s delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the goods are placed on the wharf beside the vessel. The buyer is responsible for all costs of carriage. This term is used only when goods are transported by sea or inland waterway. UCC § 2-319. — Abbr. FAS. Cf. free on board; delivered ex quay. [Cases: Sales C=201(4).] free and clear, adj. Unencumbered by any liens; marketable <free and clear title>.

free and common socage. See free socage under socage.

free and equal, adj. (Of an election) conducted so that the electorate has a reasonable opportunity to vote, with each vote given the same effect. [Cases: Elections C=1.]

free bench. Hist. A widow’s (and occasionally a widower’s) interest in the deceased spouse’s estate. • Free bench gave the surviving spouse a half interest in the estate until death or remarriage. — Also termed francus bancus; frank bank; liber bancus.

“The bench in question was, we may guess . . . a bench at the fireside. The surviving spouse has in time past been allowed to remain in the house along with the children. In the days when families kept together, the right of the widower or widow to remain at the fireside may have borne a somewhat indefinite character . . . . By way of ‘free bench’ the surviving spouse now has the enjoyment of one-half of the land until death or second marriage, whether there has ever been a child of the marriage or no.” 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 419 (2d ed. 1899).

free-bord. (17c) Hist. 1. A small strip of land (usu. 2½ feet wide and lying just outside a fence) that the owner of the fenced property was allowed to claim and use. 2. The right of claiming that quantity of land. — Also spelled free bord; free bord; freeboard. — Also termed franchise.

free carrier. A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must clear the goods for export and deliver them to the buyer’s chosen carrier at a named place. • The seller’s delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the goods are loaded on the collecting vehicle or otherwise placed at the carrier’s disposal. The buyer is responsible for all costs of carriage. There are no restrictions on the buyer’s choice of carrier. — Abbr. FCA.

free chapel. Hist. Eccles. law. A church founded by the Crown (or by a person under royal grant) and not subject to the bishop’s jurisdiction.
freedom of assembly. See RIGHT OF ASSEMBLY.

freedom of association. (1889) The right to join with others in a common undertaking that would be lawful if pursued individually. • This right is protected by the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The government may not prohibit outsiders from joining an association, but the insiders do not necessarily have a right to exclude others. Cf. RIGHT OF ASSEMBLY. [Cases: Abortion and Birth Control C= 128.]

freedom of assembly. See RIGHT OF ASSEMBLY.

freedom of association. (1889) The right to join with others in a common undertaking that would be lawful if pursued individually. • This right is protected by the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The government may not prohibit outsiders from joining an association, but the insiders do not necessarily have a right to exclude others. Cf. RIGHT OF ASSEMBLY. [Cases: Abortion and Birth Control C= 128.]

freedom of association. The constitutional right of an individual to associate with others, without undue government interference, for the purpose of engaging in activities protected by the First Amendment, such as speech, assembly, and the exercise of religion.

freedom of intimate association. The constitutional right of privacy to form and preserve certain intimate human relationships without intrusion by the state because the relationships safeguard individual freedom. • The group relationships protected by the right to freedom of intimate association are familial in nature and are characterized by deep attachments, a high degree of commitment, and the sharing of distinctly personal aspects of life. The exclusion of others is an essential characteristic of these relationships.

freedom of choice. (1817) 1. The liberty embodied in the exercise of one's rights. 2. The parents' opportunity to select a school for their child in a unitary, integrated school system that is devoid of de jure segregation. 3. The liberty to exercise one's right of privacy, esp. the right to have an abortion. — Also termed right to choose: choice. [Cases: Abortion and Birth Control C= 102.]

freedom of contract. (1879) The doctrine that people have the right to bind themselves legally; a judicial concept that contracts are based on mutual agreement and free choice, and thus should not be hampered by external control such as governmental interference. • This is the principle that people are able to fashion their relations by private agreements, esp. as opposed to the assigned roles of the feudal system. As Maine famously said, ",[T]he movement of progressive societies has been a movement from Status to Contract." Henry Sumner Maine, Ancient Law 165 (1864). — Also termed liberty of contract; autonomy of the parties. [Cases: Constitutional Law C= 1118.]

freedom of expression. (1877) The freedom of speech, press, assembly, or religion as guaranteed by the First Amendment; the prohibition of governmental interference with those freedoms. Cf. FREEDOM OF SPEECH. [Cases: Constitutional Law C= 1290–1428, 1430, 1490–2304.] freedom of Information Act. The federal statute that establishes guidelines for public disclosure of documents and materials created and held by federal agencies. 5 USCA § 552. • The basic purpose of the statute, or of a state statute modeled after it, is to give the public access to official information so that the public will be better informed and the government will be more accountable for its actions. — Abbr. FOIA. See REVERSE FOIA SUIT. [Cases: Records C= 50–68.] freedom of intimate association. See FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION.

freedom of petition. See RIGHT TO PETITION.

freedom of religion. (16c) The right to adhere to any form of religion or none, to practice or abstain from practicing religious beliefs, and to be free from governmental interference with or promotion of religion, as guaranteed by the First Amendment and Article VI, § 3 of the U.S. Constitution. [Cases: Constitutional Law C= 1290–1428.]

freedom of speech. (17c) The right to express one's thoughts and opinions without governmental restriction, as guaranteed by the First Amendment. — Also termed liberty of speech. Cf. FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION. [Cases: Constitutional Law C= 1490–2304.]

Freedom of Speech Clause. See SPEECH CLAUSE.
freedom of the press. (17c) The right to print and publish materials without governmental intervention, as guaranteed by the First Amendment. — Also termed liberty of the press. [Cases: Constitutional Law ☐2070–2081.]

“Freedom of the press’ has less significance than meets the eye. It is true, of course, that the First Amendment specifically guarantees freedom of the press as well as free speech, and the media often ascribe the freedoms they enjoy to the Press Clause. Even the Supreme Court occasionally emits rhetoric that implies as much. But as a matter of positive law, the Press Clause actually plays a rather minor role in protecting the freedom of the press. Most of the freedoms the press receives from the First Amendment are no different from the freedoms everyone enjoys under the Speech Clause. The press is protected from most government censorship, libel judgments, and prior restraints not because it is the press but because the Speech Clause protects all of us from those threats.” David A. Anderson, Freedom of the Press, 80 Texas L. Rev. 429, 430 (2002).

freedom of the seas. Int’l law. The principle that the seas beyond territorial waters are not subject to any country’s control. • Ships on the high seas are subject only to the jurisdiction of the country whose flag they fly, except in cases of piracy, hijacking, hot pursuit from territorial waters, slave trading, and certain rights of approach by warships. — Also termed mare liberum. [Cases: International Law ☐77.]

freedom-to-create statute. Patents. A law restricting an employer’s ability to require employees to assign to the employer all rights to their inventions, even those independently developed. [Cases: Labor and Employment ☐309.]

freedom-to-operate search. See infringement search.

free election. See election (3).

free enterprise. (1890) A private and consensual system of production and distribution, usu. conducted for a profit in a competitive environment that is relatively free of governmental interference. See capitalism.

free entry, egress, and regress (ee-gres / ree-gres). Hist. A person’s right to go on land as often as reasonably necessary. • A tenant could go on land to gather crops still growing after the tenancy expired.

Free Exercise Clause. (1950) The constitutional provision (U.S. Const. amend. 1) prohibiting the government from interfering in people’s religious practices or forms of worship. — Also termed Exercise Clause. Cf. establishment clause. [Cases: Constitutional Law ☐1302.]

free fishery. See fishery (1).

free-gas clause. Oil & gas. A provision in an oil-and-gas lease entitling the lessor or the surface owner to use gas produced from the leased property without charge. • Used commonly in colder states, free-gas clauses usu. limit how the gas may be used (e.g., domestic heating and light), how much gas may be used (e.g., not more than 300 MCF per year), or both. [Cases: Mines and Minerals ☐79.5.]

freehold, n. (15c) 1. An estate in land held in fee simple, in fee tail, or for term of life; any real-property interest that is or may become possessory. • At common law, these estates were all created by enfeoffment with livery of seisin. [Cases: Estates in Property ☐4–7, 12.] 2. The tenure by which such an estate is held. — Also termed freehold estate; estate in freehold; freehold interest; frantkenlement; liberum tenementum. Cf. leasehold.

determinable freehold. See determinable estate under estate (4).

movable freehold. (18c) The land a seashore owner acquires or loses as water recedes or approaches. [Cases: Navigable Waters ☐44.]

perpetual freehold. An estate given to a grantee for life, and then successively to the grantee’s heirs for life. • The effect of this type of freehold was to keep land within a family in perpetuity, much like a fee tail.

“It took the form of a grant ‘to A for life, remainder to A’s son for life, remainder to that son’s son for life’, and so on ad infinitum. Such a limitation, if valid, would have been an effective substitute for the fee tail. The courts, however, set their face against this ‘perpetual freehold’ (as it was sometimes termed), and in Lovelace v. Lovelace (1858) it was held that remainders which did not vest before the determination of the first life estate would fail ex post facto. Subsequently a number of other, not entirely convincing, reasons were found for invalidating perpetual freeholds, ultimately culminating in what is sometimes termed the ‘old’ rule against perpetuities, but, more commonly, the rule in Whitby v. Mitchell, taking its name from the case which marked its emphatic reiteration.” Peter Butt, Land Law 136 (2d ed. 1988).

freeholder. (15c) Hist. One who possesses a freehold.

freeholder’s court baron. See court baron.

freehold estate. See freehold.

freehold interest. See freehold.

freehold land society. (usu. pl.) Hist. A society in England created to enable mechanics, artisans, and other workers to buy at the lowest possible price freehold land with a sufficient yearly value to entitle the owner to the right to vote in the county in which the land was located.

free ice. Hist. Ice in navigable streams that does not belong to the adjacent riparian owner or to another with the right to appropriate it, but that belongs to the person who first appropriates it.

free law. Hist. The civil rights enjoyed by a freeman (as opposed to a serf). • Free law could be forfeited if the freeman was convicted of treason or an infamous crime.

freeman. (bef. 12c) 1. A person who possesses and enjoys all the civil and political rights belonging to the people under a free government. 2. A person who is not a slave. 3. Hist. A member of a municipal corporation (a city or borough) who possesses full civic rights, esp. the right to vote. 4. Hist. A freeholder. Cf. villein. 5. Hist. An allodial landowner. Cf. vassal. — Also written free man.

Freeman–Walter–Abele test. Patents. An outmoded two-step judicial test for determining whether a claimed invention is an unpatentable mathematical algorithm.

- The test looks first to whether an algorithm is explicit or inherent in the claim, and second to whether a patent would wholly preempt others from using the algorithm. In re Freeman, 573 F.2d 1237 (CCPA 1978); In re Walter, 618 F.2d 758 (CCPA 1980); In re Abele, 684 F.2d 902 (CCPA 1982). The Federal Circuit has said the test has "little, if any, applicability" after State St. Bank & Trust Co. v. Signature Fin. Group, 149 F.3d 1368 (Fed. Cir. 1998). [Cases: Patents C:7:6.]

free market. See open market under market.

free of all average. Maritime law. Insurance that covers a total loss only. — Abbr. FAA.

free on board. (ca. 1924) A mercantile-contract term allocating the rights and duties of the buyer and the seller of goods with respect to delivery, payment, and risk of loss, whereby the seller must clear the goods for export, and the buyer must arrange for transportation.

- The seller's delivery is complete (and the risk of loss passes to the buyer) when the goods pass the transporter's tail. The buyer is responsible for all costs of carriage. UCC § 2.319. — Abbr. FOB. Cf. free alongside ship; delivered ex ship. [Cases: Sales C:7:7(2).]

  "In an F.O.B. ('free on board') contract, the goods must be delivered on board by the seller, free of expense to the purchaser, and they are not at the latter's risk until actually delivered on board, when the property in them passes to him. The seller must also give the buyer sufficient notice to enable him to insure against loss during the sea transit. The buyer, on the other hand, must name a ship or authorize the seller to select one. The seller cannot sue for the price until the goods are loaded, and if his inability to load was caused by the buyer's failure to name an effective ship, his only remedy lies in damages. Similarly, F.O.R. means 'free on rail.'" 2 E.w. Chance, Principles of Mercantile Law 86–87 (P.W. French ed., 10th ed. 1951).

FOB destination. A mercantile term denoting that the seller is required to pay the freight charges as far as the buyer's named destination.

FOB shipping. A mercantile term denoting that the seller is required to bear the risk of placing the goods on a carrier. [Cases: Sales C:7:20(4).] free port. See port.

free ride. (19c) A benefit obtained without paying a fair price. — For example, a competitor who used aerial photographs of a plant-construction site to discover secret manufacturing techniques was judicially criticized for getting a free ride, in contrast to others who might spend time and effort legally reverse-engineering the same techniques.

free rider. One who obtains an economic benefit at another's expense without contributing to it. — Also written freerider.

free seas. See sea.

free socage. See socage. fresh complaint. (1853) A reasonably prompt lodging of a fresh, reasonable complaint. (The theory that a sexual-assault victim's credibility is bolstered if the victim reports the assault soon after it occurs. • Most courts no longer recognize this theory. [Cases: Rape C=48(1)-49, 49.2.] fresh disseisin. See disseisin.

fresh fine. See fine (5).

fresh force. Hist. Force, such as disseisin or defacement, newly done. • This term refers to force used in a town, and for which a remedy (the Assize of Fresh Force) existed. See assize of fresh force under assize (8). dead freight. The amount paid by a shipper to a shipowner for the ship's unused cargo space. [Cases: Carriers C=189; Shipping C=144.]

freight absorption. See absorption (9).

freight forwarder. Maritime law. A person or company whose business is to receive and ship goods for others. • A freight forwarder may be an agent of the cargo's owner or of the carrier, or may be an independent contractor acting as a principal and assuming the carrier's responsibility for delivering the cargo. — Also termed third-party logistical service provider; forwarding agent. [Cases: Carriers C=178; Shipping C=112.]

freight rate. See rate.

friendly amendment. See amendment (3).

friendly fire. (1976) 1. A fire burning where it is intended to burn, yet capable of causing unintended damage. 2. Military or police gunfire that injures one's own side.

friendly-parent law. A statute that requires or allows a judge to consider as a factor in awarding custody the extent to which one parent encourages or thwarts the child's relationship with the other parent.

friendly-parent principle. Family law. The theory that if one parent is more likely to support the child's relationship with the other parent after a divorce is granted, then that more supportive parent should be awarded custody. • This theory has been criticized as fundamentally flawed because (1) a court may not consider the legitimate fears and concerns that motivate a parent's "unfriendly" behavior, and (2) the theory's simplicity discourages a parent from revealing anything negative about the other parent to the child, even if relevant to the child's safety, for fear of being viewed as too hostile. — Also termed friendly-parent doctrine; friendly-parent paradigm.

friendly society. (18c) In Britain, a voluntary association, supported by subscriptions or contributions, for the purpose of providing financial relief to ill members and to their widows and children upon death. • Friendly societies are regulated by statute. See benevolent association under association. Cf. fraternal benefit association.

friendly subpoena. See subpoena.
friendly suit. (18c) A lawsuit in which all the parties have agreed beforehand to allow a court to resolve the issues. • Friendly suits are often filed by settling parties who wish to have a judgment entered.

friendly suitor. See white knight.

friendly takeover. See takeover.

friend of the court. (1816) 1. AMICUS CURIAE. 2. In some jurisdictions, an official who investigates and advises the court in domestic-relations cases involving minors. • The friend of the court may also help enforce court orders in those cases. [Cases: Child Custody C=417, 421, 613, 616; Infants C=208.]

friend-of-the-court brief. See amicus brief under brief.

fringe benefit. See benefit.

frivolous defense. See defense (4).

frivolous, adj. (15c) Lacking a legal basis or legal merit; not serious; not reasonably purposeful .

frivolous appeal. See appeal.

frivolous claim. See claim (4).

frivolous defense. See defense (1).

frivolous suit. See suit.

FRM. See fixed-rate mortgage under mortgage.

frolic (frol-ik), n. Torts. An employee's significant deviation from the employer's business for personal reasons. • A frolic is outside the scope of employment, and thus the employer is not vicariously liable for the employee's actions. Cf. detour. [Cases: Labor and Employment C=3061(1).]

front, n. (14c) 1. The side or part of a building or lot that is open to view, that is the principal entrance, or that faces out to the open (as to a lake or ocean); the foremost part of something <the property's front was its most valuable attribute>. 2. A person or group that serves to conceal the true identity or activity of the person or group in control <the political party was a front for the terrorist group>. 3. A political association similar to a party <political front>.

frontage (fran-ij), n. (17c) 1. The part of land abutting a street or highway or lying between a building's front and a street or highway <the property's value was so low because of its narrow frontage>. 2. The linear distance of a frontage <the lot's frontage was 90 feet>.

frontage assessment. See assessment.

frontager (fran-i-er), n. (17c) A person owning or occupying land that abuts a highway, river, seashore, or the like.

front-end load. See loan fund under mutual fund.

front-end money. See seed money.

front foot. (1863) A measurement used to calculate a frontage assessment. — Also termed abutting foot. [Cases: Municipal Corporations C=469.]

front-foot rule. (1872) The principle that an improvement cost is to be apportioned among several properties in proportion to their frontage, without regard to the benefits conferred on each property. — Also termed front-foot plan. [Cases: Municipal Corporations C=469.]

frontier. For trade purposes, an international boundary.

front-running, n. Securities. A broker's or analyst's use of nonpublic information to acquire securities or enter into options or futures contracts for his or her own benefit, knowing that when the information becomes public, the price of the securities will change in a predictable manner. • This practice is illegal. Front-running can occur in many ways. For example, a broker or analyst who works for a brokerage firm may buy shares in a company that the firm is about to recommend as a strong buy or in which the firm is planning to buy a large block of shares. See insider trading.

front wages. See wage.

frottoage. (ca. 1935) Sexual stimulation by rubbing the genitals against another person. • This may be accomplished without removing clothing. When a child is involved, it is a form of sexual abuse.

frozen account. See blocked account under account.

frozen asset. See asset.

frozen deposit. See deposit (2).

FRTIB. abbr. FEDERAL RETIREMENT THRIFT INVESTMENT BOARD.

fructarius (fruk-tu-ree-ee), n. (Latin “one entitled to fruits”) 1. Roman & civil law. One having the usufruct of a thing (as of land and animals); a usufructuary. See usufructuary. 2. Hist. A lessee. Pl. fructarius.

fructus (fruk-tus), n. (Latin “fruits”) 1. Roman & civil law. The natural produce of land and animals; the profit or increase from land and animals. • The owner of the land or animals acquired ownership by separatio, the separation of the fruit from the parent body. A bona fide possessor or an emphyteuta also acquired ownership by separatio, which allowed a nonowner to claim title from a thief. But in Justinian's law, a bona fide possessor had to account to a successful claimant for ownership for the principal thing and any unconsumed fruits. A tenant or usufructuary acquired title only by perception, and cannot claim title from a thief. See perception. Cf. fructus cíviles. 2. Usufructuary. Pl. fructus.
fructus (frak-tas sa-vy-leez). [Latin "civil fruits"] Roman & civil law. Income (such as rent or interest) that one receives from another for the use or enjoyment of a thing, esp. real property or loaned money. • In Roman law, fructus included both minerals and the earnings of slaves.

fructus fundi (frak-tas fan-di). [Latin "land fruits"] The fruits or produce of land.

fructus legis (frak-tas lee-jis). [Latin "fruits of the law"] The proceeds of judgment or execution. [Cases: Execution C=>322.]

fructus naturales (frak-tas nach-a-raylee-lee-zeez). [Latin "natural fruits"] The natural produce of land or plants and the offspring of animals. • Fructus naturales are considered part of the real property.

fructus pecudum (frak-tas pek-yah-dam). [Latin "fruits of the herd"] The produce or increase of flocks or herds.

fructus pendentes (frak-tas pen-den-teez). [Latin "hanging fruits"] Fruits not yet severed or gathered; fruits united with that which produces them.

fructus percepti (frak-tas par-sep-tt). [Latin "gathered fruits"] Roman & civil law. Fruits that have been gathered.

fructus rei alienae (frak-tas ree-ee-lay-nee or al-ee). [Latin "fruits of another's property"] The fruits of another's property; fruits taken from another's estate.

fructus separati (frak-tas sep-ay-ray-ti). [Latin "separated fruits"] Roman & civil law. The produce of a thing after being separated from it, and so becoming in law "fruits."

fructus stantes (frak-tas stan-teez). [Latin "standing fruits"] Fruits that have not yet been severed from the stalk or stem.

fructum perception (frak-choo-am par-sep-shy-ee-oh). [Latin] Roman & civil law. The rightful taking of the produce of property by a person who does not own the property.

fruges (froo-jeez). [Latin "fruits" or "crops"] Roman & civil law. Edible produce or crops; esculents.

fruit. (14c) 1. The produce or product of something (as of land or property). 2. Civil law. Income or goods derived or produced from property without a diminution of the property's inherent value.

civil fruit. Civil law. Revenue derived from a thing by operation of law or by reason of a juridical act, such as lease or interest payments, or certain corporate distributions. La. Civ. Code art. 551. See FRUCTUS CIVILES.

natural fruit. Civil law. A product of the land or of animals. • Examples are crops and eggs. La. Civ. Code art. 2317. See FRUCTUS NATURALES.

3. Something (such as evidence) obtained during an activity or operation <the fruit of the officer's search>. See FRUIT-OF-THE-POISONOUS-TREE DOCTRINE.

fruit-and-the-tree doctrine. (1979) Tax. The rule that an individual who earns income cannot assign that income to another person to avoid taxation.

fruit-of-the-poisonous-tree doctrine. (1948) Criminal procedure. The rule that evidence derived from an illegal search, arrest, or interrogation is inadmissible because the evidence (the "fruit") was tainted by the illegality (the "poisonous tree"). • Under this doctrine, for example, a murder weapon is inadmissible if the map showing its location and used to find it was seized during an illegal search. — Also termed fruits doctrine. See exclusionary rule; attenuation doctrine; independent-source rule; inevitable-discovery rule. [Cases: Criminal Law C=>394.1(3)].

fruits of a crime. The proceeds acquired through criminal acts. [Cases: Criminal Law C=>1221.]

frustration, n. (16c) 1. The prevention or hindering of the attainment of a goal, such as contractual performance.

commercial frustration. (1918) An excuse for a party's nonperformance because of some unforeseeable and uncontrollable circumstance. • Also termed economic frustration. [Cases: Contracts C=>309.1(1)] self-induced frustration. (1926) A breach of contract caused by one party's action that prevents the performance. • The phrase is something of a misnomer, since self-induced frustration is not really a type of frustration at all but is instead a breach of contract.

temporary frustration. (1950) An occurrence that prevents performance and legally suspends the duty to perform for the duration of the event. • If the burden or circumstance is substantially different after the event, then the duty may be discharged.

2. Contracts. The doctrine that if a party's principal purpose is substantially frustrated by unanticipated changed circumstances, that party's duties are discharged and the contract is considered terminated. • Also termed frustration of purpose. Cf. impossibility (4); impracticability; mistake. [Cases: Contracts C=>309.1] — frustrate, vb.

Frye test. The defunct federal common-law rule of evidence on the admissibility of scientific evidence. • It required that the tests or procedures must have gained general acceptance in their particular field. Frye v. United States, 293 F. 1013 (D.C. Cir. 1923). In Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 113 S.Ct. 2786 (1993), the Supreme Court held that scientific evidence must meet the requirements of the Federal Rules of Evidence, not the Frye test, to be

fuero (fyoo-er-oh). Spanish law. 1. A forum; court. 2. The territory in which a court has the power to act. 3. A privilege enjoyed by some but not others. 4. A custom having the force of law. 5. Hist. A collection of local, usu. customary, laws.

Fuero Juzgo (hooz-goh). Hist. A 7th-century Visigothic code that was revised and incorporated into the laws of 13th-century Spain. The code contains the earliest known laws of community property. In the 18th century, much of the Fuero Juzgo was incorporated into the Code Napoleon. In the 19th century, vestiges of the Fuero Juzgo were incorporated into the Spanish Civil Code.

Fuero Real (ray-ahl). Hist. A collection of the ancient customs of Castile, collected by order of Alfonse X in 1255 to produce a uniform legal code, much of which was incorporated into local fueros. Louisiana's system of acquets and gains was adapted from the Fuero Real.

fugam fecit (fyoo-gam fee-sit). [Law Latin] Hist. He fled; he has made flight. When a jury found this finding in a felony or treason trial, the defendant's property was subject to forfeiture.

fundamental-miscarriage-of-justice exception. The doctrine allowing a federal court in a habeas corpus proceeding to address a claim of constitutional error that, although ordinarily reviewable, is subject to review because of a state-court procedural default that rendered the proceedings basically unfair. • For the exception to apply, among other things, the petitioner must show by a preponderance of the evidence that constitutional error resulted in the conviction of one who is actually innocent. If the defaulted claim applies only to sentencing, the exception permits review of the claim if the petitioner shows by clear and convincing evidence that, but for the constitutional error, no reasonable judge or jury would have imposed the sentence that the petitioner received. [Cases: Habeas Corpus ⩾ 401.]

fundamental right. (17c) 1. A right derived from natural or fundamental law. 2. Constitutional law. A significant component of liberty, encroachments of which are rigorously tested by courts to ascertain the soundness of purported governmental justifications. • A fundamental right triggers strict scrutiny to determine whether the law violates the Due Process Clause or the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment. As enunciated by the Supreme Court, fundamental rights include voting, interstate travel, and various aspects of privacy (such as marriage and contraception rights). — Also termed fundamental interest. See STRICT SCRUTINY. Cf. SUSPECT CLASSIFICATION. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⩾ 3062, 3901.] furthor assurance. See assurance.

furthor-exploration covenant. Oil & gas. In an oil-and-gas lease, an implied promise that once production has been obtained from the leased property, the lessee will continue to explore other parts of the property and other formations under it. • Some jurisdictions hold that the covenant for further exploration does not exist independently of the covenant for reasonable development. See also REASONABLE-DEVELOPMENT COVENANT; REASONABLY-PRUDENT-OPERATOR STANDARD. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 78.1(7).]

furthor instruction. See additional instruction under JURY INSTRUCTION.

furtum (far-tam), n. [Latin “theft”] Roman law. 1. The offense of stealing movable property. • Under Roman law, furtum included not only the taking of another’s property, but any handling of the property done with the intent of profiting by it. Furtum was not only a private wrong (delictum) prosecuted by the person suffering the loss. Cf. peculatus. 2. The thing stolen.

furtum conceptum (far-tam kon-sep-tam). [Latin] Roman law. A theft in which someone is discovered in possession of stolen property after a search with witnesses. • The possessor was liable to pay the owner three times the value of the stolen property. The possessor could bring an action against the thief and recover triple damages.

gabelle (ga-bel). Hist. 1. A tax or duty on merchandise. 2. A peasant villager, esp. one who pays rent or tribute. See GAVEL (1). — Also spelled gabella; gavella.
gage (gayj), n. (14c) A pledge, pawn, or other thing deposited as security for performance. • An archaic use of this word corresponded to the way wage was formerly used in legal contexts: a gager del ley, for example, was an earlier form of wager of law, while gager de delivrance had the same meaning as wager of deliverance. Cf. WAGE (2).

gage, vb. (14c) To pawn, pledge; to give as security for.
• Gage is an older form of wage, and often appeared as a phrase, gager deliverance.

“A single root has sent out many branches which overshadow large fields of law. Gage, engagement, wage, wages, wager, wed, wedding, the Scottish wadset, all spring from one root. In particular we must notice that the word ‘gage,’ in Latin vadium, is applied indiscriminately to movables and immovables, to transactions in which a gage is given and to those in which a gage is taken. When a lord has seized his tenant’s goods in distress they are in his hands a gage for the payment of the rent that is in arrear, and the sheriff is always taking gages from those who have no mind to give them. The notion expressed by the word seems to be that expressed by our ‘security’...” 2 Frederic Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I (170). — Also spelled gabelle; gavella. gager deliverance. (14c) A pledge, pawn, or other thing deposited as security for. • Gager deliverance is an older form of gager deliverance. gag order. (1952) 1. A judge’s order directing parties, attorneys, witnesses, or journalists to refrain from publicly discussing the facts of a case. • When directed to the press, such an order is generally unconstitutional under the First Amendment. [Cases: Criminal Law (1951) 18. 20.] 2. A judge’s order that an unruly defendant be bound and gagged during trial to prevent further interruptions. [Cases: Criminal Law (1951) 637.] gain, n. (14c) 1. An increase in amount, degree, or value.

pecuniary gain. (18c) 1. A gain of money or of something having monetary value. 2. Criminal law. Any monetary or economic gain that serves as an impetus for the commission of an offense. • In most states, an offense and its punishment are aggravated if the offense was committed for pecuniary gain. Murder, for example, is often aggravated to capital murder if the murderer is paid to commit the crime. See SOLICITATION (2).

2. Excess of receipts over expenditures or of sale price over cost. See PROFIT (1). 3. Tax. The excess of the amount realized from a sale or other disposition of property over the property’s adjusted value. IRC (26 USCA) § 1001. — Also termed realized gain; net gain; (in senses 2 & 3) business gain. [Cases: Internal Revenue C= 3178–3216.]
capital gain. See CAPITAL GAIN.

game, n. (13c) 1. Wild animals and birds considered as objects of pursuit, for food or sport; esp., animals for which one must have a license to hunt. [Cases: Game C==>2.] 2. A contest, for amusement or for a prize, whose outcome depends on the skill, strength, or luck of the players. [Cases: Game C==>6.]

game of chance. A game whose outcome is determined by luck rather than skill. See GAMBLING DEVICE. [Cases: Gaming C==>6; Lotteries C==>3.]

"Games of chance do not cease to be such merely because they call for the exercise of skill by the players, nor do games of skill cease to be so because at times . . . their result is determined by some unforeseen accident, usually called 'luck.' According to some cases, the test of the character of the game is not whether it contains an element of chance or an element of skill, but which of these is the dominating element that determines the result of the game. . . . And it has been said that 'it is the character of the game, and not the skill or want of skill of the player,' which determines whether a game is one of chance or skill." 38 Am. Jur. 2d Gambling § 4, at 109–110 (1968).

game of skill. A game in which the outcome is determined by a player's superior knowledge or ability, not chance. [Cases: Gaming C==>6.]

percentage game. A game of chance from which the house collects an amount calculated as a percentage of the wagers made or the sums won. • Percentage games are illegal in many states. [Cases: Gaming C==>68.]

game, vb. To gamble; to play for a stake.

game law. (18c) A federal or state law that regulates the hunting of game, esp. one that forbids the capturing or killing of specified game either entirely or seasonally, describes the means for killing or capturing game in season, or restricts the number and type of game animals that may be killed or captured in season. 16 USCA §§ 661–667; 18 USCA §§ 41–47. [Cases: Game C==>4.]

gamete intrafallopian transfer. (ca. 1984) A procedure in which mature eggs are implanted in a woman's fallopian tubes and fertilized with semen. — Abbr. GIFT. — Also termed gamete intrafallopian-tube transfer. Cf. ZYGOTE INTRAFALLOPIAN TRANSFER; ARTIFICIAL INSEMINATION; IN VITRO FERTILIZATION.

gaming device. See GAMBLING DEVICE.

gaming house. See GAMBLING PLACE.

gaming room. See GAMBLING PLACE.

ganancial (go-nan-shal), adj. (1843) Of, relating to, or consisting of community property . See COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

"The Spanish [more correctly, the Castilian] form of community property, called the 'ganancial' system, is found today in nine states of the United States, the Spanish-American republics of Central and South America, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the Philippine Republic." Robert L. Menell & Thomas M. Boykoff, Community Property in a Nutshell 10 (2d ed. 1988).

G & A. abbr. See general administrative expense under EXPENSE.

gang. (15c) A group of persons who go about together or act in concert, esp. for antisocial or criminal purposes. • Many gangs have common identifying signs and symbols, such as hand signals and distinctive colors. — Also termed street gang.

gangland. (ca. 1912) The world of criminal gangs and organized crime.

gangster. A member of a criminal gang or an organized-crime syndicate.

Ganser's syndrome (gahn-zar or gan-sar). (1968) An abnormality characterized by the giving of irrelevant and nonsensical answers to questions. • Prisoners have been known to feign this syndrome in an attempt to obtain leniency.

gantlet (gawnt-lit). [fr. Swedish gata "lane" + lopp "course"] (15c) 1. Hist. A former military punishment in which the offender was stripped to the waist and forced to run between two rows of soldiers who gave him lashes as he passed. 2. A series of severe troubles or difficulties; an ordeal. — Also spelled gauntlet; (archaically) gantlope.

GAO. abbr. GENERAL ACCOUNTABILITY OFFICE.

gao. See JAIL.

gao delivery. See JAIL DELIVERY.
gaoier. See jailer.

gaal liberties. See jail liberties.

gap. See gap period.

gap creditor. See creditor.

gap-filler. (15c) A rule that supplies a contractual term that the parties failed to include in the contract. • For example, if the contract does not contain a sales price, UCC § 2-305(1) establishes the price as being a reasonable one at the time of delivery. Cf. default rule. [Cases: Sales C 22(4), 23(4).]

"Contracts often have gaps in them, intentional or inadvertent. Gaps arise, too, out of the 'battle of the forms' under sections 2-204 and 2-207. Some gaps are more or less complete, others only partial. Article 2 of the Code includes numerous gap filler provisions which taken together constitute a kind of standardized statutory contract." J. White & Robert S. Summers, Uniform Commercial Code § 3-4 (4th ed. 1995).

gap financing. See financing.

gap period. (1978) Bankruptcy. The duration of time between the filing of an involuntary bankruptcy petition and the entry of the order for relief. — Often shortened to gap. [Cases: Bankruptcy C 2281.]

gap report. (1984) In the making of federal court rules, a report that explains any changes made by an advisory committee in the language of a proposed amendment to a procedural rule after its publication for comment. • Before advisory committees began issuing gap reports in the early 1980s, there were complaints that the public record did not show why changes were made after the public-comment period. The five advisory committees — for appellate, bankruptcy, civil, criminal, and evidence rules — therefore began filing the reports to fill in the "gaps" in the record. Although the phrase is sometimes written in capital letters (GAP report), it is not an acronym.

gap theory. Insurance. The principle that a tortfeasor will be considered underinsured if his or her liability insurance coverage — although legally adequate — is less than the injured party's underinsured-motorist coverage. • This principle allows an injured party to invoke underinsured-motorist coverage. Cf. excess theory. [Cases: Insurance C 2787.] garageman's lien. See mechanic's lien under lien.

garauntor (gar-on-tor). [Law French] Hist. A warrantor of land. • A garauntor was obligated to defend the title and seisin of the alieene. If the alieene was evicted, the garauntor had to provide the alieene with other land of equal value.

Garcia hearing (gahr-see-a). (1981) Criminal procedure. A hearing held to ensure that a defendant who is one of two or more defendants represented by the same attorney understands (1) the risk of a conflict of interest inherent in this type of representation, and (2) that he or she is entitled to the services of an attorney who does not represent anyone else in the defendant's case.

United States v. Garcia, 517 F.2d 272 (5th Cir. 1975). See conflict of interest (2). [Cases: Criminal Law C 1790.]

garde (gahr-da). [French] 1. Civil law. A relationship that gives rise to a person's liability when an injury is caused by a thing, whether animate or inanimate, that is considered by law to be that person's responsibility or to be in that person's custody. 2. See gard.

gardein (gahr-deen). [Law French] Hist. A guardian or keeper. — Also spelled gardian; gardien; gardeyn.

gardia (gahr-dee-a). GARD.

Garmon doctrine. See Garmon preemption under preemption.

Garmon preemption. See preemption.

Garner doctrine. (1970) The rule that allows shareholder plaintiffs in a corporate derivative action to discover confidential communications between a corporate officer and the corporation's attorney. • The Garner doctrine does not apply to attorney work product, and the movant must show good cause. Garner v. Wolfinberger, 430 F.2d 1093 (5th Cir. 1970). See derivative action (1). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C 1604(1); Privileged Communications and Confidentiality C 113.]

garnishee, n. (16c) Hist. Money exacted from a new debtor by other prisoners or as a jailer's fee. • This practice was banned in England in 1815.

garnish, vb. [Old French garnir "to warn" "to prepare"] (16c) 1. Hist. To notify or warn (a person) of certain debts that must be paid before the person is entitled to receive property as an heir. 2. To subject (property) to garnishment; to attach (property held by a third party) in order to satisfy a debt. 3. To notify (a person, bank, etc.) that a garnishment proceeding has been undertaken and that the one receiving notice may be liable as stakeholder or custodian of the defendant's property. — Also termed garnished; (in senses 2 & 3) factorize. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C 601; Garnishment C 1.] garnishable, adj.

garnishee (gahr-ni-shee), n. (17c) A person or institution (such as a bank) that is indebted to or is bailee for another whose property has been subjected to garnishment. — Also termed garnishee-defendant (as opposed to the "principal defendant," i.e., the primary debtor). [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure C 601; Garnishment C 13-24.] garnishee (gahr-ni-shee), vb. See GARNISH.

garnisher. (16c) A creditor who initiates a garnishment action to reach the debtor's property that is thought to be held or owed by a third party (the garnishee). — Also spelled garnishor. [Cases: Garnishment ⊂ 11.]

garnishment, n. (16c) 1. A judicial proceeding in which a creditor (or potential creditor) asks the court to order a third party who is indebted to or is bailee for the debtor to turn over to the creditor any of the debtor's property (such as wages or bank accounts) held by that third party. • A plaintiff initiates a garnishment action as a means of either prejudgment seizure or postjudgment collection. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⊂ 601; Garnishment ⊂ 64, 118.]

‘Garnishment is an inquisitorial proceeding, affording a harsh and extraordinary remedy. It is an anomaly, a statutory invention sui generis, with no affinity to any action known to the common law. . . . It is a method of seizure: but it is not a ‘levy’ in the usual acceptance of that term. It is a proceeding by which a diligent creditor may legally obtain preference over other creditors; and it is in the nature of a creditor’s bill, or a sequestration of the effects of a debtor in the hands of his debtor.’ 38 C.J.5. Garnishment § 3, at 248-50 (2003).

wrongful garnishment. (1896) 1. An improper or tortious garnishment. [Cases: Garnishment ⊂ 122, 248.] 2. A cause of action against a garnisher for improperly or tortiously filing a garnishment proceeding. [Cases: Garnishment ⊂ 248-251.]

garnishment lien. See lien.

garnishor. See garnisher.

Garrity statement (gar-a-tec). (1967) A public employee’s oral or written report (as of an incident) obtained under a threat of termination of employment. • A public employee usu. makes a Garrity statement in the course of an internal investigation (as by a police department). Because a Garrity statement is coerced, the statement and any evidence obtained as a result of it cannot be used in a later criminal prosecution against the public employee. The statement and evidence may be used only to evaluate the employee’s performance. Garrity v. New Jersey, 385 U.S. 493, 87 S.Ct. 616 (1967).

garsumne. [Old English] A fine; an amercement.

gas-balancing agreement. Oil & gas. A contract among owners of the production of a gas well to balance production if one owner sells more of the gas stream than the other owners do.

‘Gas balancing agreements address the problem of imbalances in production from a gas well or field. Co-owners frequently sell their share of production to different purchasers . . . . Even when co-owners sell to the same purchaser, their contracts are likely to be signed at different times and to have different price and take provisions. Thus, imbalances are inevitable.’ John S. Lowe, Oil and Gas Law in a Nutshell 385 (3d ed. 1995).

gas chamber. (ca. 1945) A small, sealed room in which a capital punishment is carried out by strapping the prisoner into a chair and releasing poisonous fumes.

gas contract. Oil & gas. An agreement for the sale of natural gas. [Cases: Gas ⊂ 14.1(3).]

gas sold. Oil & gas. Natural gas that is actually sold but not necessarily all that a well produces. • The term is used in natural-gas leases.

gastone. (1988) A dilatory “dance” in which each of the two responsible parties waits until the other party acts — so that the delay seems interminable; esp., a standoff occurring when two courts simultaneously hear related claims arising from the same bases and delay acting while each court waits for the other to act first. • The term was coined by Judge Jon O. Newman in In re McLean Industries, Inc., 857 F.2d 88, 90 (2d Cir. 1988), on the model of “After you, my dear Alphonse.” “No, after you, Gaston.”

gas used. Oil & gas. Natural gas that is consumed while a well is in operation but that is not necessarily sold.

GATT (gat). abbr. GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE. See TRIPS.

gauget (gay-gec). (15c) A surveying officer who examines containers of liquids to give them a mark of allowance, as containing the lawful measure.

gaultlet. See gantlet.

gavel (gav-ool). (beff. 12c) 1. A species of socage tenure arising in land that has descended equally to the decedent’s sons. • It was widespread before 1066, when it was mainly superseded by primogeniture. This property-division technique was then largely limited to Kent. The person holding land in this manner enjoyed a service of plowing performed by a customary tenant.

gavelclaid (gav-ool-bred). Hist. Rent payable in bread, corn, or some other provision; rent payable in kind.

gavelclait (gav-ool-it). (14c) Hist. A writ used in Kent and London to recover rent from land held in gavelkind. See cessavit.

gavelgold (gav-ool-gold). Hist. 1. Property that yields a profit or a toll. 2. The tribute or toll itself.

gavelherte (gav-ool-hort). Hist. A service of plowing performed by a customary tenant.

gaveling man (gav-ool-ing man or man). Hist. See GAVELMAN.

gavelkind (gav-ool-kind). (14c) Hist. 1. A service of socage tenure arising in land that has descended equally to the decedent’s sons. • It was widespread before 1066, when it was mainly superseded by primogeniture. This property-division technique was then largely limited to Kent. The person holding land in this manner enjoyed several advantages not available under the common law: the land could be disposed of by will, did not escheat for felony other than treason or for want of heirs, and was alienable by an heir at age 15. Gavelkind was abolished in 1925. Although the etymology of this term was much debated in the 19th century, the explanation given in the first quotation below appears to be the true one. 2. Land that yields gavel service.

‘Gavel, or gavel, was a word of frequent use before the Norman Conquest, and signified not only a tribute, tax, or custom, but also rent in general; and . . . under this term were comprehended all socage services whatsoever which lay in render or service, the word being often compounded with and applied to the particulars wherein the payment or performance of the service consisted; as corn-gavel, or gavel-corn, was a corn-rent, and gavel-earth was a service of turning or ploughing. The tenant from whom such services were due was called a gavel-man; and gavel-kind being taken as a compound of this word 'gavel' and 'gekynde,' which is nature, kind, quality (usually appearing under the form 'gabolcund' in the most ancient records), the proper signification of the term will be land of the kind or nature which yielded rent, or 'censualland,' which may be compared to rent-service land as distinguished from knight-service land, which being held by free military service yielded no 'cens' or rent in money, provision, or works: so that the lands held by the old English tenure are known in Kent as gavel-kind which in other parts of the country are distinguished by the name of socage. Charles I. Elton & Herbert J.H. Mackay, Robinson on Gavelkind 5–6 (5th ed. 1897).

"The term 'gavelkind' has by the modern usage acquired a significiation more confined as to the properties contained under it, yea more extensive in point of place since at this day it is generally used to denote the partibility of the land, exclusive of all other customary qualities; nor is the word 'gavel-kind' in common parlance confined to Kentish lands, but is equally and indifferently applied to all partible lands wherever they lie." id. at 9.

"Archbishop Hubert Walter, who presided in the king's court... obtained from King John a charter empowering him and his successors to convert into military fees the tenements that were helden of their church in gavelkind. The archbishop's main object may have been to get money in the form of rents and quitrents, instead of provender and boonworks, 'gavel-corn' and 'gavel-swine,' 'gavel-erth' and 'gavel-nil.'" 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward 1273 (2d ed. 1899).

gavelman (gav-al-man). Hist. A tenant who is liable for money rent in addition to a customary service to the lord. • A gavelman was formerly a villein who had been released from villenage in addition to consideration of money rent. — Also termed gaveling man.

gavelmed (gav-al-meed). Hist. A tenant's customary service of mowing the lord's meadowland or grass for hay. — Also spelled gavelmed.

gavelrep (gav-al-reep). Hist. A tenant's duty to reap the lord's fields at the lord's command; bedrip. — Also spelled gavelrip.

gavel through. Parliamentary law. To put (a question) to a vote before any member can obtain the floor. • The practice of "gaveling through" a motion is improper under parliamentary law.

"It should be noted that, under legitimate parliamentary procedure, there is no such thing as 'gaveling through' a measure. The right of members to debate or introduce secondary motions cannot be cut off by the chair's attempting to put a question to vote so quickly that no member can get the floor — either when the chair first states the question or when he believes debate is ended. Debate is not closed by the presiding officer's rising to put the question." Henry M. Robert, Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised § 43, at 374 (10th ed. 2000).

gavelwerk (gav-al-warck). Hist. Customary service, either by the tenant's own hands or with the aid of the tenant's carts or carriages.

gay marriage. See same-sex marriage under MARRIAGE (1).

Gazette (gaz-etz). (17c) An official newspaper of the British government in which acts of State, Crown appointments, notices of bankruptcy, and other legal matters are reported. • Although the London Gazette is the most famous, there are also publications called the Edinburgh Gazette and the Belfast Gazette with similar purposes.

gazumping (gaz-um-ping). (20c) BrE Slang. The improper sale of a house, usu. by raising the price after accepting an offer. • Gazumping can take different forms, the usual one being when a seller raises the price after accepting the buyer's offer. But it may also occur when a competing buyer makes a higher bid than the one already accepted, thus encouraging the seller to back out of the earlier contract.

general maritime law. The body of U.S. legal precedents and doctrines developed through caselaw in maritime and admiralty litigation. • General maritime law is a branch of federal common law. It is distinguished from statutory law. Cf. maritime law; law of the sea. [Cases: Admiralty C==1.5.]

"The general maritime law is characterized by the expansive and dominant role played by federal courts in fashioning and applying its precepts to new situations. Large areas of maritime tort law have not been touched by legislation; these are left to the federal courts to define and fill. In areas preempted by legislation, federal courts may not establish principles in derogation of the congressional mandate. However, in the framework of admiralty jurisdiction, federal courts may still play an active role in interpreting statutes, filling gaps, and coordinating legislation with the general maritime law." genericide (ja-nér-ə-sid). Trademarks. The loss or cancellation of a trademark that no longer distinguishes the owner’s product from others’ products. • Genericide occurs when a trademark becomes such a household name that the consuming public begins to think of the mark not as a brand name but as a synonym for the product itself. Examples of trademarks that have been “killed” by genericide include aspirin and escalator. [Cases: Trademarks C–1166.] genericism (ja-nér-ə-siz-am). See genericness. generic name. (1872) Trademarks. A term that describes something generally without designating the thing’s source or creator, such as the word car or sink. • A generic name cannot be protected as a trademark for the thing it denotes; e.g., Apple can be a trademark for computers but not for apples. — Also termed generic term; generic mark; common descriptive name. [Cases: Trademarks C–1034.]
genericness, n. (20c) The state or condition of being generic can affirmative defense of genericness in a trademark suit. — Also termed genericness; genericism. generic swap. See plain-vanilla swap under interest-rate swap.
generic term. See GENERIC NAME.

generic child. See natural child (1) under CHILD.

generic engineering. (ca. 1951) A method of creating new life forms and organic matter by gene-splicing and other techniques. • The Supreme Court has ruled that those creations are patentable. Diamond v. Chakraborty, 447 U.S. 303, 100 S.Ct. 2204 (1980).

generic father. See biological father under FATHER.

generic fingerprinting. See DNA IDENTIFICATION.

genetic-marker test. A medical method of testing tissue samples used in paternity and illegitimacy cases to determine whether a particular man could be the father of a child. • This test represents a medical advance over blood-grouping tests. It analyzes DNA and is much more precise in assessing the probability of paternity. — Abbr. GMT. See PATERNITY TEST. Cf. BLOOD-GROUPING TEST; HUMAN-LEUKOCYTE ANTIGEN TEST. [Cases: Children Out-of-Wedlock ☸45, 58.]

genetic mother. See biological mother under MOTHER.

genetic parent. See biological parent under PARENT.

Geneva Conventions of 1949 (ja-nee-vah va). Four international agreements dealing with the protection of wounded members of the armed forces, the treatment of prisoners of war, and the protection of civilians during international armed conflicts. • Common Article 3 of the Conventions proclaims certain minimum standards of treatment that are applicable to noninternational armed conflicts. The humanitarian-law protection established in these four agreements was amplified in 1977 by the two Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions. In common parlance, people refer to the Geneva Convention as if there were just one agreement. Cf. LAWS OF WAR. [Cases: Treaties ☸= 8.]

Geneva Phonograms Convention. A 1971 treaty requiring signatories to protect phonorecord producers against piracy and the importation of pirated copies, by copyright protection, unfair-competition law, or criminal sanctions. • The treaty was drafted by representatives from WIPO and UNESCO to correct weaknesses in the Rome Convention. — Also termed Convention for the Protection of Producers of Phonograms Against Unauthorized Duplication of Their Phonograms; Phonograms Convention.

genocide (jen-oh-eez). (ca. 1944) Int'l law. An international crime involving acts causing serious physical and mental harm with the intent to destroy, partially or entirely, a national, ethnic, racial, or religious group. • The widely ratified Genocide Convention of 1948 defines the crime. The International Criminal Court has jurisdiction to try those accused of genocide. Many nations also have criminal laws providing punishment for individuals convicted of genocide. Cf. ETHNIC CLEANSING. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship ☸= 763.]

The ... draft Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide was adopted by the General Assembly on December 9, 1948 and unanimously recommended for adherence to the members of the United Nations. It came into force in October, 1950 . . . The term 'genocide' was first proposed by Dr. Lemkin in the course of the war and incorporated on his suggestion into the Indictment of the Major German War Criminals. The [U.N. General] Assembly Resolution on Genocide of December 11, 1946, and the Convention of 1948, are also the result of a remarkable one-man campaign." Georg Schwarzenberger, Power Politics: A Study of International Society 634 (2d ed. 1951).

Genoese lottery (jen-oh-eez). See LOTTERY.

genotype. (19c) Patents. The genetic makeup of a living organism. • A patent on living matter must disclose its genotype rather than just describe its physical characteristics (phenotype) or behavior. Cf. PHENOTYPE. [Cases: Patents ☸= 14.] — genotypic, adj.

gens (jenz), n. (Latin) (19c) Roman law. A clan or group of families who share the same name and (supposedly) a common ancestor; extended family. • Members of a gens are freeborn and possess full civic rights. Pl. gentes.

“A wider group still is the gens, of great importance in early law though its importance was gone in classical times. This consisted of all who bore the same nomen, the gentile name." W.W. Buckland, A Manual of Roman Private Law 61 (2d ed. 1953).

gentes (jen-teez), n. (Latin) (19c) Roman law. The peoples or nations of the world, particularly the civilized peoples.

gentile (jen-tIIL), [fr Latin gentilis] Roman law. A member of a gens. See GENS.

gentium privatum. See private international law under INTERNATIONAL LAW.

gentleman. (12c) Hist. 1. A man of noble or gentle birth or rank; a man above the rank of yeoman. 2. A man belonging to the landed gentry. • Today the term has no precise legal meaning.

gentleman's agreement. See GENTLEMEN'S AGREEMENT.

Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. English law. An officer of the House of Lords who has various ceremonial duties, including the summoning of the members of the House of Commons to the House of Lords when a bill is to receive royal approval. • The office dates from the 14th century.

gentlemen's agreement. (1886) An unwritten agreement that, while not legally enforceable, is secured by the good faith and honor of the parties. — Also spelled gentleman's agreement. [Cases: Contracts ☸= 1.]

gentrification, n. (1973) The restoration and upgrading of a deteriorated or aging urban neighborhood by middle-class or affluent persons, resulting in increased property values and often in displacement of lower-income residents. — gentrify, vb.

genuine, adj. (17c) 1. (Of a thing) authentic or real; having the quality of what a given thing purports to be or to have <the plaintiff failed to question whether the exhibits were genuine>. 2. (Of an instrument) free of forgery or counterfeiting <the bank teller could not determine whether the signature on the check was genuine>. UCC § 1-201(18).

genuine issue of material fact. (1938) Civil procedure. In the law of summary judgments, a triable, substantial, or real question of fact supported by substantial evidence. • An issue of this kind precludes entry of summary judgment. [Cases: Federal Civil Procedure ⊂ 2470, 2470.1; Judgment ⊂ 181(2), 185(6).]

genus (jee-nas or jen-as), (16c) A general class comprising several species or divisions. • In legal usage, the terms genus and (sometimes) species invoke the taxonomic classification of life forms in biological science. For example, patent law is a species within the genus of intellectual property; burglary is a species within the genus of crime. In the law of sales, genus referred to fungibles, while species referred to specific, individual items. Cf. species (2).

-genus claim. See generic claim under patent claim.

genus nunquam perit (jee-nus nun[kwam per-it]). [Latin] Hist. The class never perishes. • The phrase appeared in reference to a quantity of contracted-for goods of a certain class (rather than a single item), the destruction of which did not discharge the seller’s obligation.

goodetica-survey system (jee-a-det-ik). (1990) A federally created land-description method consisting of nationwide marks (or benches) made at longitude and latitude points. • The geodetic-survey system integrates most of the real property in the United States into one unified form of measurement.

geographically descriptive trademark. See trademark.

geographic market. See market.

geographic name. See NAME.

geography of crime. See environmental criminology under criminology.

Georgia-Pacific analysis. Patents. A 15-factor test for setting a reasonable royalty in infringement suits. • Among other factors, the test considers what a prudent licensee would have paid while still being able to earn a profit. Georgia-Pacific Corp. v. U.S. Plywood Corp., 318 F. Supp. 1116 (S.D.N.Y. 1970). [Cases: Patents ⊂ 319(1).]

gergerman (jar-man), adj. (14c) Having the same parents or grandparents; closely related.

brother-german. See brother.

cousin-german. See cousin (1).

sister-german. See sister.

germane (jar-mayn), adj. (14c) Relevant; pertinent <the case/law cited in the brief was not germane to the legal issue pending before the court>. • Under parliamentary law, debate and amendments are in order only if they are germane to the motion under consideration.

 germanus (jar-may-nas). [Latin] Roman law. 1. adj. Having the same father and mother. See frater germanus under frater. 2. n. A whole brother; a child of both of one’s own parents.

gerrymandering (jer-ee-man-dar-ing or ger-ee-), n. (1812) 1. The practice of dividing a geographical area into electoral districts, often of highly irregular shape, to give one political party an unfair advantage by diluting the opposition’s voting strength. • When Massachusetts Governor Elbridge Gerry ran for reelection in 1812, members of his political party, the Anti-Federalists, altered the state’s voting districts to benefit the party. One newly created district resembled a salamander, inspiring a critic to coin the word gerrymander by combining the governor’s name, Gerry, with the ending of salamander. Gerry was not reelected governor, but was elected as James Madison’s vice president. — Also termed political gerrymandering. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⊂ 3285, 3658(5); Elections ⊂ 12(6).] 2. The practice of dividing any geographical or jurisdictional area into political units (such as school districts) to give some group a special advantage. — Also termed jurisdictional gerrymandering. Cf. reapportionment. [Cases: Schools ⊂ 32.] — gerrymander, vb.

delineational gerrymandering. Gerrymandering by varying the districts’ shape. • There are three kinds of delineational gerrymandering: cracking (or fracturing), packing, and stacking. See cracking; packing; stacking (2).

institutional gerrymandering. Gerrymandering by means of varying the number of representatives per district.

gersum (gar-sam). Hist. 1. Money paid for a thing; specif., compensation paid by a tenant to a superior on entering a holding. 2. A penalty or amercement paid for an offense. — Also spelled gersumme; gersum; gersume; gressum. 3. gressume.

gersumarius (jar-syljo-mair-ee-as). Hist. Finaile; liable to be fined at the discretion of a feudal superior. • A villein who gave his daughter in marriage was gersumarius — he was liable to pay a fine to the lord.

Geschmacksmuster. Patents. [German] See design patent under patent.

Gestalt factors. The criteria that a court uses in a minimum-contacts analysis to determine the reasonableness of subjecting a nonresident to personal jurisdiction. • These fairness criteria include (1) the defendant’s burden of making a personal appearance, (2) the forum state’s interest in adjudicating the dispute, (3) the plaintiff’s interest in obtaining convenient and effective relief, (4) the judicial system’s interest in arriving at the most effective resolution of the controversy, and (5) the common interests of all sovereigns in promoting substantive social policies. These factors were articulated by the United States Supreme Court in Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 478, 105 S.Ct. 2174, 2185 (1985), but the Court has never used the term Gestalt factors; it was coined in Donatelli v. National Hockey League, 893 F.2d 459, 465 (1st Cir. gestio (jes-chee-oh), n. [Latin] (16c) Roman law. Behavior or conduct. See GESTIO PRO HAERede. 2. The management of a thing, esp. a transaction. See NEGOTIORUM GESTIO. — Also termed GESTION.

gesto pro haerede (jes-chee-proh her-a-dee). [Latin “behavior as heir”] Roman & Hist. Scots law. An appointed heir’s conduct (such as selling or leasing the decedent’s property) that indicates the heir’s intent to receive the inheritance and thereby take on the estate’s debts; more broadly, any behavior as an heir. — Also spelled gesto pro haerede.

gestor (jes-tor), n. [Latin] Roman law. 1. One who carries on a business. 2. NEGOTIORUM GESTOR. Pl. gestores.

gesta et fama (jes-t[a]yoo et fay-ma). [Latin “demeanor and reputation”] Hist. A writ used by a person who had been imprisoned because of a poor reputation in the community to gain release from jail pending the arrival of justices with commissions of gaol delivery. See COMMISSION OF GAOL DELIVERY.

gestum (jes-tom), n. [Latin] Roman law. A deed or an act; a thing done. • Gestum is synonymous with factum. See FACTUM (2).

gesture. (15c) A motion of the body calculated to express a thought or emphasize a certain point <the prosecutor was known for her dramatic gestures during closing argument>.

get, n. (19c) 1. A rabbinical divorce; a Jewish divorce. 2. Under Jewish law, a document signed by a rabbi to grant a divorce. • Under Jewish law, a Jewish divorce can be obtained only after the husband has given the get to the wife, who must voluntarily accept it. — Also spelled gett. Pl. gittin. See rabbinical divorce under divorce.

get-up. See trade dress.

gewrit. Hist. A deed, charter, or similar writing.

ghost detainee. See secret detainee under DETAINEE.

ghosting. The assumption of the identity of a deceased person to conceal one’s true identity. Cf. IDENTITY THEFT.

GIFT. abbr. GAMETE INTRAPALLOPION TRANSFER.

gift, n. (12c) 1. The voluntary transfer of property to another without compensation. [Cases: Gifts ⊑=1.] 2. A thing so transferred. — gift, vb.

absolute gift. See inter vives gift.

anatomical gift. (1971) A testamemary donation of a bodily organ or organs, esp. for transplant or for medical research. • The procedures for making an anatomical gift are set forth in the Uniform Anatomical Gift Act, which has been adopted in every state. [Cases: Dead Bodies ⊑=1.]

antenuptial gift. See prenuptial gift.

charitable gift. An inter vives or testamentary donation to a nonprofit organization for the relief of poverty, the advancement of education, the advancement of religion, the promotion of health, governmental, or municipal purposes, and other purposes the accomplishment of which is beneficial to the community. Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 368 (1959). • When the beneficiary is a religious organization or the gift is intended for a religious purpose, it is sometimes also termed a pious gift. [Cases: Charities ⊑=1-17.]

class gift. (1949) A gift to a group of persons, uncertain in number at the time of the gift but to be ascertained at a future time, who are all to take in definite proportions, the share of each being dependent on the ultimate number in the group.

‘The typical class gift is to ‘children,’ ‘issue,’ ‘heirs,’ ‘brothers and sisters,’ ‘nieces and nephews,’ ‘grandchildren.’ A class gift is one in which the donor intends to benefit a group or a class of persons, as distinguished from specific individuals; the class gift donor is said to be ‘group-minded.’ The class gift is one in which the donor intends that the number of donees, from the time of the delivery of the instrument of gift in the case of the inter vivos gift, or from the time of the execution of the testator will in the case of the testamentary gift, is subject to fluctuation by way of increase or decrease, or by way of increase only, or by way of decrease only, depending on the circumstances of the gift.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 136 (2d ed. 1984).

completed gift. (1952) A gift that is no longer in the donor’s possession and control. • Only a completed gift is taxable under the gift tax.

gift causa mortis (kaw-zo mor-tis). (18c) A gift made in contemplation of the donor’s imminent death. • The three essentials are that (1) the gift must be made with a view to the donor’s present illness or peril, (2) the donor must actually die from that illness or peril, without ever recovering, and (3) there must be a delivery. Even though causa mortis is the more usual word order in modern law, the correct Latin phrasing is mortis causa — hence gift mortis causa. — Also termed donatio causa mortis; donatio mortis causa; gift in contemplation of death; transfer in contemplation of death. See CONTEMPLATION OF DEATH. [Cases: Gifts ⊑=53–68.] gift deed

"Gifts causa mortis" are conditional, like legacies; and it is essential to them that the donor make them in his last illness, or in contemplation and expectation of death; and with reference to their effect after his death, they are good, notwithstanding a previous will: and if he recovers, the gift becomes void." 2 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law *444 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

A 'gift causa mortis' . . . is testamentary, and it is similar to testamentary disposition in the respect that there remains with the donor the power to revoke the gift until his death. In some respects, a gift causa mortis may be said to resemble a contract, for mutual consent and the concurrent will of both parties are necessary to the validity of the transfer." 38A C.J.S. Gifts § 85, at 276-77 (1936).

gift in contemplation of death. See gift causa mortis.

gift inter vivos. See inter vivos gift.

gift in trust. (18c) A gift of legal title to property to someone who will act as trustee for the benefit of a beneficiary.

gift over. (18c) A property gift (esp. by will) that takes effect after the expiration of a preceding estate in the property (such as a life estate or fee simple determinable) to Sarah for life, with gift over to Don in fee. [Cases: Wills C-614(2, 3).]

gift splitting. See split gift.

gratuitous gift. A gift made without consideration, as most gifts are. 2 Strictly speaking, the term looks redundant, but it answers to the donum gratui tum of Roman law.

inter vivos gift (in-tar vi-vohs or vee-vohs). (1848) A gift of personal property made during the donor’s lifetime and delivered to the donee with the intention of irrevocably surrendering control over the property. 2 Also termed gift inter vivos; lifetime gift; absolute gift. [Cases: Gifts C-1-33.]

lifetime gift. See inter vivos gift.

onerosous gift (ohn-a-ras or on-a-ras). A gift made subject to certain conditions imposed on the recipient.

pious gift. See charitable gift.

prenuptial gift (pre-nap-shal). (1921) A gift of property from one spouse to another before marriage. 2 In community-property states, prenuptial gifts are often made to preserve the property’s classification as separate property. — Also termed antenuptial gift. [Cases: Husband and Wife C-250.]

split gift. (1957) Tax. A gift that is made by one spouse to a third person and that, for gift-tax purposes, both spouses treat as being made one-half by each spouse; a gift in which the spouses combine their annual gift-tax exclusions. 2 A split gift, for example, is eligible for two annual exclusions of $10,000 each, or a total of $20,000 for one gift. — Also termed gift-splitting; gift-splitting election. See annual exclusion under exclusion (1). [Cases: Internal Revenue C-4206.10.]

substitute gift. (1934) A testamentary gift to one person in place of another who is unable to take under the will for some reason. — Also termed substitutional gift.

taxable gift. (1922) A gift that, after adjusting for the annual exclusion and applicable deductions, is subject to the federal unified transfer tax. IRC (26 U.S.C.A.) § 2503. [Cases: Internal Revenue C-4203.10.]

testamentary gift (tes-ta-men-ta-ree or -tree). (18c) A gift made in a will.

vested gift. (1820) An absolute gift, being neither conditional nor contingent, though its use or enjoyment might not occur until sometime in the future.

gift deed. See deed.

gift enterprise. (1858) 1. A scheme for the distribution of items by chance among those who have purchased shares in the scheme. [Cases: Lotteries C-3.] 2. A merchant’s scheme to increase sales without lowering prices by giving buyers tickets that carry a chance to win a prize. 3 Gift enterprises are regulated by state law. See lottery.

gifting circle. See gifting club.

gifting club. A type of pyramid scheme or Ponzi scheme in which recruits make "gifts" of money to other club members with the expectation that future recruits will make "gifts" to the present recruits. 2 Many gifting clubs limit membership to women. Club leaders usu. try to evade income-tax laws by claiming that the money paid in by a recruit is a tax-free "gift" to a club member and warning new recruits not to expect "gifts" in the future. Some states forbid gifting clubs as illegal pyramid schemes. Other states hold that the clubs are illegal lotteries. — Also termed gifting circle; sisterhood; birthday club. See Ponzi scheme. [Cases: Antitrust and Trade Regulation C-231.] gift inter vivos. See inter vivos gift under gift.

gift in trust. See gift.

gift over. See gift.

Ginnie Mae (jin-ee may). See government national mortgage association.

GIPSA. abbr. Grain inspection, packers, and stockyard administration.

girth (garth). [Old English] (13c) 1. A measure of length, equal to a yard. • This term, which was used in Saxon and early English law, was taken from the circumference of a man's body. 2. The area surrounding a church. 3. A place of sanctuary. 4. A band or strap that encircles the body of an animal to fasten something (usu. a saddle) to its back.

giser (ji-sar), vb. [Law French] Hist. (Of an action) to lie; to be capable of being brought as a suit in court. • This verb, in its inflected form gist, appeared in such phrases as ou asise ne gist point ("when an assise does not lie"), le action bien gist ("the action well lies"), and gist en le bouche ("it lies in the mouth"), and cest action gist ("this action lies").

gisetaker (jis- or jiz-tay-kar). Archaic. See agister.

gist (jist). (18c) 1. The ground or essence (of a legal action) <the gist of the crime>. 2. The main point <she skimmed the brief to get the gist of it>. • This noun derives from the Law French verb giser "to lie." See giser.

gist-of-the-action doctrine. The principle that a plaintiff who brings a tort claim arising from a contractual relationship must show that the contract and any contractual claim are collateral to the tort claim. • The doctrine prevents plaintiffs from recasting contract claims as tort claims. This term is most common in Pennsylvania but also appears in New Jersey, Delaware, the Virgin Islands, and elsewhere. (Cases: Action C== 27(I).] give, vb. (13c) 1. To voluntarily transfer (property) to another without compensation <Jack gave his daughter a car on her birthday>. 2. To confer by a formal act <the First Amendment gives all citizens the right to free speech>. 3. To present for another to consider <the witness gave compelling testimony before the jury>. 4. (Of a jury) to impose or award by verdict <the jury gave the defendant the death penalty> <the jury gave the plaintiff $1,000 in damages>.

give bail, vb. To post security for one's appearance in court <the court ordered the accused to give bail in the amount of $10,000>. — Also termed post bail.

give color, vb. Hist. To admit, either expressly or impliedly by silence, that an opponent's allegations appear to be meritorious. • In common-law pleading, a defendant's plea of confession and avoidance had to give color to the plaintiff's allegations in the complaint or the plea would be fatally defective. See color (2).

give, devise, and bequeath, vb. (17c) To transfer property by will <I give, devise, and bequeath all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate to my beloved daughter Sarah>. • This wording has long been criticized as redundant. In modern usage, give ordinarily suffices. See bequest.

given name. See personal name under name.

give way, vb. Maritime law. (Of a vessel) to deviate from a course, or to slow down, in accordance with navigation rules, so that a second vessel may pass without altering its course. [Cases: Collision C== 29, 37.]

giving in payment. Civil law. The act of discharging a debt by giving something to the creditor (with the creditor's consent) other than what was originally called for. La. Civ. Code art. 2655. • The phrase is a translation of the French dation en paiement and derives from the Roman datio in solutum. See dation en paiement. Cf. accord and satisfaction.

gladius (glay-dee-as), n. [Latin "sword"] Roman law. The emblem of the emperor's power, esp. the power to punish criminals. See jus gladii.

Glass-Steagall Act. A federal statute that protects bank depositors by restricting the securities-related business of commercial banks, specif. by prohibiting banks from owning brokerage firms or engaging in the brokerage business. 12 USCA § 378. — Also termed Banking Act of 1933.

glebae ascriptitii. See adscripti glebae.

glebe (gleeb). [fr. Latin gleba "clod of earth"] (15c) 1. Roman law. The soil of an inheritance; an agrarian estate. • Servi addiciti glebae ("slaves bound to the land") were serfs attached to and passing with the estate. 2. Eccles. law. Land possessed as part of the endowment or revenue of a church or ecclesiastical benefice.

"Diocesan glebe land forms the largest section of ecclesiastical conveyancing work by virtue of the large number of glebe properties which are held in each diocese. Such land is governed primarily by the Endowments and Glebe Measure 1976 . . . , which in technical terms defines 'glebe land' as 'land vested in the incumbent of a benefice (when the benefice is full) as part of the endowments of the benefice other than parsonage land'; and 'diocesan glebe land' as glebe land acquired by a diocesan board of finance under any provision of this Measure and any other land acquired by such a board, being land which by virtue of, or of any enactment amended by, a provision of this Measure is to be held as part of the diocesan glebe land of the diocese." David Rees, Ecclesiastical Conveyancing 8 (1989).

global fund. See mutual fund.
Globe election. Labor law. The procedure by which a group of employees is given the opportunity to decide whether to be represented as a distinct group or to be represented as a part of a larger, existing unit. godparent. (1865) Eccles. law. A person, usu. a close family friend or relative, who accepts a parent’s invitation to assume part of the responsibility for the religious education of a newly baptized child. • Often, too, there is an understanding that the godparent would help support and rear the child if the parents were to die or become incapacitated. The spiritual parent-child relationship creates a canonical impediment to marriage. — Also termed (more specifically) godmother; godfather; (in eccles. law) sponsor.

God’s penny. Hist. Earnest money; a small sum paid on the striking of a bargain. — Also termed denarius Dei; earnest-penny; godpenny. See ARRA.

"It is among the merchants that the giving of earnest first . . . becomes a form which binds both buyer and seller in a contract of sale. To all appearances this change was not accomplished without the intermediation of a religious idea. All over Western Europe the earnest becomes known as the God’s penny or Holy Ghost’s penny (denarius Dei) . . . ." 2 Frederick Pollock & Frederic W. Maitland, The History of English Law Before the Time of Edward I 208 (2d ed. 1899).

go forward, vb. (1964) To commence or carry on with the presentation of a case in court <after the lunch recess, the judge instructed the plaintiff to go forward with its case>.

go hence without day. (18c) (Of a defendant to a lawsuit) to be finished with legal proceedings without any further settings on the court’s calendar. • Thus, a defendant who "goes hence without day" succeeds in getting a case finally resolved, usu. by dismissal. The phrase derives from the Law French phrase aller sans jour, and over time defendants came to use it to request that the case against them be dismissed without the necessity of a day in court. — Sometimes shortened to go without day; without day. See SINE DIE.

going-and-coming rule. (1927) 1. The principle that torts committed by an employee while commuting to or from work are generally outside the scope of employment. [Cases: Labor and Employment C==3045.] 2. The principle that denies workers’ compensation benefits to an employee injured while commuting to or from work. Cf. COMMERCIAL-TRAVELER RULE. [Cases: Workers’ Compensation C==719-757.]

going concern. (1881) A commercial enterprise actively engaging in business with the expectation of indefinite continuance. — Also termed going business.

going-concern value. See VALUE (2).

going price, n. (18c) The prevailing or current market value of something. See fair market value under VALUE (2).

going private. The process of changing a public corporation into a close corporation by terminating the corporation’s status with the SEC as a publicly held corporation and by having its outstanding publicly held shares acquired by a single shareholder or a small group. [Cases: Securities Regulation C==60.23.]

going-private transaction. See FREEZEOUT.

going public. The process of a company’s selling stock to the investing public for the first time (after filing a registration statement under applicable securities laws), thereby becoming a public corporation. [Cases: Securities Regulation C==11.10-11.14.]

going through the bar. Hist. A daily process in which the court would ask all barristers present whether they had motions to present. • This practice, which ended in 1873, was conducted according to seniority, except for the last day of a term, when the junior barristers were asked first.
going to the country. Hist. The act of requesting a jury trial. • A defendant was said to be "going to the country" by concluding a pleading with the phrase "and of this he puts himself upon the country." Similarly, a plaintiff would conclude a pleading with the phrase "and this the plaintiff prays may be enquired of by the country." — Also termed go to the country. Cf. CONCLUSION TO THE COUNTRY.

goinging value. See going-concern value under VALUE (2). going witness. See WITNESS.
gold bond. See BOND (3).
gold certificate. Hist. A banknote issued by the United States Treasury from 1863 to 1934 and redeemable in gold. • When the United States abandoned the gold standard in 1933, Congress declared ownership of gold certificates illegal even though the Treasury continued to issue them until mid-1934. The certificates were legalized again in 1964, but they can no longer be redeemed for gold. They now have the same status as Federal Reserve notes, which are not redeemable for precious metal. Cf. FEDERAL RESERVE NOTE; SILVER CERTIFICATE. [Cases: United States v. Crowder (1977).

gold clause. A provision calling for payment in gold. • Gold clauses, which are now void, were once used in contracts, bonds, and mortgages.
golden handcuffs. Remuneration set at such a high level that the employee earning it cannot leave the firm or company and receive commensurate pay elsewhere. • As a result, the employee often stays in the position even if it is otherwise unrewarding or unpleasant.
golden handshake. Corporations. A generous compensation package offered to an employee, usu. as an inducement to retire or upon dismissal.
golden parachute. (1981) Corporations. An employment-provision that grants an upper-level executive lucrative severance benefits — including long-term salary guarantees or bonuses — if control of the company changes hands (as by a merger). Cf. TIN PARACHUTE. [Cases: Corporations C=308(3).]

"Key executives may be provided with significant employment contract clauses that are triggered only by a change in the firm's control through a sale, merger, acquisition, or takeover. These contract clauses are commonly termed golden parachutes, and they generally provide that if control over the employer's business occurs and the new management terminates the executive, additional compensation will be received. . . . Golden parachutes are useful in providing long-term incentives for executives to enter industries in which takeover chances are above average. Generally, golden parachutes do not violate public policy."

golden rule. The principle that, in construing written instruments, a court should adhere to the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words unless that adherence would lead to some manifest absurdity; esp., in statutory construction, the principle that if a statute's literal meaning would lead to an absurd or unjust result, or even to an inconsistency within the statute itself, the statute should be interpreted in a way that avoids such a result or inconsistency. — Also termed Baron Parke's rule. Cf. ABSURDITY; MISCHIEF RULE; PLAIN-MEANING RULE; EQUITY-OF-THE-SATE-RULE. [Cases: Statutes C=181(2), 189.]

"[T]he 'golden' rule . . . allows for a departure from the literal rule when the application of the statutory words in the ordinary sense would be repugnant to or inconsistent with some other provision in the statute or even when it would lead to what the court considers to be an absurdity. The usual consequence of applying the golden rule is that words which are in the statute are ignored or words which are not there are read in. The scope of the golden rule is debatable, particularly so far as the meaning of an 'absurdity' is concerned." Rupert Cross, Statutory Interpretation 14 (1976).
golden-rule argument. A jury argument in which a lawyer asks the jurors to reach a verdict by imagining themselves or someone they care about in the place of the injured plaintiff or crime victim. • Because golden-rule arguments ask the jurors to become advocates for the plaintiff or victim and to ignore their obligation to exercise calm and reasonable judgment, these arguments are widely condemned and are considered improper in most states. [Cases: Trial C=125(1). goldsmiths' notes. Hist. Bankers' cash notes; promissory notes given by bankers to customers as acknowledgments of the receipt of money. • This term derives from the London banking business, which originally was transacted by goldsmiths.
gold standard. (19c) A monetary system in which currency is convertible into its legal equivalent in gold or gold coin. • The United States adopted the gold standard in 1900 and abandoned it in 1934. Cf. PAPER STANDARD.
good, adj. (bef. 12c) 1. Sound or reliable . 2. Valid, effectual, and enforceable; sufficient under the law <good title>.
good, n. See GOODS.
good and lawful fence. See LAWFUL FENCE. good and merchantable abstract of title. See ABSTRACT OF TITLE. good and valuable consideration. See valuable consideration under CONSIDERATION (1). good and workmanlike. (18c) (Of a product or service) characterized by quality craftsmanship; constructed or performed in a skillful way or method <the house was built in a good and workmanlike manner>.
good behavior. (16c) 1. A standard by which judges are considered fit to continue their tenure, consisting in the avoidance of criminal behavior. [Cases: Judges C=7.] 2. Orderly conduct, which in the context of penal law allows a prisoner to reduce the time spent in prison. Cf. good time under TIME. [Cases: Prisons C=243.]
good cause. See CAUSE (2). good cause shown. See good cause under CAUSE (2).
good consideration. See CONSIDERATION (1). good deed. See DEED.
good delivery. See DELIVERY.
good faith, n. (18c) A state of mind consisting in (1) honesty in belief or purpose, (2) faithfulness to one's duty or obligation, (3) observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing in a given trade or business, or (4) absence of intent to defraud or to seek unconscionable advantage. — Also termed bona fides. Cf. BAD FAITH. — good-faith, adj.

"The phrase 'good faith' is used in a variety of contexts, and its meaning varies somewhat with the context. Good faith performance or enforcement of a contract emphasizes faithfulness to an agreed common purpose and consistency with the justified expectations of the other party; it excludes a variety of types of conduct characterized as involving 'bad faith' because they violate community standards of decency, fairness or reasonableness. The appropriate remedy for a breach of the duty of good faith also varies with the circumstances." Ristatement (Second) of Contracts § 205 cmt. a (1979).

"[G]ood faith is an elusive idea, taking on different meanings and emphases as we move from one context to another — whether the particular context is supplied by the type of legal system (e.g., common law, civilian, or hybrid), the type of contract (e.g., commercial or consumer), or the nature of the subject matter of the contract (e.g., insurance, employment, sale of goods, financial services, and so on)." Roger Brownsword et al., "Good Faith in Contract," in Good Faith in Contract: Concept and Context 1, 3 (Roger Brownsword ed., 1999).

good-faith bargaining. Labor law. Negotiations between an employer and a representative of employees, usu. a union, in which both parties meet and confer at reasonable times with open minds and with a view to reaching an agreement. • The National Labor Relations Act requires good-faith bargaining, and failure to bargain in good faith is considered an unfair labor practice. 29 USCA §§ 151-169. See UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE. [Cases: Labor and Employment § 1114.]

good-faith exception. (1980) Criminal procedure. An exception to the exclusionary rule whereby evidence obtained under a warrant later found to be invalid (esp. because it is not supported by probable cause) is nonetheless admissible if the police reasonably relied on the notion that the warrant was valid. • The Supreme Court adopted the good-faith exception in United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897, 104 S.Ct. 3405 (1984). [Cases: Criminal Law § 394.4(6).]

good-faith improver. A person who makes improvements to real property while actually and reasonably believing himself or herself to be the owner or lawful occupant. • The improver may be entitled to recover the value of the improvements from the true owner or to remove them. See IMPROVEMENT. [Cases: Improvements § 4.2(2).]

good-faith margin. See MARGIN.

good-faith purchaser. See bona fide purchaser under PURCHASER (1).

good-guy clause. See good-guy guaranty under GUARANTY.

good-guy guaranty. See GUARANTY.

good health. Insurance. A state of reasonable healthiness; a state of health free from serious disease. • Good health, a phrase often appearing in life-insurance policies, does not mean perfect health. — Also termed sound health. [Cases: Insurance § 1758, 3003(8).]

"As used in policies of insurance, there is no material difference between the terms 'sound health' and 'good health,' and generally it appears that the two terms are considered to be synonymous. Such expressions are comparative terms, and the rule followed generally is that the term 'good health' or 'sound health,' when used in an insurance contract, means that the applicant has no grave, important, or serious disease, and is free from any ailment that seriously affects the general soundness or healthfulness of his system." 43 Am. Jur. 2d Insurance § 1061, at 1069 (1982).

good jury. See special jury under JURY.

good moral character. n. (18c) 1. A pattern of behavior that is consistent with the community's current ethical standards and that shows an absence of deceit or morally reprehensible conduct. • An alien seeking to be naturalized must show good moral character in the five years preceding the petition for naturalization. [Cases: Aliens, Immigration, and Citizenship § 703.] 2. A pattern of behavior conforming to a profession's ethical standards and showing an absence of moral turpitude. • Good moral character is usu. a requirement of persons applying to practice a profession such as law or medicine. [Cases: Licenses § 20.]

good offices. Int'l law. The involvement of one or more countries or an international organization in a dispute between other countries with the aim of contributing to its settlement or at least easing relations between the disputing countries.

good of the order. Parliamentary law. A time scheduled, usu. late in a meeting, for informal announcements, comments, and suggestions that do not seek the meeting's immediate action. — Also termed general good and welfare; open forum; open microphone.

Goodright. Hist. A name sometimes used as a fictitious plaintiff in an ejection action. • "John Doe" was used more frequently. — Also termed Goodtitle. Cf. JOHN DOE.

goods. (bef. 12c) 1. Tangible or movable personal property other than money; esp., articles of trade or items of merchandise <goods and services>. • The sale of goods is governed by Article 2 of the UCC. [Cases: Sales § 10.] 2. Things that have value, whether tangible or not <the importance of social goods varies from society to society>.

"'Goods' means all things (including specially manufactured goods) which are movable at the time of identification to the contract for sale other than the money in which the price is to be paid, investment securities, (Article 8), and things in action. 'Goods' also includes the unborn young of animals and growing crops and other identified things attached to realty as described in the section on goods to be severed from realty (Section 2-107)." UCC § 2-105(1).

bulky goods. Goods that are obviously difficult to move because of their nature, their number, or their location.

capital goods. Goods (such as equipment and machinery) used for the production of other goods or services. — Also termed industrial goods.
consumer goods. Goods bought or used primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, and not for resale or for producing other goods. UCC § 9-102(23).
[Cases: Secured Transactions ⊕ 15.]

customers’ goods. Insurance. Goods belonging to the customers of a casualty-insurance policyholder; goods held by a policyholder as a bailee. distressed goods. Goods sold at unusually low prices or at a loss. durable goods. Consumer goods that are designed to be used repeatedly over a long period, such as automobiles or refrigerators. — Also termed durables; hard goods.
fungible goods (fon-jub-bal). Goods that are interchangeable with one another; goods that, by nature or trade usage, are the equivalent of any other like unit, such as coffee or grain. UCC § 1-201(b)(18).

future goods. Goods that will come into being, such as those yet to be manufactured; goods that are not both existing and identified. • A purported present sale of future goods or any interest in them operates as a contract to sell. UCC § 2-105(2).
good samaritan law. (1965) A statute that exempts from liability a person (such as an off-duty physician) who voluntarily renders aid to another in imminent danger but negligently causes injury while rendering the aid. • Some form of good-samaritan legislation has been enacted in all 50 states and in the District of Columbia. — Also written Good Samaritan law. — Also termed good-samaritan statute. Cf. Good Samaritan doctrine.
gray-market goods. See parallel imports. hard goods. See durable goods.
household goods. Goods that are used in connection with a home. • This term usu. arises when a ware­houser claims a lien on what he or she asserts are “household” goods. According to the UCC, a ware­houser may claim a lien on a depositor’s furniture, furnishings, and personal effects that are used in a dwelling. UCC § 7-209(d). industrial goods. See capital goods.
mobile goods. Goods that are normally used in more than one jurisdiction (such as shipping containers and road-construction machinery) and that are held by the debtor as equipment or leased by the debtor to others. • Under previous drafts of the Uniform Commercial Code, the procedure for perfecting a security interest in mobile goods was generally defined by the law of the state where the debtor is located. The current UCC does not distinguish mobile goods. See ordinary goods. UCC § 9-103(3). nonconforming goods. Goods that fail to meet contractual specifications, allowing the buyer to reject the tender of the goods or to revoke their acceptance. UCC §§ 2-601, 2-608. See perfect-tender rule. [Cases: Sales ⊕ 119, 166(l).]
ordinary goods. Goods that are anything other than mobile goods, minerals, or goods covered by a certificate of title. UCC § 9-103(1)(a). • The current UCC does not distinguish between ordinary and mobile goods. [Cases: Secured Transactions ⊕ 14.]
prize goods. Goods captured at sea during wartime.
soft goods. Consumer goods (such as clothing) that are not durable goods.

Good Samaritan action. 1. A deed performed gratuitously by a person to help another who is in peril. — Also termed Good Samaritan act. See Good Samaritan doctrine; Good Samaritan law. 2. A lawsuit brought by a person or group for the benefit of all or part of a community.

Good Samaritan doctrine (sa-mar-i-tan). (1952) Courts. The principle that a person who is injured while attempting to aid another in imminent danger, and who then sues the one whose negligence created the danger, will not be charged with contributory negligence unless the rescue attempt is an unreasonable one or the rescuer acts unreasonably in performing the attempted rescue. Cf. emergency doctrine; rescue doctrine; lost-chance doctrine. [Cases: Negligence ⊕ 510(3).] goods and chattels (chat-az-lz), n. (16c) Loosely, personal property of any kind; occasionally, tangible personal property only. — Also termed goods and effects; goods and merchandise.
good-soldier defense. An excuse theory based on the assertion that a defendant was following orders, esp. of a military or corporate superior. • The term is a derisive label rather than a valid defense. Following an order does not relieve a defendant of responsibility for wrongful acts unless there are circumstances that would amount to coercion.
good time. See time.
good-time law. A statute allowing a prisoner’s sentence to be reduced by a stated number of days for each month or year of good behavior while incarcerated. — Also termed good-time statute.
good title. See title (2). goodwill. (bef. 12c) A business’s reputation, patronage, and other intangible assets that are considered when appraising the business, esp. for purchase; the ability to earn income in excess of the income that would be expected from the business viewed as a mere collection of assets. • Because an established business’s trademark or servicemark is a symbol of goodwill, trademark infringement is a form of theft of goodwill. By the same token, when a trademark is assigned, the goodwill that it carries is also assigned. — Also written good will. — Also termed enterprise goodwill; commercial goodwill; practice goodwill; economic goodwill. Cf. going-concern value under value (2). [Cases: Good Will C=1, 2.]

"[Goodwill] is only another name for reputation, credit, honesty, fair name, reliability." Harry O. Nims, The Law of Unfair Competition and Trade-Marks 36 (1929).

"Good will is to be distinguished from that element of value referred to variously as going-concern value, going value, or going business. Although some courts have stated that the difference is merely technical and that it is unimportant to attempt to separate these intangibles, it is generally held that going-concern value is that which inheres in a plant of an established business." 38 Am. Jur. 2d Good Will § 2, at 913 (1968).

individual goodwill. See personal goodwill.

personal goodwill. Goodwill attributable to an individual's skills, knowledge, efforts, training, or reputation in making a business successful. — Also termed professional goodwill; separate goodwill; individual goodwill.

professional goodwill. See personal goodwill.

separate goodwill. See personal goodwill.

goose case. See Whitehorse case.

gore (gor), n. (bef. 12c) 1. Hist. A small, narrow slip of land. 2. A small (often triangular) piece of land, such as may be left between surveys that do not close. 3. In some New England states (such as Maine and Vermont), a county’s subdivision that has little population and thus is not organized as a town.

Gothland sea laws. See Laws of Visby.

go to protest. (Of commercial paper) to be dishonored by nonpayment or nonacceptance <the draft will go to protest>. See dishonor (1); protest (2).

govern, vb. (14c) (Of a precedent) to control a point in issue <the Smith case will govern the outcome of the appeal>.

governing body. 1. government (2). 2. A group of (esp. corporate) officers or persons having ultimate control <the board of directors is the governing body of XYZ, Inc.>

governing document. See document.

government. (14c) 1. The structure of principles and rules determining how a state or organization is regulated. 2. The sovereign power in a nation or state. 3. An organization through which a body of people exercises political authority; the machinery by which sovereign power is expressed <the Canadian government>. • In this sense, the term refers collectively to the political organs of a country regardless of their function or level, and regardless of the subject matter they deal with. Cf. nation; state.

central government. See federal government (1).

de facto government (di fak-toh). 1. A government that has taken over the regular government and exercises sovereignty over a nation. 2. An independent government established and exercised by a group of a country's inhabitants who have separated themselves from the parent state. — Also termed government de facto.

de jure government. A functioning government that is legally established. — Also termed government de jure.

federal government. 1. A national government that exercises some degree of control over smaller political units that have surrendered some degree of power in exchange for the right to participate in national political matters. — Also termed (in federal states) central government. 2. The U.S. government. — Also termed national government. [Cases: United States C=1.]

government de facto. See de facto government.

government de jure. See de jure government.

local government. The government of a particular locality, such as a city, county, or parish; a governing body at a lower level than the state government. • The term includes a school district, fire district, transportation authority, and any other special-purpose district or authority. — Also termed municipal government. [Cases: Municipal Corporations C=6.]

mixed government. A government containing a blend of forms, as in democracy and monarchy.

municipal government. See local government.

national government. 1. See national government. 2. See federal government (2).

proprietary government. Hist. A government granted by the Crown to an individual, in the nature of a feudatory principality, with powers of legislation formerly belonging to the owner of a county palatine. Cf. county palatine.

provisional government. A government temporarily established to govern until a permanent one is organized to replace it.

republican government. A government in the republican form; specif., a government by representatives chosen by the people. [Cases: States C=4,3.]

state government. The government of a state of the United States. [Cases: States C=1.]

4. The executive branch of the U.S. government. 5. The prosecutors in a given criminal case <the government has objected to the introduction of that evidence>. 6. An academic course devoted to the study of government; political science <Bridges is enrolled in Government 101>.

government agency. See AGENCY (3).

government-agency defense. Torts. An affirmative defense that immunizes a contractor from liability upon proof that the contractor acted on the government's behalf as an agent or as a government officer.

government-agency security. See government security under security.

government agent. See agent (2).

governmental act. See governmental function.

governmental activity. See governmental function.

governmental employee benefit plan. See governmental plan under employee benefit plan.

governmental enterprise. See enterprise.

governmental function. (1817) Torts. A government agency’s conduct that is expressly or impliedly mandated or authorized by constitution, statute, or other law and that is carried out for the benefit of the general public.

• Generally, a governmental entity is immune from tort liability for governmental acts. — Also termed governmental act; governmental activity. See public-function test. Cf. proprietary function. [Cases: Municipal Corporations ☐ 724.]

"[A]ctivities of police or firefighters, though tortious, are usually considered governmental in the sense that they involve the kind of power expected of the government, even if its exercise in the specific case is wrongful. The city is immune as to such activities for this reason. On the other hand, if the city operates a local electric or water company for which fees are charged, this looks very much like private enterprise and is usually considered proprietary. . . . The difficult distinction between governmental and proprietary functions is even more troubling where the city’s conduct combines both kinds of function at once. For example, operation of a sanitary sewer may be deemed governmental, but operation of a storm sewer may be deemed proprietary." Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 131, at 1053–54 (W. Page Keeton ed., 5th ed. 1984).

governmental-function theory. (1936) Constitutional law. A principle by which private conduct is characterized as state action, esp. for due-process and equal-protection purposes, when a private party is exercising a public function. • Under this theory, for example, a political party (which is a private entity) cannot exclude voters from primary elections on the basis of race. — Also termed public-function rationale. [Cases: Civil Rights ☐ 1326(4, 7); Constitutional Law ☐ 213(4), 254(4).] governmental immunity. See sovereign immunity under immunity (1).

governmental instrumentality. (1854) A constitutionally or legislatively created agency that is immune from certain kinds of liability, as for taxes or punitive damages. [Cases: United States ☐ 53.]

governmental-interest-analysis technique. See interest-analysis technique.

governmental plan. See employee benefit plan.

governmental secret. See state secret.

governmental trust. See trust.

governmental unit. A subdivision, agency, department, county, parish, municipality, or other unit of the government of a country or a state. • The term includes an organization with a separate corporate existence only if the organization can legally issue debt obligations on which interest is exempt from income taxation under national law. UCC § 9-102(a)(45). [Cases: Municipal Corporations ☐ 6.]

government-annuity society. Hist. One of several organizations formed in England to enable the working class to provide for themselves by purchasing, on advantageous terms, a government annuity for life or for a term of years.

government bond. 1. See savings bond under bond (3).

2. See government security under security.

government contract. See contract.

government-contractor defense. An affirmative defense that immunizes a government contractor from civil liability under state law when the contractor complies with government specifications. • Immunization is extended when two conditions are satisfied: (1) the supplier warned the government about any dangers presented by the goods about which the supplier had knowledge but the government did not, and (2) the government itself is immune from liability under the Feres doctrine. Essentially, this federal common-law defense, which has been applied in cases of negligence, strict liability, and breach of warranty, extends sovereign immunity over the contractor. The leading case on this defense is Boyle v. United Techs. Corp., 487 U.S. 500, 108 S.Ct. 2510 (1988). — Also termed Boyle defense; government-contract defense; government-contract-specification defense; (in military context) military-contractor defense. See FERES DOCTRINE. Cf. government-agency defense. [Cases: Aviation ☐ 13; Products Liability ☐ 117.]

Government National Mortgage Association. A federally owned corporation in the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development responsible for guaranteeing mortgage-backed securities composed of FHA-insured or VA-guaranteed mortgage loans. ➢ The Association purchases, on the secondary market, residential mortgages originated by local lenders; it then issues federally insured securities backed by these mortgages. ➢ Abbr. GNMA. ➢ Also termed Ginnie Mae. [Cases: United States ⊂ 53(9).]

government of laws. The doctrine that government must operate according to established, consistent legal principles and not according to the interests of those who happen to be in power at a given time; esp., the doctrine that judicial decisions must be based on the law, regardless of the character of the litigants or the personal predilections of the judge.

government plan. See governmental plan under employee benefit plan.

Government Printing Office. An office in the legislative branch of the federal government responsible for printing and distributing congressional publications and publications of other agencies of the United States government. ➢ The Office is supervised by the Congressional Joint Committee on Printing. It began operating in 1860. ➢ Abbr. GPO.

GPO. abbr. government printing office.

grab law. (1884) The various means of debt collection involving remedies outside the scope of federal bankruptcy law, such as attachment and garnishment; aggressive collection practices. [Cases: Attachment ⊂ 1; Garnishment ⊂ 1.]

grace period. (1945) ➢ A period of extra time allowed for taking some required action (such as making payment) without incurring the usual penalty for being late. ➢ Insurance policies typically provide for a grace period of 30 days beyond the premium's due date, during which the premium may be paid without the policy being canceled. And Article 9 of the UCC provides for a 10-day grace period, after the collateral is received, during which a purchase-money security interest must be perfected to have priority over any conflicting security interests. ➢ Also termed days of grace; grace days. 2. Patents. The one-year interval allowed by the U.S. Patent Act between the time an invention is used in public, sold, offered for sale, or disclosed in a publication and the time the inventor applies for a patent. ➢ Most countries follow the doctrine of absolute priority and do not allow a grace period. ➢ Sometimes shortened to grace. Cf. statutory bar; absolute novelty under novelty.

gradatim (gra-day-tim), adv. (16c) [Latin] Roman law. Gradually; by successive degrees of relationship. ➢ Gradatim refers to the step-by-step admission of successors when there is no heir next in line. See gradus.

grade, n. Criminal law. An incremental step in the scale of punishments for offenses, based on a particular offense's seriousness <several grades of murder>. See degree (2).

graded offense. See offense (1).

grading. The fixing of a criminal offense at a level of seriousness, such as first degree, second degree, or third degree (in reference to a felony), or Class A, Class B, or Class C (in reference to a misdemeanor). See degree of crime. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊂ 28.]

gradual method. An intestate-inheritance scheme that gives priority to relatives who are nearest in degree of consanguinity. ➢ This method dates back to the English Statute of Distributions (1670). Cf. parental method; universal inheritance rule.

gradus (gray-d-as), n. [Latin "step"] 1. Roman law. A step or degree in the familial relationship. ➢ The term identified a position in the order of succession under a will. 2. Hist. A degree, rank, or grade; specif., the rank of a master-in-chancery or a serjeant-at-law.

graffer (graf-ar). (15c) Hist. A notary or scrivener. ➢ Also termed graffarius.

grafium (graf-e-em). Hist. A register or cartulary of deeds and other documents establishing title to property, esp. real property. ➢ Also spelled grafiun.

grafio (gray-fee-oh). [Law Latin] Hist. 1. A baron; a viscount. ➢ A grafio was inferior to a count. 2. A fiscal judge, responsible for collecting taxes and fines. ➢ The term was chiefly used among early European nations.
Graft, n. (14c) 1. The act of using a position of trust to gain money or property dishonestly; esp., a public official's fraudulent acquisition of public funds. 2. Money or property gained illegally or unfairly.

Graham factors. (1966) Patents. A three-part test for determining obviousness under § 103 of the Patent Act of 1952, looking at (1) the scope and content of the prior art, (2) the differences between the prior art and the patent claims, and (3) the level of ordinary skill in the pertinent art. Graham v. John Deere Co. of Kansas City, 383 U.S. 1, 86 S.Ct. 684 (1966). See NONOBVIOUSNESS. [Cases: Patents © 16.]

Grain Inspection, Packers, and Stockyards Administration. An agency in the U.S. Department of Agriculture responsible for helping to market meat, cereals, and related agricultural products, and for promoting fair trade practices. — Abbr. GIPSA.

Grammatical interpretation. See interpretation.

Granage. (16c) Hist. A duty consisting of one-twentieth of the salt imported by an alien into London.

Granatarius (gran-o-tair-ee-os). [Law Latin] A collection of the customs or customary laws of the Duchy of Normandy. — The code was probably compiled in the 13th century, and it still remains the law of Jersey, except to the extent that it has been modified by later legislation and judicial decisions. See CLAMEUR DE HARO.

Grand Assize. See ASIZE (5).

Grand Bill of Sale. See BILL (7).

Grand Cape. See CAPE MAGNUM under CAPE.

Grand Coutumier de Pays et Duché de Normandie (gron koo-t [y]oo-myay do pay a d shay do nor-man-dee). [French] Hist. A collection of the customary laws of the Duchy of Normandy. 1. The code was probably compiled in the 13th century, and it still remains the law of Jersey, except to the extent that it has been modified by later legislation and judicial decisions. See CLAMEUR DE HARO.

Grand Day. English law. 1. Hist. One of four holy days on which the courts were not in session. 1. Each of the four court terms had a Grand Day. The four Grand Days were Candlemas Day (February 2), Ascension Day (March 25), St. John the Baptist Day (June 24), and All Saints' Day (November 1). The Inns of Court and of Chancery ceremoniously observed each Grand Day. 2. A day in each term on which the Benchers of the Inns of Court host ceremonial dinners in their halls. See BENCHER. Cf. TERM (6).

Grand Distress. See DISTRESS.

Grandfather, vb. (1953) To cover (a person) with the benefits of a grandfather clause <the statute sets the drinking age at 21 but grandfather those who are 18 or older on the statute's effective date>.

Grandfather clause. (1900) 1. Hist. A clause in the constitutions of some Southern states exempting from suffrage restrictions the descendants of men who could vote before the Civil War. 2. The U.S. Supreme Court held that a clause of this kind in the Oklahoma Constitution violated the 15th Amendment. Guinn v. United States, 238 U.S. 347, 35 S.Ct. 926 (1915). 3. In a government contract, a provision that creates an exemption from the law's effect for something that existed before the law's effective date; specif., a statutory or regulatory clause that exempts a class of persons or transactions because of circumstances existing before the new rule or regulation takes effect. [Cases: Statutes © 228.]

Grand Inquest. See INQUEST.

Grand Juror. See JUROR.

Grand Jury. (15c) A body of (usu. 16 to 23) people who are chosen to sit permanently for at least a month — and sometimes a year — and who, in ex parte proceedings, decide whether to issue indictments. — See Fed. R. Crim. P. 6. 1. If the grand jury decides that evidence is strong enough to hold a suspect for trial, it returns a bill of indictment (a true bill) charging the suspect with a specific crime. — Also termed accusing jury; presenting jury; jury of indictment. Cf. petit jury under JURY. [Cases: Grand Jury © 1.]

> "The grand jury serves — or may serve — two distinct functions. One is a screening function; the grand jury evaluates evidence supporting possible charges and returns a true bill only in those cases in which the evidence amounts to at least probable cause. The other is an investigatory function; the grand jury sometimes develops information that is of value in determining whether grounds for a charge exist and — perhaps incidentally — in proving that charge at the defendant's later trial." Frank W. Miller et al., Cases and Materials on Criminal Justice Administration 546 (3d ed. 1986).

Additional Grand Jury. See special grand jury.

Investigative Grand Jury. (1960) A grand jury whose primary function is to examine possible crimes and develop evidence not currently available to the prosecution. — Also termed investigatory grand jury.

Runaway Grand Jury. (1959) A grand jury that acts essentially in opposition to the prosecution, as by calling its own witnesses, perversely failing to return an indictment that the prosecution has requested, or returning an indictment that the prosecution did not request.

Screening Grand Jury. (1990) A grand jury whose primary function is to decide whether to issue an indictment. special grand jury. (1854) A grand jury specially summoned, usu. when the regular grand jury either has already been discharged or has not been drawn; a grand jury with limited authority. — Also termed additional grand jury; extraordinary grand jury.

[Cases: Grand Jury C=10.]

Grand Jury Clause. (1949) The clause of the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution requiring an indictment by a grand jury before a person can be tried for serious offenses. [Cases: Grand Jury C=2.]

grand-jury witness. See witness.

grand larceny. See larceny.

grand list. See assessment roll.

grandparent application. See patent application.

grandparent rights. A grandfather's or grandmother's rights in seeking visitation with a grandchild. By statute in most states, in certain circumstances a grandparent may seek court-ordered visitation with a grandchild. Typically these circumstances include the death of the grandparents' child (the child's parent) and the divorce of the child's parents. But the United States Supreme Court has held that the primary, constitutionally protected right of decision-making regarding association with a child lies with the child's parents. As a general rule, if the parent is a fit and proper guardian and objects to visitation, the parent's will prevails. Troxel v. Granville, 530 U.S. 57, 120 S.Ct. 2054 (2000). [Cases: Child Custody C=283.] grandparent visitation. See visitation.

Grand Remonstrance (ri-mon-strants). Hist. A protest document issued by the House of Commons in 1641, setting forth numerous political grievances against Charles I. The document demanded three primary remedial measures: (1) improvements in the administration of justice, (2) appointment of trustworthy ministers, and (3) enforcement of the laws against Roman Catholics. It was the first major split between the Royalist and Parliamentary parties, and it led Charles to seek the arrest of the five members who pushed the document through the Commons.

grand serjeanty. See serjeanty.

Grand Survey. See grand inquest (2) under inquest.

grange (grayn). (14c) 1. Hist. A farm furnished with all the necessities for husbandry, such as a barn, granary, and stables; esp., an outlying farm that belonged to a religious establishment or a feudal lord. 2. (cap.) A social, educational, and political organization, formally called the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry, that informs its members about agriculture-related legislation and proposals, and represents farm interests in lobbying government. The Grange was formed in 1867 and soon became the foundation of the Granger Movement, a 19th-century political force that protested economic abuses that increased farmers' costs while forcing down prices for agricultural products. Movement followers (called Grangers) controlled several Midwest state legislatures and passed Granger laws that set maximum rates for railroads, warehouses, and grain elevators. Railroads and other interested parties challenged the constitutionality of these laws in what have become known as the Granger Cases.

Granger Cases (grayn-jar). Six U.S. Supreme Court decisions holding that the police power of the states enabled them, through legislation, to regulate fees charged by common carriers, warehouses, and grain elevators.

- The cases, decided in 1876, arose out of grangers' (i.e., farmers') frustration with the inflated prices they were paying to store and transport their agricultural products. When several state legislatures passed laws regulating those prices, the affected businesses sued to have the laws overturned on grounds that they violated the Commerce Clause and the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment. The Court rejected these claims, holding that the activities involved affected the public interest and were therefore subject to the government's regulatory authority. See Grange (2).

Granger Movement. See Grange (2).

grant, n. (13c) 1. An agreement that creates a right or interest in favor of a person or that effects a transfer of a right or interest from one person to another. Examples include leases, easements, charges, patents, franchises, powers, and licenses. 2. The formal transfer of real property. [Cases: Deeds C=3.] 3. The document by which a transfer is effected; esp., deed. 4. The property or property right so transferred.

community grant. A grant of real property made by a government (or sometimes by an individual) for communal use, to be held in common with no right to sell. A community grant may set out specific, communal uses for the property, such as for grazing animals or maintaining a playground. Cf. private grant. [Cases: Public Lands C=223(4).]

escheat grant. A government's grant of escheated land to a new owner. — Also termed escheat patent. [Cases: Escheat C=8(1).]

imperfect grant. 1. A grant that requires the grantor to do something before the title passes to another. Cf. perfect grant. 2. A grant that does not convey all rights and complete title against both private persons and government, so that the granting person or political authority may later disavow the grant. See Paschal v. Perex, 7 Tex. 366 (1851).

inclusive grant. A deed or grant that describes the boundaries of the land conveyed and excepts certain parcels within those boundaries from the conveyance, usu. because those parcels of land are owned or claimed by others. — Also termed inclusive deed.

office grant. A grant made by a legal officer because the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute a deed to pass title, as in the case of a tax deed. See tax deed under deed.

perfect grant. A grant for which the grantor has done everything required to pass a complete title, and the grantee has done everything required to receive and enjoy the property in fee. Cf. imperfect grant (1).

private grant. A grant of real property made to an individual for his or her private use, including the right to sell it. • Private grants made by a government are often found in the chains of title for land outside the original 13 states, esp. in former Spanish and Mexican possessions. Cf. community grant.

5. SUBSIDY (1).

grant, vb. (13c) 1. To give or confer (something), with or without compensation <the parents granted the car to their daughter on her 16th birthday>. 2. To formally transfer (real property) by deed or other writing <the Lewisons granted the townhouse to the Bufords>. [Cases: Deeds C-3.] 3. To permit or agree to <the press secretary granted the reporter access to the Oval Office>. 4. To approve, warrant, or order (a request, motion, etc.) <the court granted the continuance>. 5. Int'l law. See SUBSIDY (3).

grantback, n. (1956) A license-agreement provision requiring the licensee to assign or license back to the licensor any improvements that the licensee might make to a patent or other proprietary right. [Cases: Patents C-213.]

grant to uses. Hist. A conveyance of legal title to real property to one person for the benefit of another. • If, for example, A conveyed land to B and his heirs to the use of C and his heirs, B — the feoffee to uses — acquired seisin in and had possession of the land and was considered the legal owner. C — the cestui que use — was considered the equitable owner of the land and was entitled to the land’s rents, profits, and benefits. Because the cestui que use did not have seisin in the land, he was not subject to feudal payments. From the 13th century forward, the grant to uses was an increasingly popular mode of conveyance. See cestui que use; statute of uses; use (4).

grass hearth. Hist. A tenant’s customary service, consisting of the tenant’s bringing his plow to the lord’s land and plowing it for one day.

grassum (gras-um). [Law Latin] 1. Scots law. A single lease payment made in addition to the periodic payments due under an agreement; a payment in addition to the rent paid by a tenant to the landlord.

Pl. grassums.

“Grassum: an anticipation of rent in a gross or lump sum . . . . in questions with singular successors there is no limitation of the power to take grassums, only the rent must not be thereby diminished so as to be altogether elusory. In regard, however, to lands under entail, the heir in possession must administer the estate secondum bonum et aequum, taking no more of the annually accruing rents and profits than he leaves to descend to his successors. Hence, grassums, as being, in effect, anticipations of the future rents, to the prejudice of succeeding heirs, are held to be struck at by the prohibition against alienation.” William Bell, Bell’s Dictionary and Digest of the Laws of Scotland 492 (George Watson ed., 7th ed. 1890).

2. gressum. 3. gersum (1). 4. gersum (2).

gratia curiae (gray-shee-a kyoor-ee-ee or -i). [Latin] Favor of the court. Cf. RIGOR JURIS.

gratia mandatarii (gray-shee-a man-da-tair-ee-i). [Latin] Hist. For the sake of the mandatary. • The phrase appeared in reference to the irrevocability of a mandate given solely for the mandatary’s benefit.

“Gratia mandatarii . . . . In the general case, a mandate, being for the benefit of the mandant, may be recalled by him at pleasure. Mandates, however, which are granted solely for the sake (or advantage) of the mandatary, such as the mandate contained in the registration clause of a deed, whereby the granter gives authority for its registration, are not revocable.” John Trayner, Trayner’s Latin Maxims 237 (4th ed. 1894).

Great Lakes rule. Maritime law. The statutory provision that an admiralty litigant is entitled to a jury trial in a contract or tort action if the lawsuit arises from the operation of a commercial vessel on the Great Lakes or the navigable waters connecting them. See 28 USCA § 1873. [Cases: Admiralty C---80,]

‘The most important distinction between the law and admiralty ‘sides’ of federal court is that trial by jury is guaranteed for law claims through the Seventh Amendment, but where the case is maintained as an admiralty claim the litigant has neither constitutional nor statutory right to a jury trial. The one exception is the ‘Great Lakes Rule’ . . .” Frank L. Maraist & Thomas C. Calligan Jr., Admiralty in a Nutshell 358 (4th ed. 2001).

Great Law, The. Hist. The first code of laws enacted in Pennsylvania. • The Great Law was passed in 1682 by an assembly that had been called by William Penn.

guarantee (gar-an-tee), n. (17c) 1. The assurance that a contract or legal act will be duly carried out. 2. GUARANTY (1).

"In practice, guarantee, n., is the usual term, seen often, for example, in the context of consumer warranties or other assurances of quality or performance. Guarantee, in contrast, is now used primarily in financial and banking contexts in the sense 'a promise to answer for the debt of another.' Guarantee is now rarely seen in nonlegal writing, whether in G.B. or in the U.S.." Bryan A. Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage 394 (2d ed. 1995)."
guarantee, vb. (18c) 1. To assume a suretyship obligation; to agree to answer for a debt or default. [Cases: Guaranty C=> 1.] 2. To promise that a contract or legal act will be duly carried out. [Cases: Guaranty C=> 11.] 3. To give security to.

guaranteed annual wage plan. Labor law. A wage-payment method in which the employer agrees either to pay employees a predetermined minimum sum each year or to provide a minimum number of hours of employment each year. • A wide variety of guaranteed annual wage plans are used. For example, an employer may agree to pay employees wages for each week in the year, even though work may not be available at certain times of the year. The purpose of such a plan is to provide a stable labor force year-round.

guaranteed bond. See bond (3).

guaranteed investment contract. See investment contract.

guaranteed-purchase contract. See guaranteed-sale contract under contract.

guaranteed-sale contract. See contract.

guaranteed stock. See stock.

guarantee of title. Property. A warranty that the title to a piece of real property is vested in a particular person, given by a title company or abstract company, and based on a title searcher's opinion of the status of the property's title. The guarantee is usu. backed by insurance to cover damages resulting from the title searcher's oversight or negligence in finding recorded legal instruments. Cf. title insurance under insurance. [Cases: Abstracts of Title C=> 1; Covenants C=> 46.] guarantee stock. See stock.

guarantee treaty. See treaty (1).

guarantor. (19c) One who makes a guaranty or gives security for a debt. • While a surety's liability begins with that of the principal, a guarantor's liability does not begin until the principal debtor is in default. Cf. surety (1). [Cases: Guaranty C=> 29, 33, 44.]

"A guarantor either guarantees payment or collection, depending on the words used. 'Payment guaranteed' or equivalent words added to a signature mean the signer will pay the instrument if it is not paid when due without a need for the holder to resort to another party. 'Collection guaranteed' means resort must first be had to others." Fred H. Miller & Alvin C. Harrell, The Law of Modern Payment Systems § 5.02, at 195 (2003).

guarantor of collectibility. (1881) One who guarantees a debtor's solvency and is under a duty to pay only if the creditor is unable to collect from the principal debtor after exhausting all legal remedies, including demand, suit, judgment, and any supplementary proceedings. [Cases: Guaranty C=> 33, 45, 77(2).]

guarantor of payment. (1814) One who guarantees payment of a negotiable instrument when it is due without the holder first seeking payment from another party. • A guarantor of payment is liable only if "payment guaranteed" or equivalent words are added to the guarantor's indorsement. [Cases: Guaranty C=> 35, 45, 77.]

guarantor trust. See trust.

guaranty (gar-on-tee), n. (16c) 1. A promise to answer for the payment of some debt, or the performance of some duty, in case of the failure of another who is liable in the first instance. • The term is most common in finance and banking contexts. While a warranty relates to things (not persons), is not collateral, and need not be in writing, a guaranty is an undertaking that a person will pay or do some act, is collateral to the duty of the primary obligor, and must be in writing. On the spelling of guaranty vs. guarantee, see the quotation at guarantee (2). — Also termed guaranty contract. [Cases: Guaranty C=> 1.]

"Both guaranty and warranty are undertakings by one party to another to indemnify the party assured against some possible default or defect. But a guaranty relates to the future, as a collateral promise designed to protect the promisee from loss in case another fails to perform his duty. A warranty relates to the present or past, and is an independent promise designed to protect the promisee from loss in the event that the facts warranted are not as the promisor states them to be when the contract is made. A warranty is broken as soon as it is made if the facts are not as represented, and is enforceable though oral; whereas a guaranty is not breached until a future default occurs, and is unenforceable unless in writing." Laurence P. Simpson, Handbook on the Law of Suretyship 23 (1950).

"A transaction of guaranty involves at least three parties: a promisor, a creditor (the person to whom the promise is made), and a debtor — although at the time the promise is made, the person denominated the 'creditor' need not have extended the credit to the person denominated as the 'debtor.' The usual guaranty situation arises when the promisor makes a promise to the creditor either as to the solvency of the debtor or as to the payment of the debt." 38 Am. Jur. 2d Guaranty § 1, at 996 (1968).

absolute guaranty. (18c) 1. An unqualified promise that the principal will pay or perform. [Cases: Guaranty C=> 42(1).] 2. A guarantor's contractual promise to perform some act for the creditor — such as paying money or delivering property — if the principal debtor defaults.

conditional guaranty. (1813) A guaranty that requires the performance of some condition by the creditor... before the guarantor will become liable. [Cases: Guaranty C=42.]

contingent guaranty. (1843) A guaranty in which the guarantor will not be liable unless a specified event occurs.

continuing guaranty. (1817) A guaranty that governs a course of dealing for an indefinite time or by a succession of credits. — Also termed open guaranty. [Cases: Guaranty C=38.]

cross-stream guaranty. A guaranty made by a company for the obligation of another company when both are owned by the same parent company or individual.

downstream guaranty. 1. A parent corporation's guaranty of a subsidiary's obligations. 2. A guaranty made for a company by a guarantor who is also a partner, member, or stockholder of the company.

general guaranty. (17c) 1. A guaranty addressed to no specific person, so that anyone who acts on it can enforce it. 2. A guaranty for the principal's default on obligations that the principal undertakes with anyone.

good-guy guaranty. A limited guaranty by a third-person that leased property or collateral will be kept in good condition and returned to the lessor or lender if a default occurs. • Good-guy guaranties are most commonly associated with real-property leases. — Also written good-guy guarantee. — Also termed good-guy clause. [Cases: Guaranty C=36(8).]

guaranty of collection. (1843) A guaranty that is conditioned on the creditor's having first exhausted legal remedies against the principal debtor before suing the guarantor. See guarantor of collectibility under guarantor.

guaranty of payment. (1811) A guaranty that is not conditioned on the creditor's exhausting legal remedies against the principal debtor before suing the guarantor. See guaranty of payment under guarantor.

irrevocable guaranty (i-rev-ə-kə-bal). (1898) A guaranty that cannot be terminated unless the other parties consent. [Cases: Guaranty C=24.]

limited guaranty. (1831) An agreement to answer for a debt arising from a single transaction. — Also termed noncontinuing guaranty. [Cases: Guaranty C=38(1).]

open guaranty. See continuing guaranty.

revocable guaranty. (1936) A guaranty that the guarantor may terminate without any other party's consent. [Cases: Guaranty C=24.]

special guaranty. (18c) 1. A guaranty addressed to a particular person or group of persons, who are the only ones who can enforce it. [Cases: Guaranty C=29, 32.] 2. A guaranty that names a definite person as obligee and that can be accepted only by the person named.

specific guaranty. (18c) A guaranty of a single debt or obligation.

upstream guaranty. A guaranty made by a corporate subsidiary for the parent corporation's obligations.

2. guarantor (1).

guard. See doorkeeper.

guardage. Hist. 1. wardship. 2. guardianship.

guardhouse lawyer. See jailhouse lawyer.

guardian, n. (15c) 1. One who has the legal authority and duty to care for another's person or property, esp. because of the other's infancy, incapacity, or disability. • A guardian may be appointed either for all purposes or for a specific purpose. — Abbr. gdn. — Also termed custodian. See conservator. Cf. ward (4). [Cases: Guardian and Ward C=1; Mental Health C=101.]

chancery guardian (chan-ser-e). A guardian appointed by a court of chancery to manage both the person and the estate of the ward. [Cases: Guardian and Ward C=10, 17, 36.]

domestic guardian. A guardian appointed in the state in which the ward is domiciled.

foreign guardian. A guardian appointed by a court in a state other than the one in which the ward is domiciled. • A foreign guardian cares for the ward's property that is located in the state of appointment. [Cases: Guardian and Ward C=166; Mental Health C=194.]

general guardian. A guardian who has general care and control of the ward's person and estate. [Cases: Guardian and Ward C=29, 36; Mental Health C=484.]

guardian ad litem (ad lit-tem or -tam). (18c) A guardian, usu. a lawyer, appointed by the court to appear in a lawsuit on behalf of an incompetent or minor party. — Abbr. GAL. — Also termed special advocate; special guardian; law guardian. Cf. next friend; attorney ad litem under attorney. [Cases: Infants C=76, 205; Mental Health C=485.]

"It is necessary to determine whether the lawyer has been appointed as a guardian ad litem (GAL) charged with representing the child's best interests, or as an advocate, serving as counsel to the child... From the distinction between guardian and advocate flow a series of important consequences, including such matters as whether the attorney may file motions and examine witnesses, whether the attorney may file a report with the court, and whether the attorney may testify. Moreover, in most jurisdictions a GAL has an absolute quasi-judicial immunity for lawsuits..." guardian of the poor for negligence . . . . Although a non-lawyer cannot serve as counsel to the child, such an individual might be a GAL or 'special advocate' in some states. Courts have struggled to clarify these roles, and define how children's representatives may participate in different types of proceedings.

guardian by custom. Hist. A person who, under local custom, had the right to act as a minor's guardian.

guardian by election. A guardian chosen by a ward who would otherwise be without one. [Cases: Guardian and Ward C—19.]

guardian by estoppel. See quasi-guardian.

guardian by nature. Hist. The parental guardian of an heir apparent who has not yet reached the age of 21.

Although the common law recognized the father as a guardian by nature and the mother as one only after the father's death, most states have given both parents equal rights of guardianship over their children (see, e.g., N.Y. Dom. Rel. Law § 81). — Also termed natural guardian. [Cases: Guardian and Ward C—4.]

guardian by nurture. Hist. The parental guardian of a child who is not the heir apparent, lasting until the child reaches the age of 14. — Also termed guardian for nurture.

"There are also guardians for nurture, which are, of course, the father or mother, till the infant attains the age of fourteen years and, in default of father or mother, the ordinary usually assigns some discreet persons to take care of the infant's personal estate, and to provide for his maintenance and education." 1 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 449 (1765).

guardian by statute. See statutory guardian.

guardian de son tort (da sawn: [or son] tor[t]). See quasi-guardian.

guardian for nurture. See guardian by nurture.

guardian in chivalry. Hist. A guardian who, by virtue of knight's service, had custody of the body and lands of a male heir under 21 or a female heir under 14.

• This type of guardian had no accountability for profits.

guardian in socage. New York law. A guardian for a child who has acquired lands by descent. • A guardian is usu. a relative who could not possibly inherit from the child. This type of guardianship applies to both the person and the property of the child and, historically, lasted only until the child was 14, when the child was allowed to select a guardian; now it lasts until the child reaches age 18 or is emancipated.

guardian of property. See guardian of the estate.

guardian of the estate. A guardian responsible for taking care of the property of someone who is incapable of caring for his or her own property because of infancy, incapacity, or disability. [Cases: Guardian and Ward C—1, 36; Mental Health C—211, 216.]

guardian of the person. A guardian responsible for taking care of someone who is incapable of caring for himself or herself because of infancy, incapacity, or disability. [Cases: Guardian and Ward C—1, 29; Mental Health C—101.]

dlaw guardian. See guardian ad litem.

natural guardian. 1. Hist. The eldest son's father, until the son turned 21. 2. In the absence of statute, the father of a legitimate child until the child reaches the age of 21. • A father of illegitimate children may be appointed as their guardian upon the mother's death.

3. Most commonly and by statute, either the father or the mother of a minor child — each bearing the title simultaneously. • If one parent dies, the other is the natural guardian. See guardian by nature. [Cases: Guardian and Ward C—7.]

partial guardian. A guardian whose rights, duties, and powers are strictly limited to those specified in a court order.

quasi-guardian. A guardian who assumes that role without any authority.

• Examples are guardians who have custody of the estate but not of the person, those who have custody of the person but not of the estate, and guardians ad litem. — Also termed (in civil law) curator ad hoc. See curator (2). 2. See guardian ad litem. [Cases: Mental Health C—495.]

standby guardian. A parent-designated guardian who is appointed to assume responsibility for a child at a future date if the child's parent becomes incapable of caring for the child but who does not disvest the parent of custodial rights.

• Several states have enacted statutes providing for a standby guardian in the case of a terminally ill single parent. A standby guardian assumes responsibility for a child during periods of the parent's incapacity and upon the parent's death. [Cases: Guardian and Ward C—10.]

statutory guardian. A guardian appointed by a court having special statutory jurisdiction. — Also termed guardian by statute.

successor guardian. An alternate guardian named in a parent's will against the possibility that the first nominee cannot or will not serve as guardian. [Cases: Guardian and Ward C—27; Mental Health C—178.]

testamentary guardian. A guardian nominated by a parent's will for the person and property of a child until the child reaches the age of majority.

2. Hist. A mesne lord who was entitled to treat an infant heir's lands for all practical purposes as the lord's own, enjoying fully their use and whatever profits they yielded. • At the end of the guardianship, when the heir reached majority, no accounting was owed by the mesne lord.

guardian of the poor. Hist. A person in charge of the relief and maintenance of the poor in a parish.
Guardians of the poor administered poor-relief funds raised under the Poor Relief Act of 1601. The function is now performed by local authorities.

guardian of the spiritualities. Eccles. law. A person who exercises the spiritual and ecclesiastical jurisdiction of a diocese during a vacancy in the see or the absence of the bishop.

guardian of the temporalities. Eccles. law. The person to whom custody of the secular possessions of a vacant see or abbey is committed by the Crown. Temporalities (secular possessions) are the land, revenue, and tenements that archbishops and bishops have had annexed to their sees.

Guardianship. (15c) 1. The fiduciary relationship between a guardian and a ward or other incapacitated person, whereby the guardian assumes the power to make decisions about the ward’s person or property. A guardianship is almost always an involuntary procedure imposed by the state on the ward. Cf. conservatorship; interdiction. [Cases: Guardian and Ward Cū 1; Mental Health Cū 101.] 2. The duties and responsibilities of a guardian. — Also termed guardianship.

ancillary guardianship. A subservient and subsidiary guardianship in a state other than that in which guardianship is originally granted. [Cases: Guardian and Ward Cū 166-172; Mental Health Cū 194.1.]

Guardianship of the estate. A guardianship in which the guardian can make decisions only about matters regarding the ward’s assets and property. [Cases: Guardian and Ward Cū 33; Mental Health Cū 211.]

Guardianship of the person. A guardianship in which the guardian is authorized to make all significant decisions affecting the ward’s well-being, including the ward’s physical custody, education, health, activities, personal relationships, and general welfare. [Cases: Guardian and Ward Cū 29; Mental Health Cū 101.]

Plenary guardianship. A guardianship in which the guardian can make decisions about both the ward’s estate and the ward’s person. [Cases: Mental Health Cū 101.]

Standby guardianship. A guardianship in which a parent designates a guardian to assume responsibility for a child at a future date, if the child’s parent becomes incapable of caring for the child, but without divesting the parent of custodial rights.

gubernator navis (gū-bar-nay-tor-nay-vis). [Latin “ship helmsman”] Roman law. The pilot or steersman of a ship. The gubernator navis could be sued for damages if he negligently caused a collision.

guilty plea. See PLEA (1). guilty verdict. See VERDICT.
gun-control law. (1968) A statute or ordinance that regulates the sale, possession, or use of firearms. Gun-control laws vary widely among the states, and many cities have gun-control ordinances. Federal law restricts and regulates the illegal sale, possession, and use of firearms. 18 USCA §§ 921-930. See BRADY ACT.

Gun-Free Schools Act. A federal law designed to eliminate weapons in schools. 20 USCA § 7151. The Gun-Free Schools Act provides that each state receiving federal funds for elementary and secondary schools must require school districts to expel for one year any student found to have brought a weapon to school. The Act does, however, provide for a case-by-case modification of the expulsion requirement. [Cases: Schools C-177.]
gun-jumping. Slang. The act of unlawfully soliciting the public's purchase of securities before the SEC approves a registration statement; the making of offers after the filing of a registration statement, but before its effective date, when such offers violate the Securities Act. — Also termed conditioning the market. See REGISTRATION STATEMENT.

H. abbr. 1. House of Representatives. 2. House report. 3. See house bill under bill (3). 4. In the citation of English statutes, a king named Henry. 5. In the Year Books, the Hilary term. See Year Books (3); Hilary Sittings. 6. In tax assessments and other such official reports, a house.

habe (hay-bee). [Law Latin] A form of the salutatory expression aye ("hail"). — Also termed have (hay-vee).

habeas corpora juratorum (hay-bee-as kor-par-ahjur-ah-tor-am). [Law Latin "that you have the bodies of the jurors"] Hist. A writ commanding the sheriff to bring in jurors and, if necessary, to take their lands and goods as security to ensure their attendance in court for a trial setting. • This writ issued from the Court of Common Pleas and served the same purpose as a distringas juratores in the King's Bench. The writ was abolished in 1852.

habeas corpus (hay-bee-as kor-pas). [Law Latin "that you have the body"] (18c) A writ employed to bring a person before a court, most frequently to ensure that the person's imprisonment or detention is not illegal (habeas corpus ad subjiciendum). • In addition to being used to test the legality of an arrest or commitment, the writ may be used to obtain judicial review of (1) the regularity of the extradition process, (2) the right to or amount of bail, or (3) the jurisdiction of a court that has imposed a criminal sentence. — Abbr. H.C. — Sometimes shortened to habeas. — Also termed writ of habeas corpus; Great Writ. [Cases: Habeas Corpus C-201.]

"The writ of habeas corpus, by which the legal authority under which a person may be detained can be challenged, is of immemorial antiquity. After a checkered career in which it was involved in the struggles between the common-law courts and the Courts of Chancery and the Star Chamber, as well as in the conflicts between Parliament and the crown, the protection of the writ was firmly written into English law by the Habeas Corpus Act of 1679. Today it is said to be 'perhaps the most important writ known to the constitutional law of England . . . .'" — Charles Alan Wright, The Law of Federal Courts S 53, at 350 (5th ed. 1994) (quoting Secretary of State for Home Affairs v. O'Brien, [1923] A.C. 603, 609).

habeas corpus ad deliberandum et recipiendum (hay-bee-as kor-pas ad di-lib-ahran-dam et ri-sip-ee-en-dam). [Law Latin "that you have the body to consider and receive"] Hist. A writ used to remove a person for trial from one county to the county where the person allegedly committed the offense. Cf. extradition.

habeas corpus ad faciendum et recipiendum (hay-bee-as kor-pas ad fay-shee-en-dam et ri-sip-ee-en-dam). [Law Latin "that you have the body to do and receive"] Hist. A writ used in civil cases to remove the case, and also the body of the defendant, from an inferior court to a superior court. — Also termed habeas corpus cum causa. See Certiorari.

habeas corpus ad prosequeendum (hay-bee-as kor-pas ad prahs-a-kwen-dam). [Law Latin "that you have the body to prosecute"] A writ used in criminal cases to bring before a court a prisoner to be tried on charges other than those for which the prisoner is currently being confined. [Cases: Criminal Law C-243.]

habeas corpus ad respondendum (hay-bee-as kor-pas ad ree-spon-den-dam). [Law Latin "that you have the body to respond"] Hist. A writ used in civil cases to remove a person from one court's custody into that of another court, in which the person may then be sued.

habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum (hay-bee-as kor-pas ad sat-is-fay-shee-en-dam). [Law Latin "that you have the body to make amends"] In England, a writ used to bring a prisoner against whom a judgment has been entered to some superior court so that the plaintiff can proceed to execute that judgment.

habeas corpus ad subiciendum (hay-bee-as kor-pas ad sa-bjis-ee-en-dam). [Law Latin "that you have the body to submit to"] A writ directed to someone detaining another person and commanding that the detainee be brought to court. — Usu. shortened to habeas corpus. [Cases: Habeas Corpus C-201.]

habeas corpus ad testificandum (hay-bee-as kor-pas ad tes-ti-fi-kan-dam). [Law Latin "that you have the body to testify"] Hist. A writ used in civil and criminal cases to bring a prisoner to court to testify. [Cases: Witnesses C-18.]

habeas corpus cum causa. See habeas corpus ad faciendum et recipiendum.

Habeas Corpus Act. 1. One of the four great charters of English liberty (31 Car. 2, 1679), securing to English subjects speedy relief from all unlawful imprisonments. • The other three great charters are Magna Carta, the Petition of Right (3 Car. 1, 1628), and the Bill of Rights (1 Wm. & M. 1689). The Habeas Corpus Act does not apply in Scotland; the corresponding statute is the Criminal Procedure Act of 1701, ch. 6. 2. A statute deriving ultimately from the English statute and enacted in the United States as a constitutional guarantee of personal liberty. [Cases: Habeas Corpus C-201–913.]

habendum clause (ho-ben-dam). (1829) 1. The part of an instrument, such as a deed or will, that defines the extent of the interest being granted and any conditions affecting the grant. • The introductory words to the clause are ordinarily to have and to hold. — Also termed to-have-and-to-hold clause. [Cases: Deeds C-120.] 2. Oil & gas. The provision in an oil-and-gas lease defining how long the interest granted to the lessee will extend. • Modern oil-and-gas leases typically provide for a primary term — a fixed number of years during which the lessee has no obligation to develop the premises — and a secondary term (for "so long thereafter as oil and gas produced") once development takes place. Most jurisdictions require production of paying quantities to keep the lease in effect. • Often shortened to habendum. — Also termed term clause. [Cases: Mines and Minerals 73.5.]

"This part of the deed was originally used to determine the interest granted, or to lessen, enlarge, explain or qualify the premises. But it cannot perform the office of divesting the estate already vested by the deed; for it is void if it be repugnant to the estate granted. It has degenerated into a mere useless form; and the premises now contain the specification of the estate granted, and the deed becomes effectual without any habendum. If, however, the premises should be merely descriptive, and no estate mentioned, then the habendum becomes efficient to declare the intention; and it will rebut any implication arising from the silence of the premises." 4 James Kent, Commentaries on American Law 468 (George Comstock ed., 11th ed. 1866).

habendum et tenendum (ha-ben-dam et ta-nen-dam). [Law Latin] Hist. To have and to hold. • This formal phrase appeared in land deeds and defined the estate or interest being transferred. See HABENDUM CLAUSE; TENENDUM; TO HAVE AND TO HOLD.

habere (ha-beer-ee), vb. [Latin "to have"] Roman law. To have (the right to) something. • This term was sometimes distinguished from tenere (to hold) and possidere (to possess), with habere referring to the right, tenere to the fact, and possidere to both.

"Habere' has two meanings: for we say that the owner of a thing 'has' it and also that a nonowner who holds the thing 'has' it. Lastly, we use the word in relation to property deposited with us." Digest of Justinian 45.1.38.9 (Ulpian, Ad Sabinum 49).

habere facias possessionem (ha-beer-ee fay-shee-as po-zes[hi]-ee-oh-nam), n. [Law Latin "that you cause to have possession"] Hist. A writ giving a successful ejectment-action plaintiff the possession of the recovered land. • If the sheriff delivered more than the person was entitled to, a writ of rehabeere facias seisinam could compel the sheriff to return the excess. • Often shortened to habere facias or hab. fa.

habere facias seisinam (ha-beer-ee fay-shee-as see-zee-nam), n. [Law Latin "that you cause to have seisin"] Hist. A writ of execution commanding the sheriff to give the applicant seisin of the recovered land. • This writ was the proper process for giving seisin of a freehold, as distinguished from giving only a chattel interest in land. See seisin.

habere facias visum (ha-beer-ee fay-shee-as vi-sam or -zam), n. [Law Latin "that you cause to have a view"] Hist. A writ allowing a litigant to inspect the lands in controversy.

habere licere (ha-beer-ee li-seer-ee), vb. [Latin "to allow to have"] Roman law. To stipulate to a purchaser's right to possess and enjoy property undisturbed. • The term denoted a seller's duty to indemnify the purchaser if the purchaser was evicted. An evicted purchaser could raise an action on the stipulation or, under Justinian, an actio ex empto against the seller.

hab. fa. abbr. HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM.

habilis causa transferendi dominii (ha-bi-lis kaw-zoo trans-fa-ren-di do-min-ee-ee). [Law Latin] Hist. An adequate title for transferring the property. • This phrase appeared in reference to the grantor's power and intention to convey the property; the title had to be sufficient to support the conveyance of property. — Also spelled habilis causa transferendi dominii.

Hague Academy of International Law (hayg). A center for advanced studies in international law, both public and private, aimed at facilitating the comprehensive and impartial examination of problems of international legal relations. • It was founded in the Netherlands in 1923 on the initiative of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and the Institut de Droit International. — Also termed Académie de Droit International de La Haye.

Hague Convention. The short name for any one of the many numerous international conventions that address different legal issues and attempt to standardize procedures between nations. [Cases: Treaties C=1.]

Hague Convention on Protection of Children and Cooperation in Respect of Intercountry Adoption. A 1993 international agreement to establish uniform procedures governing intercountry adoptions. • The Convention has not been widely adopted. The U.S. has signed but not ratified it.

Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction. An international convention (concluded in 1980) that seeks to counteract cross-border child-snatching by noncustodial parents. • This convention created a legal mechanism available to parents seeking the return of, or access to, their children. Its purposes are to secure the prompt return of children who have been wrongfully taken from one country to another and to enforce custody and visitation rights in the contracting countries. The procedure is summary in nature and does not contemplate continuing hearings on the merits of a dispute. More than 80 countries are parties to the Convention, including the United States. 42 USCA §§ 11601-11610. [Cases: Child Custody C=802; Treaties C=8.]

Hague Convention on the Service Abroad of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents. An international convention concluded on November 15, 1965, governing procedures for effecting service of process in a foreign country. • More than 35 countries are parties to the Convention, including the United States. Hand formula. (1972) A balancing test for determining whether conduct has created an unreasonable risk of harm, first formulated by Judge Learned Hand in United States v. Carroll Towing Co., 159 F.2d 169 (2d Cir. 1947). • Under this test, an actor is negligent if the burden of taking adequate precautions against the harm is outweighed by the probable gravity of the harm multiplied by the probability that the harm will occur. [Cases: Negligence C<>215.]

"The legal standard applicable to most unintentional tort cases is that of negligence, defined by Judge Learned Hand as follows: the defendant is guilty of negligence if the loss caused by the accident, multiplied by the probability of the accident's occurring, exceeds the burden of the precautions that the defendant might have taken to avert this. It is an economic test.... Although the Hand formula is of relatively recent origin, the method that it encapsulates has been the basic one used to determine negligence even since negligence was first adopted as the standard to govern accident cases." Richard A. Posner, Economic Analysis of Law § 6.2, at 122–23 (2d ed. 1977).

handhabend (hand-hab-and), adj. (14c) Hist. (Of a thief) caught in possession of a stolen item.

hazard pay. (1956) Special compensation for work done under unpleasant or unsafe conditions.

hazing, n. (1850) The practice of physically or emotionally abusing newcomers to an organization as a means of initiation. • In the early 19th century, hazing referred to beating. Hazing was a well-established custom in fraternities at Ivy League universities by the mid-19th century. (One college magazine referred to “the absurd and barbarous custom of hazing, which has long prevailed in the college.” 1 Harvard Mag. 413 (1860)). The first death from hazing was reported at Yale in 1892 (N.Y. Daily News, June 28, 1892). In the late 20th century, many colleges and universities banned hazing and many states passed anti-hazing statutes establishing criminal penalties. See anti-hazing statute.

H.B. See house bill under bill (3).
H.C. abbr. 1. house of commons. 2. habeas corpus.
HDC. abbr. holder in due course.
he. (bef. 12c) A pronoun of the masculine gender, traditionally used and construed in statutes to include both sexes, as well as corporations. • It may also be read as they. Because of the trend toward nonsexist language, fastidious drafters avoid using the generic pronouns he, him, and his unless the reference is only to a male person.

head-and-master rule. Hist. The doctrine that the husband alone is authorized to manage community property. • Some courts have held that the rule is unconstitutional gender-based discrimination. • Also termed lord-and-master rule. Cf. equal-management rule.

headborough. See borsholder. heading. (17c) A brief title or caption of a section of a statute, contract, or other writing.

"The headings prefixed to sections or sets of sections in some modern statutes are regarded as preambles to those sections. They cannot control the plain words of the statute, but they may explain ambiguous words..." P. St. J. Langan, Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes 11 (12th ed. 1969).

headlease. (1909) A primary lease under which a sublease has been granted. • Also spelled head lease. • Also termed primary lease, chief lease. [Cases: Landlord and Tenant C= 75, 76, 80.]

headlessor. (1933) A lessor on a lease of property that has been subleased.

head money. (16c) 1. A tax on people who fit within a designated class; a poll tax. See capitation tax and poll tax under tax. [Cases: Taxation C= 2054.] 2. A bounty offered by a government for a prisoner taken at sea during a naval engagement. • This bounty is divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money. See prize money. 3. A tax or duty on shipowners, imposed by an 1882 federal statute, for every immigrant brought into the United States. • Also termed head tax. 4. Hist. A bounty or reward paid to a person who killed a bandit or outlaw and produced head of family. A person who supports one or more people related by birth, adoption, or marriage and with whom those persons maintain their permanent domicile. • The phrase head of family appears most commonly in homestead law. For a person to have the status of head of family, there must, of necessity, be at least two people in the family. • Also termed head of a family. Cf. head of household. [Cases: Homestead C= 18.]

head of household. (1847) 1. The primary income-provider within a family. 2. For income-tax purposes, an unmarried or separated person (other than a surviving spouse) who provides a home for dependents for more than one-half of the taxable year. • A head of household is taxed at a lower rate than a single person who is not head of a household. Cf. head of family; household. [Cases: Internal Revenue C= 3549.]

headright. (1930) In American Indian law, a tribemember's right to a pro rata portion of income from a tribal trust fund set up under the Allotment Act of 1906. • This type of trust fund is funded largely by mineral royalties arising from land held or once held by the tribemember's tribe. [Cases: Indians C= 141(2), 192.]

headright certificate. Hist. A certificate issued under authority of a Republic of Texas law of 1839 providing that a person was entitled to a grant of 640 acres if the person (1) had immigrated to the Republic between 1 October 1837 and 1 January 1840, (2) was a head of household, and (3) actually resided within the Republic with his or her family. • The grant was to be held under the certificate for three years and then conveyed by absolute deed to the settler.

head shop. A retail establishment that sells items intended for use with illegal drugs.

head-silver. See common fine under fine (4).

head-start injunction. See injunction.

headstream. The source of a river.

head tax. 1. See poll tax under tax. 2. head money (3). headwater. (18c) 1. (usu. pl.) The part of a river or stream that is closest to its source. 2. headstream.

health. (bef. 12c) 1. The state of being sound or whole in body, mind, or soul. 2. Freedom from pain or sickness.

good health. See good health.

public health. (17c) 1. The health of the community at large. 2. The healthful or sanitary condition of the general body of people or the community en masse; esp., the methods of maintaining the health of the community, as by preventive medicine and organized care for the sick. • Many cities have a "public health department" or other agency responsible for maintaining the public health; federal laws dealing with health are administered by the Department of Health and Human Services. [Cases: Health C= 350.] sound health. See sound health.

healthcare-insurance receivable. An interest in or claim under an insurance policy, being a right to payment of a monetary obligation for healthcare goods or services provided. UCC § 9-104(c).

healthcare lien. See lien.

healthcare proxy. See advance directive (1).

health insurance. See insurance.

health-insurance order. Family law. An order requiring a parent either to obtain health insurance for a child or to add a child to an existing health insurance policy.

- Health-insurance orders often include dental insurance. [Cases: Child Support C>158.]

Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act. A 1996 federal law that provides additional health-insurance protections to employees by limiting the effect of preexisting conditions on an employee's ability to obtain insurance; permitting an employee to enroll a new dependent acquired by birth, adoption, or marriage; making it easier for people to maintain insurance coverage while changing jobs; and helping businesses employing fewer than 50 workers to obtain group insurance plans.

- The Act is codified in various sections of 18 USCA, 26 USCA, 29 USCA, and 42 USCA. — Abbr. HIPAA. [Cases: Health C>196, 257; Insurance C>1518, 2460; Labor and Employment C>424.]

health law. (18c) A statute, ordinance, or code that prescribes sanitary standards and regulations for the purpose of promoting and preserving the community's health. [Cases: Health C>351, 355.]

health-maintenance organization. (1973) A group of participating healthcare providers that furnish medical services to enrolled members of a group health-insurance plan. — Abbr. HMO. Cf. managed-care organization; preferred-provider organization. [Cases: Health C>294; Insurance C>1252.]

health officer. A government official charged with executing and enforcing health laws.

- The powers of a health officer (such as the Surgeon General) are regulated by law. [Cases: Health C>361.]

hearing. (13c) 1. A judicial session, usu. open to the public, held for the purpose of deciding issues of fact or of law, sometimes with witnesses testifying. The court held a hearing on the admissibility of DNA evidence in the murder case. 2. Administrative law. Any setting in which an affected person presents arguments to a decision-maker . [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure C>469.] 3. In legislative practice, any proceeding in which legislators or their designees receive testimony about legislation that might be enacted <the shooting victim spoke at the Senate's hearing on gun control>. See preliminary hearing. [Cases: States C>34.]

- English law. Oral argument.

adjudication hearing. (1947) 1. Administrative law.

- An agency proceeding in which a person's rights and duties are decided after notice and an opportunity to be heard. See procedural due process under due process. Cf. disposition hearing. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure C>469.] 2. In child-abuse and neglect proceedings, the trial stage at which the court hears the state's allegations and evidence and decides whether the state has the right to intervene on behalf of the child. [Cases: Infants C>203.] 3. In a juvenile-delinquency case, a hearing at which the court hears evidence of the charges and makes a finding of whether the charges are true or not true. Also termed adjudicatory hearing; adjudicatory proceeding.

- Certification hearing. See transfer hearing.

- Conformity hearing. See conformity hearing.

- Contested hearing. A hearing in which at least one of the parties has objections regarding one or more matters before the court.

- Continued-custody hearing. See shelter hearing.

- Custody hearing. (1935) Family law. A judicial examination of the facts relating to child custody, typically in a divorce or separation proceeding.

- Child-neglect and dependency matters are also often dealt with in custody hearings. — Also termed custody proceeding. [Cases: Child Custody C>500; Infants C>203.]

- Daubert hearing. See DAUBERT HEARING.

- Dependency hearing. See shelter hearing.

- Detention hearing. (1959) 1. Criminal law. A hearing to determine whether an accused should be released pending trial. See pretrial detention under detention. 2. Family law. A hearing held by a juvenile court to determine whether a juvenile accused of delinquent conduct should be detained. Continued in confinement, or released pending an adjudicatory hearing. Cf. adjudication hearing; disposition hearing. [Cases: Infants C>192, 203. 3. See shelter hearing.

- Discharge hearing. See DISCHARGE HEARING.

- Dispositional hearing. See disposition hearing.

- Disposition hearing. (1960) Family law. 1. In child-abuse and neglect proceedings, after an adjudication hearing at which the state proves its allegations, a hearing at which the court hears evidence and enters orders for the child's care, custody, and control. — Typically, the judge determines a plan for services aimed at reunifying or rehabilitating the family. 2. In a juvenile-delinquency case, after an adjudication hearing at which the state proves its case against the juvenile or after a juvenile's pleading true to the charges against him, a hearing at which the court determines what sanctions, if any, will be imposed on the juvenile. — At a disposition hearing, the court balances the best interests of the child against the need to sanction the child for his or her actions. If the juvenile is adjudicated a delinquent, the probation staff prepares a social history of the youth and his family and recommends a disposition. After reviewing the social history and various recommendations, the court enters a disposition. Among the possible juvenile sanctions are a warning, probation, restitution, counseling, or placement in a juvenile-detention facility. Probation is the most common sanction. — Also termed dispositional hearing. Cf. adjudication hearing. 3. See permanency hearing. [Cases: Infants C=203.]

evidentiary hearing. (1952) 1. A hearing at which evidence is presented, as opposed to a hearing at which only legal argument is presented. 2. See administrative proceeding.

exclusionary hearing. (1963) A pretrial hearing conducted to review and determine the admissibility of illegally obtained evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law C=394.6.]

fair hearing. (1831) A judicial or administrative hearing conducted in accordance with due process. [Cases: Constitutional Law C=3881, 4027.]

Fatico hearing. See Fatico hearing.

fitness hearing. See transfer hearing.

Franks hearing. See Franks hearing.

full adversary hearing. See adjudication hearing.

full hearing. (17c) 1. A hearing at which the parties are allowed notice of each other’s claims and are given ample opportunity to present their positions with evidence and argument. 2. See administrative proceeding.

Garcia hearing. See Garcia hearing.

earing de novo (de or di noh-voh). (18c) 1. A reviewing court’s decision of a matter anew, giving no deference to a lower court’s findings. [Cases: Appeal and Error C=892; Criminal Law C=1139; Federal Courts C=776.] 2. A new hearing of a matter, conducted as if the original hearing had not taken place.

independent-source hearing. Criminal procedure. A hearing to determine whether evidence was obtained illegally, and if so, whether the evidence is admissible. See independent-source rule. [Cases: Criminal Law C=394.6.]

Jackson-Denno hearing. See Jackson-Denno hearing.

Mapp hearing. See Mapp hearing.

neglect hearing. (1952) Family law. A judicial hearing involving alleged child abuse or some other situation in which a child has not been properly cared for by a parent or person legally responsible for the child’s care. • At issue is the civil culpability of the parent or responsible party and the possible loss of children into foster care or — in extreme cases — the termination of parental rights. [Cases: Infants C=203.]

omnibus hearing. (1969) Criminal procedure. A hearing designed to bring judicial oversight to a criminal case at an early stage to make certain that the case is being handled expeditiously and properly. • At an omnibus hearing, the court is primarily interested in ensuring that discovery is being conducted properly, that any necessary evidentiary hearings have been scheduled, and that all issues ripe for decision have been decided.

permanency hearing. (1832) Family law. Under the Adoption and Safe Families Act, a judicial proceeding to determine the future, permanent status of a child in foster care. • Under the Act, the term permanency hearing replaces the term disposition hearing. The permanency hearing must occur within 12 months of a child’s being placed in foster care. The purpose of the hearing is to determine the final direction of the case, whether that means going forward with termination proceedings or continuing plans for family reunification. — Also termed permanency-planning hearing. [Cases: Infants C=203.] preliminary hearing. See preliminary hearing.

preliminary protective hearing. See shelter hearing.

presentation hearing. See presentence hearing.

pretrial hearing. See pretrial conference.

probable-cause hearing. See shelter hearing.

public hearing. (18c) A hearing that, within reasonable limits, is open to anyone who wishes to observe. • Such a hearing is often characterized by the right to appear and present evidence in a case before an impartial tribunal. [Cases: Administrative Law and Procedure C=657.]

reaffirmation hearing. See reaffirmation hearing.

review hearing. Family law. After a finding of child abuse or neglect, a hearing to assess the progress in the case plan. See case plan. [Cases: Infants C=203, 231.]

revocation hearing. (1928) Criminal procedure. A hearing held to determine whether a parolee should be returned to prison for violating the terms of parole. [Cases: Pardon and Parole C=85.]

sentencing hearing. See presentence hearing.

shelter hearing. Family law. A hearing shortly after the state’s removal of a child for suspected abuse or neglect. • The hearing, generally held within 24 to 72 hours after the removal, is for the purpose of determining whether the state has adequate cause to maintain the children in protective care. — Also termed shelter-care hearing; continued-custody hearing; preliminary protective hearing; probable-cause hearing; detention hearing; dependency hearing. [Cases: Infants C=192, 203.]

suppression hearing. (1955) Criminal procedure. A pretrial hearing in which a criminal defendant seeks to prevent the introduction of evidence alleged to have been seized illegally. [Cases: Criminal Law C=394.6.]

termination-of-parental-rights hearing. Family law. A trial or court proceeding, usu. initiated by a state agency, that seeks to sever the legal ties between a parent and child, usu. so that the child can be adopted.
hearing examiner

transfer hearing. (1968) Criminal procedure. In a juvenile-court case, a hearing to determine whether the case should be transferred to adult criminal court so that the juvenile may be tried as an adult. • Every state, as well as the District of Columbia, has a transfer statute. The United States Supreme Court defined the due-process requirements for transfer hearings in Kent v. United States, 383 U.S. 541, 86 S.Ct. 1045 (1966). — Also termed certification hearing; waiver hearing; fitness hearing. See transfer statute; mandatory waiver; statutory exclusion. [Cases: Infants ⊂ 68.7.] trial-type hearing. See administrative proceeding.

uncontested hearing. A hearing in which either (1) the parties are in agreement as to all matters before the court, or (2) one of the parties has failed to appear despite notice.

unfair hearing. (1915) A hearing that is not conducted in accordance with due process, as when the defendant is denied the opportunity to prepare or consult with counsel. [Cases: Constitutional Law ⊂ 3879, 3886.] waiver hearing. See waide hearing.

hearing officer. 1. administrative-law judge. 2. See judicial officer (3) under officer (1).

hearsay. (16c) 1. Traditionally, testimony that is given by a witness who relates not what he or she knows personally, but what others have said, and that is therefore dependent on the credibility of someone other than the witness. • Such testimony is generally inadmissible under the rules of evidence. 2. In federal law, a statement (either a verbal assertion or nonverbal assertive conduct), other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted. Fed. R. Evid. 801(c). — Also termed hearsay evidence; secondhand evidence. Cf. original evidence under evidence. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊂ 419; Evidence ⊂ 314–324.]

double hearsay. (1921) A hearsay statement that contains further hearsay statements within it, none of which is admissible unless exceptions to the rule against hearsay can be applied to each level <the double hearsay was the report's statement that Amy had heard Joe admit running the red light>. Fed. R. Evid. 805. — Also termed multiple hearsay; hearsay within hearsay. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊂ 419(13); Evidence ⊂ 314–324.]

hearsay exception. Any of several deviations from the hearsay rule, allowing the admission of otherwise inadmissible statements because the circumstances surrounding the statements provide a basis for considering the statements reliable. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊂ 419(10); Evidence ⊂ 314.]

tender-years hearsay exception. A hearsay exception for an out-of-court statement by a child ten years of age or younger, usu. describing an act of physical or sexual abuse, when the child is unavailable to testify and the court determines that the time, content, and circumstances of the statement make it reliable. [Cases: Infants ⊂ 20.]

hearsay rule. (1896) The rule that no assertion offered as testimony can be received unless it is or has been open to test by cross-examination or an opportunity for cross-examination, except as provided otherwise by the rules of evidence, by court rules, or by statute.

- The chief reasons for the rule are that out-of-court statements amounting to hearsay are not made under oath and are not subject to cross-examination. Fed. R. Evid. 802. Rule 803 provides 23 explicit exceptions to the hearsay rule, regardless of whether the out-of-court declarant is available to testify, and Rule 804 provides five more exceptions for situations in which the declarant is unavailable to testify. [Cases: Criminal Law ⊂ 419; Evidence ⊂ 314–324.]

"[The great hearsay rule . . . is a fundamental rule of safety, but one overenforced and abused, — the spoiled child of the family, — proudest scion of our jury-trial rules of evidence, but so petted and indulged that it has become a nuisance and an obstruction to speedy and efficient trials." John H. Wigmore, A Students' Textbook of the Law of Evidence 238 (1935).

hearsay within hearsay. See double hearsay under hearsay.

heartbalm statute. A state law that abolishes the rights of action for monetary damages as solace for the emotional trauma occasioned by a loss of love and relationship. • The abolished rights of action include alienation of affections, breach of promise to marry, criminal conversation, and seduction of a person over the legal age of consent. Many states today have enacted heartbalm statutes primarily because of the highly speculative nature of the injury and the potential for abusive prosecution, as well as the difficulties of determining the cause of a loss. The terminology in this field is somewhat confusing, since a heartbalm statute abolishes lawsuits that were known as heartbalm suits; some scholars therefore call the abolitionary statutes anti-heartbalm statutes. But the prevailing term is heartbalm statute. — Also written heart-baln statute. — Also termed heartbaln act; anti-heartbaln statute; anti-heartbalm act. [Cases: Breach of Marriage Promise ⊂ 14; Husband and Wife ⊂ 323, 341; Seduction ⊂ 3.]

"Under the English common law, a broken engagement might be followed by a lawsuit for breach of promise to marry . . . . [T]he action came to look more like a tort action, in which damages might be given for the injury to the plaintiff's feelings, health and reputation and for expenses such as costs incurred in preparing for a wedding. Widespread criticism of the suit for breach of promise to marry (as well as related tort actions including seduction and alienation of affections) led to the passage of 'heart balm' statutes

hedagium (ha-day-jee-am), n. [Law Latin] Hist. A toll or custom due at a wharf for landing goods. • The Crown exempted particular persons and societies from this toll.

hedge, vb. (17c) To use two compensating or offsetting transactions to ensure a position of breaking even; esp., to make advance arrangements to safeguard oneself from loss on an investment, speculation, or bet, as when a buyer of commodities insures against unfavorable price changes by buying in advance at a fixed rate for later delivery. [Cases: Commodity Futures Trading Regulation C-10] — hedging, n.

hedgebung. See haybote.

hedge fund. (1967) A specialized investment group — usu. organized as a limited partnership or offshore investment company — that offers the possibility of high returns through risky techniques such as selling short or buying derivatives. • Most hedge funds are not registered with the SEC and are therefore restricted in marketing their services to the public.

hedonic damages. See damages.

hedonic damages. See hedonic damages under damages.

hedonistic utilitarianism. See utilitarianism.

heedlessness. See presumption.

heedlessness, n. (16c) The quality of being thoughtless and inconsiderate; esp., conduct involving the disregard of others’ rights or safety. • Heedlessness is often construed to involve the same degree of fault as recklessness. See recklessness. — heedless, adj.

hegemonism (hi-jem-ə-niz-əm), (19c) 1. A philosophical position advocating hegemony. 2. All forms of political extension by means of hegemony.

hegemony (hi-jem-ə-nē), n. (16c) 1. Influence, authority, or supremacy over others <the hegemony of capitalism>. 2. The striving for leadership or predominant authority of one state of a confederation or union over the others; political domination <the former Soviet Union’s hegemony over Eastern Europe>. — hegemonic (hej-ə-mə-nik), adj.

heightened scrutiny. See intermediate scrutiny.

heinous (hay-nēz), adj. (14c) Of a crime or its perpetrator shockingly atrocious or odious. [Cases: Sentencing and Punishment C28, 1684.] — heinously, adv.

heir (air). (13c) 1. A person who, under the laws of intestacy, is entitled to receive an intestate decedent’s property. • Also termed legal heir; heir at law; lawful heir; heir general; legitimate heir. Cf. ancestor. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C20–43; Wills C505.]

“Laymen — and sometimes first-year law students taking exams — wrongly assume that one who receives real property by will is an heir. Technically, the word ‘heir’ is reserved for one who receives real property by action of the laws of intestacy, which operate today only in the absence of a valid will.” Thomas F. Bergin & Paul C. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests n.32 (2d ed. 1984).

2. Loosely (in common-law jurisdictions), a person who inherits real or personal property, whether by will or by intestate succession. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C20–43; Wills C505.]

3. Popularly, a person who has inherited or is in line to inherit great wealth.

4. Civil law. A person who succeeds to the rights and occupies the place of, or is entitled to succeed to the estate of, a decedent, whether by an act of the decedent or by operation of law. • The term heir under the civil law has a more expansive meaning than under the common law.

afterborn heir. (18c) One born after the death of an intestate from whom the heir is entitled to inherit. See afterborn child under child. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C7] apparent heir. See heir apparent.

beneficiary heir (ben-ə-fish-ee-ər-ee). Civil law. An heir who accepts an inheritance but whose liability for estate debts is limited to the value of the inheritance. • Also termed heir beneficiary. See benefit of inventory. Cf. unconditional heir. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C119(2).] bodily heir. See heir of the body.

coheir (koh-ər). One of two or more persons to whom an inheritance descends. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C69, 72, 81, 82.]

collateral heir. (17c) One who is neither a direct descendant nor an ancestor of the decedent, but whose kinship is through a collateral line, such as a brother, sister, uncle, aunt, nephew, niece, or cousin. Cf. lineal heir. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C32, 37.]

hearth money. Hist. 1. A tax of two shillings levied on every fireplace in England (14 Car. 2, ch. 10). • This extremely unpopular tax was enacted in 1662 during the reign of Charles II and abolished in 1688. 2. Peterence. — Also termed (in sense 1) chimney money.

heat of passion. (bef. 12c) Rage, terror, or furious hatred suddenly aroused by some immediate provocation, usu. another person’s words or actions. • At common law, the heat of passion could serve as a mitigating circumstance that would reduce a murder charge to manslaughter. • Also termed sudden heat of passion; sudden heat; sudden passion; hot blood; sudden heat and passion; furor brevis. Cf. cold blood; cool blood. [Cases: Homicide C666.]

"To constitute the heat of passion included in this requirement it is not necessary for the passion to be so extreme that the slayer does not know what he is doing at the time; but it must be so extreme that for the moment his action is being directed by passion rather than by reason.” Rollin M. Perkins & Ronald N. Boyce, Criminal Law 99 (3d ed. 1982).

hegemony (hi-jem-ə-nee), n. 1. The quality of being thoughtless and inconsiderate; esp., conduct involving the disregard of others’ rights or safety. • Heedlessness is often construed to involve the same degree of fault as recklessness. See recklessness. — heedless, adj.
heir

expectant heir. (17c) An heir who has a reversionary or future interest in property, or a chance of succeeding to it. — Also termed heir expectant. See REVERSION (1); REMAINDER (1). Cf. prospective heir. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C==68.]

"The reader should be aware that one never has an ‘heir’ until one is dead; one merely has an ‘heir expectant’ . . . Thus, to say that an heir ‘owns’ anything is conceptually difficult. But . . . some unborn heirs may be entitled to the protection of the courts, and thus be said to have estates." Thomas F. Bergin & Paul G. Haskell, Preface to Estates in Land and Future Interests 26 n.13 (2d ed. 1984).

fideicommissary heir (fi-dee-i-kom-i-sair-ee). Roman & civil law. A beneficiary of property who succeeds the direct (original) heir. See FIDEICOMMISSUM.

fiduciary heir. Roman & civil law. An heir who takes property as a trustee on behalf of a person who is not eligible to receive the property immediately. See FIDEICOMMISSUM.

forced heir. Civil law. (1813) A person whom the testator or donor cannot disinherit because the law reserves part of the estate for that person. • In Louisiana, only descendants are forced heirs. I.a. Civ. Code art. 1493. See LEGITIME. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C==23.]

heir apparent. (14c) An heir who is certain to inherit unless he or she dies first or is excluded by a valid will. — Also termed apparent heir. Cf. heir presumptive. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C==68.]

"Heirs apparent are such, whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided they outlive the ancestor, as the eldest son or his issue, who must by the course of the common law be heirs to the father whenever he happens to die." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England 208 (1766).

heir beneficiary. See beneficiary heir.

heir by adoption. A person who has been adopted by (and thus has become an heir to) the deceased. • By statute in most jurisdictions, an adopted child has the same right of succession to intestate property as a biological child unless the deceased clearly expresses a contrary intention. Jurisdictions differ on whether an adopted child may also inherit from his or her biological parents or family. The clear majority view, however, is that upon adoption, a complete severance of rights and obligations occurs and the child forfeits inheritance from all biological relatives.

heir by custom. Hist. In England, a person whose right of inheritance depends on a particular and local custom, such as gavelkind and borough English. See GAVELKIND; BOROUGH ENGLISH.

heir by devise. (1842) One to whom lands are given by will.

heir conventional. Civil law. One who takes a succession because of a contract or settlement entitling him or her to it.

heir expectant. See expectant heir.

heir in tail. See heir special.

heir male. Hist. The nearest male blood-relation of a decedent.

heir of the blood. (16c) An heir who succeeds to an estate because of consanguinity with the decedent, in either the ascending or descending line.

heir of the body. Archaic. A lineal descendant of the decedent, excluding a surviving spouse, adopted children, and collateral relations. • The term of art heirs of the body was formerly used to create a fee tail <A conveys Blackacre to B and the heirs of his body>. — Also termed bodily heir. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C==17, 21.]

heir presumptive. (17c) An heir who will inherit if the potential intestate dies immediately, but who may be excluded if another, more closely related heir is born. — Also termed presumptive heir. Cf. heir apparent. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C==68.]

heirs and assigns. (16c) A term of art formerly required to create a fee simple <A conveys Blackacre to B and his heirs and assigns>.

heir special. Hist. An heir who receives property according to the nature of the estate held in fee tail. • Heirs special were said to receive property per formam doni ("by the form of the gift"). — Also termed heir in tail. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C==29.]

instituted heir. See testamentary heir.

irregular heir. Hist. Louisiana law. A person or entity who has a statutory right to take property from an estate in default of the testamentary or legal heirs. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C==74.]

joint heir. (16c) 1. A coheiress. 2. A person who is or will be an heir to both of two designated persons at the death of the survivor of them, the word joint being here applied to the ancestors rather than the heirs.

known heir. (16c) An heir who is present to claim an inheritance, the extent of which depends on there being no closer relative.

laughing heir. (1943) Slang. An heir distant enough to feel no grief when a relative dies and leaves an inheritance (generally viewed as a windfall) to the heir.

lineal heir. (16c) A person who is either an ancestor or a descendant of the decedent, such as a parent or a child. Cf. collateral heir. [Cases: Descent and Distribution C==20.]

natural heir. (16c) An heir by consanguinity as distinguished from an heir by adoption or a statutory heir (such as a person's spouse). [Cases: Descent and Distribution C==47(2).]

heirloom. (15c) 1. An item of personal property that by local custom, contrary to the usual legal rule, descends to the heir along with the inheritance, instead of passing to the executor or administrator of the last owner. • Traditional examples are an ancestor's coat of arms, family portraits, title deeds, and keys. Blackstone gave a false etymology that many have copied: "The termination, loom, is of Saxon origin; in which language it signifies a limb or member; so that an heirloom is nothing else, but a limb or member of the inheritance." 2 William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Law of England 427 (1766). In fact, loom derives from Old English geloma "utensil," and loom meant "implement, tool." 2. Popularity, a treasured possession of great sentimental value passed down through generations within a family.

"Heir-looms, strictly so called, are now very seldom to be met with. They may be defined to be such personal chattels as go, by force of a special custom, to the heir, along with the inheritance, and not to the executor or administrator of the last owner. The owner of an heir-loom cannot by his will bequeath the heir-loom, if he leave the land to descend to his heir; for in such a case the force of custom will prevail over the bequest, which, not coming into operation until after the decease of the owner, is too late to supersede the custom. ... In popular language the term 'heir-loom' is generally applied to plate, pictures or articles of property which have been assigned by deed of settlement or bequeathed by will to trustees, in trust to permit the same to be used and enjoyed by the persons for the time being in possession, under the settlement or will, of the mansion-house in which the articles may be placed." Joshua Williams, Principles of the Law of Personal Property 13-14 (11th ed. 1881).

incorporeal heredament (in-kor-por-ee-al). An intangible right in land, such as an easement. • The various types at common law were advowsons, annuities, commons, dignities, franchises, offices, pensions, rents, tithes, and ways.

"There are two quite distinct classes of incorporeal heredaments: 1. Those which may ripen into corporeal heredaments. Thus a grant to A for life with remainder to B in fee simple gave B an incorporeal heredament which becomes corporeal after A's death. 2. Those which can never become corporeal heredaments but are merely rights over the land of another, e.g., rentcharges." Robert E. Megarry & M. P. Thompson, A Manual of the Law of Real Property 361 (6th ed. 1993).
